Archaeologist suce Lightning

TAMPA - An amateur archaeologist arrested while digging for artifacts near the construction sits of a downtown hockey arena has sued a Tampe Bay Lightning affiliate, accusing the company of malicious prosecution.

Mark E. Melvin, 36, was arrested last May and charged with felony trespens on a construction site after security officers guarding the site ordered him to leave.

In his lewestit filed Priday, Melvin alleges Tampa Bay Lightning attorney Carter McCain lied to poince when he told them the property along the area where Melvin was digging belonged to the Lightning and that an agreement Melvin had with city was invalid.

Prosecutors later decided not to pursue charges against him, saying in a letter "the accused is in possession of documents that would lead a reasonable person to believe he had consent to be on the property."

McCain declined comment on the suit.

The arena site contained several graves of soldiers believed to date back to the early 1800s when much of downtown Tampa was occupied by Fort Brooks, a U.S. military encampment.

Drink wine, save manatees

FORT MYERS — Helping the plight of the endangered manatee may be just a corkscrew away by drinking wines with a social conscience.

Since the first of the month, dosene of wine stores along Florida's west coast have been stocking Manatee Chardonnay and Manatee Sauvignon — wines that pledge 10 percent of all sales to groups that help the gentle see cows.

The label is the brainchild of Gary and Wendi Subers, a Fort Myers couple who started Mother Earth Vineyard to market the

"We're boaters and we just saw a little niche in the market," Wendi Subers said. "It's kind of a souvenir wine. It's only available in Florida."

Actually, it's not Florida-grown. The wine is made and bottled by a California vintner in the Pass Robles region south of San Francisco, an area known for its cabernets.

What's next for Mother Earth Vineyards? If all goes well, perhaps a Florida panther meriot or a sea turtle sauvignon blanc, Subers said.

Florida case compared to O.J.s

SHALIMAR — A woman convicted of murdering her bushend avoided the electric chair after her lawyer argued that California len't seeking the death penalty against O.J. Simpson for a worse crime.

Myra Valvada was convicted last month of shooting Valvada to death on Aug. 30, 1986, at their home in Port-Walton Beach. Jurors recommended against a death sentence, and a judge sentenced her Friday to life in prison.

Valvada, 45, was accused of killing her 44-year-old husband in part to collect a $750,000 insurance policy and more than $1

Her lawyer, Larry Simpson, brought up O.J. Simpson, who is on trial in the slayings of his ex-wife and a friend. "The state of California has waived the death penalty," the lawyer told jurors. "Burely this crime does not come anywhere close" to those O.J. Simpson is on trial for.

He also argued for mercy on grounds that she, had no criminal record, was suffering from a mental illness at the time of the crime and was a productive member of acciety.

But don't expect to find their addresses or phone numbers.

That information was omitted from the manual which went on sale Friday because so many of the legislators change locations of their district offices, making it difficult to keep records up to date.

"Many people were operating on the theory that all of the information was current, which it was not," said John Phelps. the House clerk who supervises publication of the manual. "That was the sole reason for doing it."

"That's a shame. It's hard enough for our constituents to find us," said Rep. Tracy Stafford, D-Wilton Manors, who is sponsoring a bill to put some legislative data on the internet computer network.

About 7,000 copies of the $5 manual were printed.

Addresses and phone numbers for legislators are available in at least two other directories published by Associated Industries of Florida and the Florida Chamber of Commerce, two of the state's lergest business groups.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

200 years before Martin Luther King Fort Mose was first free black community in US

ST. AUGUSTINE - No ruins remain from Fort Mose, its buildings and grounds long since reclaimed by a sait marsh.

But the fort stands as the first chapter in the history of free blacks in America some 200 years before the Nev. Martin Luther King marched for civil rights in the streets of St. Augustine, the nation's oldest city.

Fort Mose was the first legally sanctioned community of former black slaves in America. The slaves, who escaped from British-controlled Georgia and the Carolinas, faced great hardships to make their way to freedom in Spanish-controlled

The site of the 1750s-era fort was dedicated earlier this month as a National Historic Landmark, and state Rep. Also J. Reddick, D-Orlando, hopes it will help draw blacks to visit St. Augustine.

"I think if more blacks were aware of the black history of St. Augustine, it could become the tourist more for Florida for black history," says Reddick, former chairman of the House Tourism and Economic Development Committee.

Fort Mose was occupied from 1738-1740 and from 1752-1763. Historians estimate that it once was a thriving community with about 100 men, women and children.

"Fort Mose stands as a unique monument to the courageous African Americans who risked their lives for freedom," says Fran Mainella, director of Florida's Recreational and Park Services. and Park Services.

Today, all that remains of Fort Mose is three small tree-covered islands in the middle of a salt marsh north of St.

Augustine.
The site was first verified during a limited two-day excavation in 1971. In 1987.

Kathleen Deagan, a University of Florida anthropology professor, and 14 students conducted a more extensive dig and found more than 1,000 artifacts that date hack to

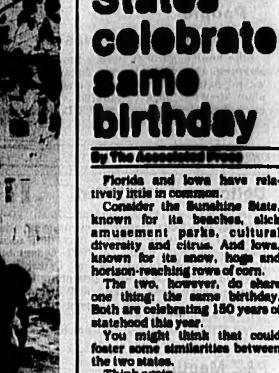

The site is now a state-owned conserva-tion area acquired in the late 1980s.

During the excavation, Ms. Deagan said, serial photographs and computer-generated contour maps indicated where the walts of the fort stood.

The fort had earthen walls, spiled with yucca plants. It was built on a field in high ground, but dredge-and-fill operations since have made the area prone to tidal flooding. Ma. Deagan suid.

"The freed men built the cettlement, a walled fort and shelters described by the Spaniards as resembling thatched Indian huts," author June Landers wrote in her book, "Fort Mose, Gracia Real de Santa Teresa de Mose: A Free Black Town in Spanish Colonial Florida."

Baid eagles continue comeback

LAKELAND — A strong public education campaign and the banning of harmful pesticides has helped the bald eagle stage a remarkable comeback in Florida.

The state now has at least 2.450 of the broad-winged symbols of the nation, the most of any state outside Alaska. That's almost 10 times the number of eagles found in the first eagle survey in 1975. And the future is looking promising as wells there was a 40 percent increase in the number of chicks hatched in Florida last year.

"That not only exceeded our expectations, but even exceeded our most eptimistic hopes," said Don Wood, endangered species coordinator for the state Game and Fresh Water Fish Com-

In 1994, 951 eagles were hatched — up from 879 in 1993 and double the number of hat-chlings in 1989. There are now more segles in the Florida skies than in the past three decades.

Polk and Osceola counties are the best places to see bald eagles. Polk has 88 nesting pairs and 110 baby sagles, according to Game and Fish statistics. Occools bosets 90 neeting pairs and 104 eaglets.

which numbered in the tens of thousands in the 1800s, sank to a low of 417 pairs in 1963.
State officials credit a campaign of public education and especially the banning of pesticides such as DDT with the recovery since then. DDT caused many wild birds to produce eggs with extremely thin shells. The number of birds has been slowly increasing since the chemical was banned in 1975. In addition, the passage of the Endangered Species Act, which banned hunting of eagles nationwide, helped enable the birds to get on the path to recovery, many wildlife officials

Why do mothers kill their kids?

ORLANDO - Four times in six months, an area mother has turned a gun on her children, apparently shooting from a dis-torted sense of love.

Ten people are dead and three wounded, two permanently.

Some experts any a mother's love can be skewed by personality disorders, with violence triggered during some peak period of stress. Others say such women often are victime of abuse, suffering psychological traumas they relive in nightmares and flashbacks.

"The mother perceives that the children's world is as awful as her world," said Deborah Day. a clinical psychologist who has worked as a consultant with the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services and law enforcement on some of the recent Central Florida cases. "She is thinking: How could she kill herself and leave them?"

In the Oriendo incidents, three of the mothers then killed themselves; the fourth tried but was stopped.

An estimated 700 mothers kill their children each year, ac-cording to the Family Violence Research Project at the Universi-ty of Rhode Island. That's about half the 1,500 children killed on average each year by their parents or caretakers.

The issue has gained national attention since Busan Smith pushed a car containing her two small sons into a South Carolina lake in October. Still, she swore she loved them. Moma who murder are nothing new, notes Daniel Maler-Katkin. dean of criminology at Florida State University.

The ascrifice and slaying of children were common in antiquity and continued through the Renaissance, Majer-Katkin anid.

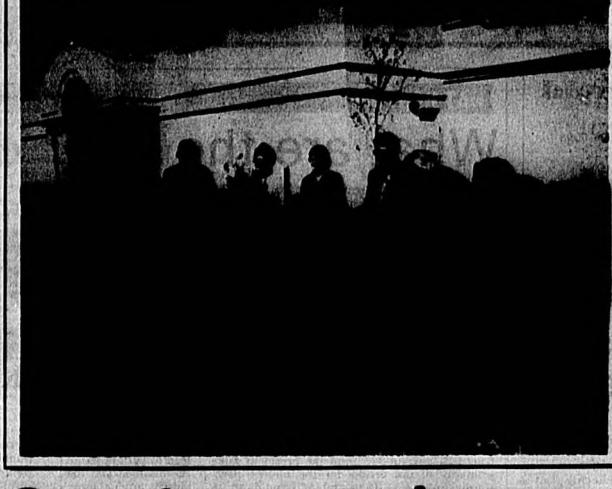

"In general, I think you'll find that women are much less criminal than men, and women are much less violent than men, said Maier-Katkin. "But there is one category that women predominate, and that is the murder of intimates - husbands, boyfriends, children." Nearly 80 percent of the homicides committed by women involve intimates, according to a report to be published in May by Maler-Katkin and Penn State researchers Robbin Ogle and Thomas Bernard.

Two of the Orlando-area mothers complained of financial or emotional problems before shooting their children.

Dr. Carry Kubiak, chief of psychiatric services at Tallahassee Memorial Hospital, says mothers often have experienced physical, sexual or emotional abuse. Thoughts of these incidents may overwhelm them, much the way some Vietnam War veterana continually experience the killing fields of Boutheast Asia, he said.

"Post traumatic stress disorder was first used as a diagnosis of soldiers coming back from Vietnam." Kubiak said. "It's typified by nightmares, fiashbacks. daydreaming and a tendency to re-live those experiences that have pushed these people to the

Cocaine murderers Winning a war of attrition with killers

The murderous violence of the Colombian cocaine cartele has subsided since its peak in this country more than a dozen years atili at work with local police investigators wrapping up criminal cases against the infumous cocaine killers of the early 1980s, investigating more recent tracing the movements of the new breed of sicarios — cartel hit men — from Miami to Queens to

Houston and Los Angeles. To combat the sicarios, federal agents from the Drug Enforce-ment Administration and other agencies in key cities banded together with local homicide investigators in the equivalent of a modern-day posse. The network of teams was better suited to deal with the elusive sicarios who would duck into town for a killing, then fly off quickly to Queens in New York City or back to Colombia.

The police called their official drug posse REDRUM — murder spelled backward.

The teams, especially in Miami and New York City, have chalked up an impressive list of murder arrests, convictions and foiled death plots. And those successful methods are now being turned to new assaults on inner-city drug violence across the country.

"We're on the phone with Mismi almost daily," said New York City police Egt. Buck Perits of one REDRUM unit. "It seems as if when someone they're looking for isn't in Floride, they're up here."

Houston, another U.S. city, most connected with cartel operations, has become known more as a distribution center.

Local homicide detectives, armed with federal help, gradu-ally spread a net to pull in some of the most notorious killers in this hemisphere - usually caught in Miami or New York.

Notorious Cali Cartel hitman Gendhi Gusman was snared in Dade County in 1990. Medellin cartel hitman Dandeny Munos Mosquera, suspected of killing dozens of Colombian police, judges and public officials, was captured in 1991 in New York. A Colombian teen-ager accused of killing a crusading Cuban American journalist in New York was arrested in Dade County in

And the lengthy investigation against notorious cocaine god-mother Griselda Blanco resulted in three first-degree murder charges late last year and a trial scheduled in Miami this year.

Valentine's Day message

Many of our readers today and tomorrow will probably scramble to find a suitable Valentine's Day gift for a loved one. Consider please, the gift of your time and self.

Candy and flowers are wonderful, but a sweet thought captured on paper or a colorful, hand drawn bouquet may be just as appreciated by someone you care about. The words written in a carefully chosen greeting card are often cherished, but have you ever tried to write down your own feelings and present them, a true gift from the heart? And if you've been remiss about spending time with your family, perhaps burdened with business pressures, money woes or a vastly accelerated society that will leave you behind if you slow your run around the wheel in the maze, well, slow down anyway.

The greatest wealth you can earn, the finest accolades you can have bestowed upon you. the most important person you can be is as a loved one and one who loves.

Which is the true message of Valentine's Day tomorrow.

LETTER

Losing our rights

I read with alarm Nat Hentoff's article, "Say Goodbye to Fourth Amendment." In a country that prides itself on its constitutional protections, I find it strange that any freedom-loving America would even consider such a draconian measure. If such a proposal should ever pass. America will be taking a major step in the direction of becoming a police state.

Allowing any law enforcement agency this type of freedom is extremely dangerous. History has shown all too convincingly that to allow police departments to search and seize at will on the e that they will not overstep their authority is naive. All one needs do to prove this point is to look at Nazi Germany and Stalinist Russia as

History has shown that civilization has a propensity for repeating its past mistakes. Americans should not be asking themselves the question of could this happen here, but should understand that it will happen here if left unchecked.

For too long it has been the illegal activities of the few that have dictated how the majority should live. Granted crime is extremely serious in our country, but I'd rather see some criminals escape the hand of justice, rather than give up this all important constitutional protection. It's bad enough that we have to go to bed in this country worrying about our homes being invaded by criminals without having to also worry about an oversealous police force doing the same thing. Not only will this allow for abuse by the police, but it will ultimately lead to it being used as a tool to intimidate and harass some members of society.

There is a warning that I read once that could easily apply to this proposal. "All forms of government destroy themselves by carrying their basic principle to excess. The democracies become too free in politics, in economics, in morals, even in literature and art, until at last even the puppy dogs in our homes rise up on their hind legs and demand their rights. Disorder grows to such a point that a society will then abandon all its liberty to anyone who can restore order." This warning was written by the fourth century philosopher Plato. I find his analysis no less true today than it was 2,400 years ago.

What are the poor doing tonight?

It was during the Great Depression. I was 11 and, already immersed in jazz, I'd amuggled the small family radio into my bedroom and under the covers so I could hear the jazz remotes on the networks. From Chicago that night, Fats Waller was playing the plush Palmer Room. The announcer described the shining audience—esting and drinking with gusto.

Then Fats came to the microphone. With the merry sounds in the background, he said, "I wonder what the poor people are doing tonight."

I got to know him later, and I'm sure that message was for anyone poor who still had a radio and might be listening. At least somebody was thinking of them. Back in Boston, my family was poor, and a few months later, the installment-plan man came to take our radio.

I've been thinking of that voice of warmth in the darkness as the waves of "reform" batter more and more of the poor around the country. Welfare reform. Health care reform. The Newt Gingrich "revolution." And the president talks primarily of tax breaks for the middle class. Hardly anyone — Democrat or Republican — speaks for the poor anymore. And Fats Waller has loss been some. has long been gone.

U.S. can't hide from the world

A latent congressional majority stands poised to break America's 50-year-old contract with the world. Because its membership is split between the two parties, its aim still exceeds its reach. But as the president learned when he was forced to abandon his $40 billion Mexican bailout scheme, it is a rapidly coalescing political force. The next 12 months could determine whether it will become the dominant one in Washington.

The easy, first reaction to the Mexican facedown was that it was another humiliating rebuff for Bill Clinton, but it was much more far-reaching than that. The new Republican legions treated their leaders with the same cool diedain that marked the Democrate' response to their president's piece.

The opportunities for further assaults on internationalism will multiply in the near future. The House Republicans' "Contract With America" includes a national security section that all but rules out multilateral military operations such as recent ones in Somalia and Haiti. Their right-wing populism is mirrored by liberal Democrata' antipathy for is mirrored by liberal Democrats' antipathy for international trade agreements such as the North American Pres Trade Agreement and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The instinct behind this surge of neo-isolationism is grounded in the nation's long-deferred problems, from individual safety to spratling national debt. With the collapse of the flowlet Union, these is no longer a condition the Soviet Union, there is no longer a credible external threat to national security. In a land racked by deep divisions on most leaves, there is virtual unanimity behind the idea that we can no longer afford to play world policeman. Former clients have become super-efficient economic competitors. Nations whose very existence once depended upon America's security guarantee seem to go out of their way to denigrate our motives and challenge our

Put all that together, and it is easy to understand why so many citizens are demanding that the United States pull back from overseas commitments and concentrate on domestic problems. They believe that enough is enough. It's time to come home.

The trouble is that the "home" to which so many of us yearn to return no longer exists. It has been almost a century since the U.S. could go its own way without doing severe damage to itself. We contributed to the severity of the Great Depression by trying to create an economic Fortress America. We helped ensure the inevitability, cost and duration of the Second World War by turning our back on collective security after World War I. We are now locked into a global economy in which we will either compete successfully or fall into lasting economic stagnation.

That last, simple point makes some people intensely angry. They detest the idea that our personal as well as national well-being depend heavily on how we interrelate with foreign nations and how well those nations do economically. If they had their way, there would be no Niesan automobile plants in Central Tennessee and no IBM plants in Japan.

We would ignore Mexico as a neighbor whose problems were of no relevance to our own prosperity. We'd buy and sell American and let the rest of the world go hang. Theirs is a fairy tale with no happy ending. Much of our sconomic growth is driven by exports. Much of our national debt is owned by foreigners. Much of our major industries' vitality rests on their role as international, rather than purely American enterprises. Every day well over a trillion dollars go gushing out from the U.S. financiai centers into the world's economy, where they mesh inextricably with yeas and marks and pescs. What they have called into willy-nilly existence is an international financial system that will either be brought under some form of multilateral regulatory control or which will destroy national sovereignty in fact if not in

On the other side, if we withdraw from acting with and within multilateral organizations such as the United Nations to deal with common security challenges, we will all but guarantee the creation of a world depressingly similar to that of the 1930s and the late 1940s. Such a world will eventually require that we act unilaterally and at high cost to contain threats that we might have blocked, at lower cost by acting in concert with others when they first arose.

These and similar arrangements are treated as so much background static by millions of Americans.

Selling prudence to selfish public

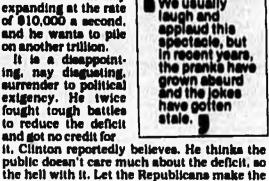

It's circus time in Washington once again. Actually, it's budget time, but it amounts to much the same thing. The barkers loudly promise more than they can deliver and the clowns do cartwheels and act out comedic

We usually laugh and applaud this speciacle, but in recent years, the pranks have grown absurd and the jokes have gotten stale. The farce just isn't funny anymore.

The show starts when the president submits his annual budget proposal to Congress. Bill Clinton just dispatched a plan that calls for yearly deficits of $200 billion for the rest of the decade. We are staring at a $5 trillion national debt that is already of $10,000 a second. and he wants to pile on another trillion.

It is a disappointing, nay disgusting. surrender to political exigency. He twice fought tough battles to reduce the deficit and got no credit for tough calls.

What we need is leadership. What we got was gamesmanship.

In the past, the Republicans have talked the talk about deficit reduction but they've seldom done anything about it. Lately they've been content to chortle at Clinton's contor-tions, vowing to do better if only the public wised up enough to put them in charge. Well, they've got it. They've got the House, they've got the Senate, and with Clinton's fumble, they've got the ball. It is now or never. They must seize the issue, solve the problem and somehow sell the solution to a selfish and disinterested public. If they can peddle parsimony in a time of deficit crisis, as Franklin Roosevelt did his spending programs in a time of depression, they could be the dominant party for the next half century.

It has to start with the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. Smoke and mirrors have fissled, statutes have failed, budget summits have flopped.

There is no other way. If the Democrats in the Senate succeed in thwarting the amendment, as seems likely, the Republicane should pound them with it in the 1996 elections. Bloody them as the big spending party that doesn't even want to balance the budget, then come back and try it again in the 105th Congress.

There is no other way. Oh. I know, they keep talking about discipline. They say all they need to balance the books is a little courage, a little spine .. and that's what I mean about the continuous farce. We've had no balanced budgets since 1969, and they still pretend all they need is a little discipline. What a hoot.

It's gotten to the point that the lawmakers don't even consider WHETHER the budget should be balanced. All they discuss the size of the anticipated deficit. Aside from the fools on the Hill, is there a person on the planet who has a molecule of hope left in their bones that the president and the Congress will somehow exhibit the discipline to balance the books without being coerced?

The arguments against the balanced budget amendment are many and some are reasonable. To live by our means would be painful. It might involve the courts in the budgetary process.

Another look at plutonium Rocky Flats cleanup 'toughest job in United States'

Associated Press Writer

DENVER - Anson Burlingame has taken to wearing a bright yellow button to remind everyone what the problem is at Rocky Flats.

"It's the plutonium, stupid," it

Not that there was any doubt. Rocky Flats - the nuclear bomb facility 16 miles northwest of Denver - remains the home of 14.2 tone of plutonium.

It is Burlingame's job to make Rocky Flats safe. And this, he said, is "the toughest job in the United States today. Trying to deal with Rocky Plats and the political complexities of this site are almost unbelievable."

He doesn't have much time. The former nuclear submarine commander was installed as president of EO&G Rocky Plats. operator of the plant, last March. EG&G since has decided not to renew its contract, and a new operator is expected to be in place by summer.

In the meantime, there's a lot to do. Radioactive and hazardous materials are being solidified and moved into a huge building - Building 371 - where it will remain, perhaps forever, on the 100 acres of the 384-acre complex that housed plutonium most of which has been used as a buffer zone, will be turned over to the public when it is deemed safe, said Mark Silverman, site manager for the U.S. Department of Energy, which owns the

As for the buildings in the production sone, they may be encapsulated with foam or concrete, "so they would be safe for the next 20,000 years, or until someone comes up with a better technology," said Silverman.

Rocky Flats was conceived by the Atomic Energy Comm-mission in 1961 at the beginning of the Cold War, when the Soviet Union became an emerging nuclear power. The plant began producing explosive devices for nuclear bombs in 1963.

The seeds of Rocky Plats' problems were sown from the

"We put all our resources, all our attention, to winning the Cold War and we didn't put enough attention, and money, into maintaining our facilities. and to dealing with the nuclear wastes that we were generating," Silverman said.

This country, he said, "never worried about what do you do about plutonium in the long term because you just kept recycling it into weapons. It was created in a reactor and was created a component, you gave it to the Department of Defence. and after it sat out there (in bombs) for awhile, you brought it back for recycling. It came right back to Rocky Plats. We'd recycle it and we kept making parts."

Then the musical chairs all came to a stop, and Rocky Flats found itself with tons of poten-tially deadly plutonium on-site.

The plant, operated by Rockwell International at the time, was shut down in 1969 after federal agents raided the complex and found the company had allowed toxic waste to leak from outdoor containers.

Army tests whether women can bulk up as well as

By ROBIN ESTRIM
Associated Press Writer

NATICK, Mass. - If a new Army project goes according to plan. Patricia Foster should be one of the guys by September.

She and about 40 other women will begin a weight training program next month designed to give them the strength to perform heavy military tasks typically assigned to men.

For those running the sixmonth project, it's not a question of whether women can become as strong as some men. but how long it takes before they

"My opinion is that women can be as strong as men if they are properly trained," said Foster, 27. "A muscle is a muscle and it should do the same regardless of gender."

The project - which is using civilians because there aren't enough female enlistees available — is part of Congress' $20 million Defense Women's Health Research Project to prepare women for battle.

Foster and the other women. who range in age from 18 to 32. will train for 11/2 hours. five days a week, for 24 weeks. They will lift weights, climb stairs, run hills and hike with packs weighing up to 75 pounds on their backs.

The reward for this grueling schedule — in addition to a well-conditioned body — is $500

"It's the kind of work soldiers would do in the field," said physiologist Peter Frykman. Frykman is running the project at the U.S. Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine with physiologist Everett Harman, who specializes in strength and conditioning.

Studies have shown that a woman's upper body strength is roughly 50 percent to 60 percent of a man's, while lower body strength is about 70 percent. Harman said. He believes women could be as strong as many men if they improved their strength by 50 percent.

If that is the case, then women should be able to perform as well in the military as the male soldiers - both in and out of combat, Harman said.

The issue, however, is as much about politics as physiolo-

House Speaker Newt Gingrich drew criticism last month for telling college atudents that women are not meant for battle.

"If combat means living in a ditch, females have biological problems staying in a ditch for 30 days because they get infec-tions and they don't have upper body strength," the Georgia Republican said. "I mean some do, but they're relatively rare.

"On the other hand, men are basically little piglets, you drop them in the ditch, they roll around in it, it doesn't matter, you know. These things are very real." Gingrich said.

Frykman and Harman agree that women typically weigh less and have more body fat than men, making it difficult for them to achieve the same strength. But they hope that with the proper training, women can come close.

For Foster, the program is a chance to get back into shape nine months after the birth of her baby, Victoria. At 8-foot-6 and 130 pounds, Foster says she's out of shape.

The program also presents Foster with a chance to prove to her husband and friends that she is as capable of strenuous physical activity as they are.

Seniors don't want careers to end with a loss

Heavyweight).

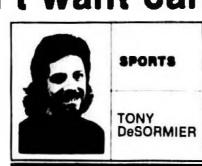

Once again, the heart-wrenching side of Florida high school athletics has raised its ugly head: Unless you win the state champtonship, you end your season with a loss. If you're a sentor, you end your career with a loss.

That hurts We go through this three times a year, in the fall, winter, and spring, as high school athletes pursuing their respective holy grails. And in every team sport but football, that pursuit takes the form of a singleclimination postseason tournament.

In an attempt to (A) give twice as many athletes a chance to experience postseason play or (B) reap the financial benefits of an additional tter of playoff games, the Florida High School Activities Association last year began letting district runners up into the state dance in basketball, baseball, and football. Except for that single variation, a loss in postseason play means the end of the season. Or a career.

Lake Howell High School sentor point guard Kelly Kohn recognized

When asked it she'd be willing to switch places with Ragueer. Kohnshook her head. "I'm not ready to end my high school career. I'm justsorry to see Laura's career finish. She's been a great opponent."

Lake Howell's opposition in the district championship game, the surprising Oyledo Lions (if for no other reason than their upset of top-seeded Mainland in Thursday's semifinals) are motivated to an extent by the desire not to end the season with a loss

We've got three seniors who have had great high school careers," said Oviedo coach Tom-Bieri, referring to Lisa Liljenquist. Stephanic Noiseux, and Holly Dunsworth, "They're not ready to end their careers just yet. And the rest of the girls don't want the next game to be their (the sentors') last game.

With the district runners-up now advancing to the subregionals, the Intense desire not to see the season come to an end makes the district tournament semilinal games almost more important than the championship game.

After his team had upset Mathland on Thursday, an elated Blert was asked how difficult it would be for his team to come back. and play to the same level the next night in the championship game.

"It doesn't really matter," said Bieri. "We'd love to win the district, but tonight, we accomplished what we set out to accomplish. Regardless of what happens (in the champtouship game), we'll be playing next Tuesday (in the subregionals). That's something no Oviedo girls' team has even done."

And extending the seniors' career by at least one more game

"When we played them in Ocala, we played a straight man-to-man and they killed us," said Merthie. "We figured out that their strategy was to hold the ball until the final 15 seconds of the shot clock and run one play for the score. Spring heralds garden work Yard waste excellent source of mulch

Spring is almost here and gardening activities will likely follow. Our landscapes have had a brief rest and so have we. Spring is the time to "clean" the outdoor living spaces and there is much to do — pruning, planting, mulching and raking etc. Pine needles, oak leaves, grass clippings and plant trimmings, once raked, will probably be stuffed in plastic bags and unfortunately placed on the curbaide to be collected and hauled away as yard trash. This is unfortunate for two reasons: plant material waste only adds to our over-burdened landfills and it's atmoly throwing away a free source of it's simply throwing away a free source of mulch.

Yard trash accounts for 20 to 50 percent of the waste dumped in landfills. Florida legislation now prohibits putting yard trash into lined landfills. Luckily, homeowners can avoid all the labor and costs involved in having the materials bagged and hauled off by keeping this valuble organic matter for use in the landscape. Simply recycle the materials on site as mulch. Pine needles, leaves and grass clippings can be used alone as a mulch or in combination. Of the three, pine needles are the best mulching material. They are attractive, not easily removed from beds by wind or rain, and don't "mot down" excessively.

Excessively.

Leaves can be used alone as a mulch. If you find that they are difficult to keep in place in windy locations, rake the leaves when they are wet after rain or irrigation. I have used oak leaves for many years in my perennial gardens without serious problems. Leaves are occasionally washed from beds during heavy rain showers, but commercial mulches are also prote to this problem. Leaves perform best as a mulching material when they are shredded and/or composted.

Grass clippings can also be used for mulch but are the least desirable mulching material — not the best choice for highly visible areas, but fine underneath shrubs. They are easily carried by the wind, decompose very rapidly, and pack down to form a mat which can exclude air and water from the root sone. They should be spread thinly over the ground, mixed with other mulching materials or better yet, left on the lawn during mowing. If you feel compelled to collect the clippings, then compost them with other yard waste.

Plant trimmings such as twigs and small branches should be ahredded with a mechanical chipper before they are used as a mulch in visible areas. If the clippings are small enough they can be placed beneath the shrubs from which they came.

Yard waste, available in our yards, is a very inexpensive source of mulch. However, some are reluctant to sue it so mulch because it is not considered as attractive as the more expensive commercial materials. This problem can be overcome by adding a thin layer of a more uniform mulch over the yard waste — for cosmetic purposes. Using yard waste mulch as an initial layer can save lots of money, especially when you save lots of money, especially when you consider that mulch should be two to four inches deep to be effective at controlling weeds and conserving moisture.

Mulch can be used around plants in beds or around individual trees and shrubs in a or around individual trees and shrubs in a lawn. Research reports from the University of Florida reveal that grass growing around trees can reduce the potential plant growth by as much as 50 percent. Eliminating grass from this area greatly reduces the competition for water and nutrients and increases the growth rate and health of trees and shrubs. When mulching individual trees in lawns, create a circle of mulch about 2 feet in diameter for each inch of trunk diameter. Increase the size of the mulched area as the Pull mulch 1 to 2 inches away from the stems and trunks of plants. The high moisture environment created by mulch increases the chances of stem and trunk rot which can result in plant death.

In addition to being useful around plants, mulch can be used as a ground cover for walks, trails, driveways, playgrounds and natural areas. It can be used to cover latural areas. It can be used to cover low-growing, tender plants to protect them from frost injury. Mulch can also be composted and used as a soil amendment for flower and vegetable gardens.

The amount of mulch to apply will depend on the texture and density of the mulch. Compost and many wood and bark mulches are composed of fine particles and should not be applied any deeper than 2-3 inches are composed of fine particles and should not be applied any deeper than 2-3 inches (after settling). Coarse-textured mulches such as pine needles and pine bark nuggets, which allow good air movement through them, can be maintained at a depth of 3 to 4 inches. Cypress mulch should be maintained at a depth of 2-3 inches since it appears to have a high water holding capacity which may reduce the amount of water reaching the plant root sone. Mulches composed solely of leaves or grass clippings should never exceed a 2-inch depth. These materials have flat surfaces and tend to mat together restricting water and air to plant roots. Since mulch will naturally decompose, you will need to replenish it periodically.

BELLEVUS, WASH. BAR PATRICIA: Thank you. It was one of my better ones, and

BEAR READERS: Tuesday is St. Valentine's Day, so don't say you weren't tipped off in time to come up with flowers, a Valentine, or a token of your affection for her - or him. But being lovable is a full-time job, so if you want to make yourself lastingly lovable, post this checklist where you can see it daily: LADIES: Never ask him if he loves you, but tell him often that loves you, but tell him often that you love him. Never criticize him in public. If you have a criticism. offer it in the spirit of helpfulness - never in anger or as a put-down. Clip newspaper and magazine articles that might olp him in his work perhaps a cartoon you think he'll enjoy. Don't bad-mouth his friends. Or worse yet, his family. (He can't pick his relatives.)

Every man needs a desk, a cupboard, a closet or nook to call his own. Don't try to "tidy it up." even though it's a mess of clutter and an eyesore. Never call him at work unless it's very important. If he cats (or drinks) too much, don't nag him about it. But do remind him in a loving wy that you wish he'd take you better care of himself because you want him to be around for a long, long time.

Develop some interests other than his. The more outside interests you have, the more fascinating he'll find you. Don't quiz him about where he's been. or who he saw when you weren't along. Never try to make him jealous. Never lie to him. Reserve the right to refuse to answer, but if you tell him something, be sure it's the truth.

Don't sulk. If something is bugging you, talk it out and clear the air. Surprise him occasionally. Leave a little love note on his pillow, with his lunch or taped to his bathroom mirror — it will warm his heart.

GENTLEMEN: Tell her you love her. If you like the way she looks, cooks, dresses, walks,

You can't compliment a woman too much. Never keep her waiting. If you know you're going to be late, call her and let her know.

Dig up a date for her lonely cousin. Remember your man-ners, and show your beloved the same respect and courtesy you give to those you don't know as well. Tell her she's prettier than her mother. In addition to remembering her on all traditional gift-giving occasions ther birthday, your anniversary, Christmas and Valentine's Day), surprise her with a small gift for no special reason. If she's flatchested, and a 38-D walks by, pretend not to notice. Walk up behind her and plant a kies on her neck for no reason at all. Remember, cleanliness is next to godliness, so when you feel turned on, turn on the shower and jump in! When you're at a party together, never leave her alone while you're off entertaining someone else. Tell her she is absolutely the most wonderful person in the world — and she'll believe you are!

Now - both of you - if you want to be loved - lovel it pays enormous dividends, and it won't cost you a dime.

Traditional medicines boon to Chinese entrepreneurs

By RENGE Sensey
Associated Press Writer

ZUNYI, China - As a young medic, Zena Chaowen studied the traditional medicines used to keep soldiers of the People's Liberation Army healthy. Now it's paying off in healthy profits.

Zeng's company, Changshou Changle (Long Life, Long Happiness), produces the successful Tonic Juice of Longevity and other traditional medicines. They include herbal treatment for male sterility.

His empire, built from the weeds of one of China's poorest places, is one example of how entrepreneurs thrive under reforms that encourage private enterprise to tap into China's huge market.

Zunyl is in Guishou, an inland southwestern province of rocky soil and steep hills covered with terraced rice paddies.

"The hills are very rich," said Zhang Zhiting, another former medic who also heads a successful herbal medicine company, the Shenqi Herb Co., which was Guishou's first private enterprise.

The Chinese have a soft spot for medicinal

The Chinese have a soft spot for medicinal wines, especially the highly secret blends like Zeng's that make enormous advertising claims.

Zeng's company claims its Longevity Juice — a secret blend of the root of Siberian Solomon's Seal and other natural ingredients — can wipe out age apots, strengthen the lungs and brain, improve the immune system, ward off sentility, increase excual appetite and more.

The claims have no basis in accesse, but rest squarely on the testimeny of these who sip the sweet, nary brew: the 74-year-old man who says his white hair turned black after drinking two bottles, the man who got his first decent night's aleep in seven years, the rheumatism surver whose pain essed.

Zeng. 47, greets visitors to his six-story headquarters with the gueto of a good salesman. Sales of the tonic alone totaled the equivalent of $6 million in 1993, producing a profit of about $1.2 million, he said. Sales reached that level during the first eight months of 1994, he added. Zeng started his company in 1985 when he left the army, its first product was the herbal treatment for male sterlity, now sold through

The headquarters trophy room is lined with photographs of foreigners who had children after taking Zeng's "sperm-producing" powder: a Saudi government minister, an Iranian technician, a diplomat from Cameroon. A few among thousands, mostly Chinese, Zeng says.

The company got help starting with a $1.3 million government loan. Since then it has expanded into 10 collectively owned enterprises.

Zhang Zhiting, another herbal medicine king, started out as a barefoot doctor, or traveling medic, during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution. In 1967, after working for a decade in a pharmacy, he started the Shenqi Herb Co. with about $900. The company's fixed seets are now valued at nearly $5 million, he said, "and not a fen (penny) from the government."

He did have some help. A joint venture partner. Lucky Chain Trading Co. of San Francisco, Invested $600,000.

Zhang's first product, a treatment for athlete's foot, accounted for almost three-quarters of the company's 636 million in sales last year.

"My life is very simple, I don't drink, I don't dance, I don't play making, and I spend only 180 year ($18) a month," said Zhang. Everything is invested in expension and product development, he said.

development, he said.

Shenqi, based near Quishou's capital of Quiyang, also makes products to treat coughs, fingernall fungue and hemorrhoids.

China's medicine industry has been growing by an average 17 percent annually for more than a decade. It produced $6.6 billion worth of pharmacouticals in 1983. pharmaceuticale in 1983.

Traditional medicine, commonly used throughout China, is a key part of the industry. The government recently announced that it was investing nearly 66 million in a traditional medicine research and treatment center in LOS ANGELES - Some came as carly as 7 a.m., settling in with picnic lunches as they waited for a gissues of the motorcade. Others paused for just a few minutes, grimaced and moved on.

"It's like going to a car race, and we're all anticipating a car said tourist Dick Hanson, who came with his wife, Kittle. "Maybe we're all sitting here waiting for something terrible to happen."

Approach cystitis

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've had frequent bouts of cystitle for several years, despite tulting all precautions. I fear the prolonged use of antibiotics as prescribed by my physician. I'm on the pill but recently read that the use of a condom during intercourse could possibly help my problem. Could I be reacting to my husband in this adverse way? Your good advice is a lifesaver for so many people and you spice it with such a wonderful sense of humor. How refreshing.

DEAR READER: Thanks for the compliment. However, it's derned difficult to be funny about something as annoying as cystitis, a common bladder infection in women that causes painful and frequent urination. often with blood in the urine.

Marriage is tough enough without the added burden of spoussi allergy. To relieve your concerns, you are not reacting adversely to your husband; rather, you may be developing cystitis as a result of the sexual act. While having intercourse, with or without a condom, you are the victim of becteria that are introduced into the bladder via the urethra, the short tube through which women expel urine.

The current dogma is that the bacteria, which populate the female's external genitals, enter the bladder during sexual aroussi. Once inside -- where the warm, moist and dark environment favors bacterial growth ... the germa reproduce like crasy. causing cystitis.

In my practice, I've found a helpful and easy strategy to avoid this infection. To begin with, you have to wipe yourself meticulously, from behind, after a bowel movement. Be VERY careful not to contaminate your genital area during this procedure.

Then, after sexual relations, empty your bladder. In this way, you'll be washing out any bacteria that may have entered the bladder. More important. you'll deprive the microorganisms of a suitable environment in which to multiply.

real names of some famous people who are or were bridge players. Under what name do we know Michael Shalhoub?

A finesse is supposed to be a 50-50 proposition. However, some finesses have no chance and others are certainties. Between those two extremes fall what many players call guesses. But it is rare for there to be no indication about a finesse. Today's deal provides a good example.

Against six spades, West led the club two. South won with dummy's queen, drew trumps and ran the clube, discarding hearts from the dummy. Then he led a heart toward dummy's king-jack. After West played low, should South have called for the jack or for the king -- or was it a guess?

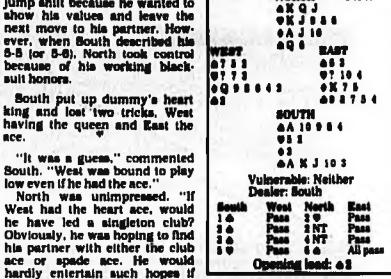

Many players would open that holding the heart ace." South hand with one spade. As for Michael Shai reserving one club for stronger hands. North made a strong jump shift because he wanted to show his values and leave the next move to his partner. However, when South described his 5-5 (or 5-6), North took control because of his working blacksuit honors.
