

PROPOSALS MADE TO SHOW WORLD FLORIDA ASSETS

Leaders Urge That Publicity Campaigns Which Characterized Florida Prosperity In Boom Period To Be Continued

Broadly speaking, nothing that can be done, in behalf of promoting the development and progress of Florida, is of more importance than making it possible for more and more people to become intimately acquainted with this state, to have actual knowledge, acquired at first-hand of what Florida is and has to offer for the benefit of humankind.

Within some days past the public has become familiar, through newspaper publicity, with plans proposed by State Hotel Commissioner Carter for interesting more people throughout the United States in Florida, and for making it worth their while to come here and see the state, not only to see Florida but to enjoy and appreciate its many advantages, and without being put to any very great expense for so doing.

More than that, by reason of the plans now being worked into shape and with the co-operation of railroads, water transportation lines, bus lines and Florida hotel owners and operators, people to whom information about Florida is to be given will be offered substantially reduced transportation and hotel rates during certain periods of the 1927-28 season, as up to November 15 and after March 15, times when the rush of tourist traffic is not pressing, and when, also, there are more uncrowded opportunities for getting about the state and enjoying everything that is to be enjoyed by visitors generally.

There is a two-fold purpose in the plan proposed for bringing visitors to this state in the periods to be designated. First, to enable more people, than under ordinary circumstances, to visit Florida, and at a minimum of expense; and second, to give them such attention and consideration while in the state as will make them have the very best of feelings for Florida and its people, whether these visitors elect to stay here, becoming permanent residents, or whether they return to their homes to tell enthusiastically of what they saw and learned in Florida and of the wonderful courtesies extended to them by Florida people, including Florida hotel men and transportation managements.

SECOND TRIAL OF 'BAD' MAN TO BE HELD IN OCTOBER

Youthful Gunman One Of Most Notorious Since The Days Of Al Jennings Also Faces Several Counts Of Robbery

AKMULGEE, Okla., Sept. 5.—(INS)—Mathew Kimes, one of the last of Oklahoma's real "bad men" will face his second trial for murder Oct. 17 at the Okmulgee county court house.

The 21-year-old youth, the state's most colorful bandit since the days of Henry Starr and since Al Jennings joined the party league, faces a specific charge of slaying W. J. McAnnally, Beggs, Oklahoma police chief last May.

McAnnally was shot down during the robbery of two Beggs banks by a gang of eight men, in which Kimes was alleged to have been recognized.

The youthful gunman also faces several counts of robbery by firearms—punished by death in Oklahoma.

Keep On Trying
Determined to send Kimes to the chair, prosecutors from the state banking department and Okmulgee county declare that if they fail to get a death penalty on the murder charge they will try Kimes on the remaining counts against him until they do.

Warrants have been issued for Kimes in connection with the following holdups: robbery of State Bank of Sapula in which $10,000 was taken; Pampa State Bank of Texas, $32,000; First State of Bristow, Okla., $20,000; State Bank of McCune, Kas., $90,000 and other robberies at Mannford, Cushing, Davenport and Keystone, Okla.

At most of these places he already has been indicted on charges of robbery with firearms.

Kimes began life as a plowman on his father's farm near Van Buren, Ark. When 10 years old he went to the nearby Oklahoma oil fields to work. There he was implicated in the robbery of an Okfuskee county bank and with his older brother, George served two years in the state penitentiary at McAlester.

In the late summer of 1925 he and his brother robbed the State Bank of Dewey, for which they were convicted, and killed Perry Chuculate, Sallisaw deputy sheriff, in making their escape. They were tried and convicted, George being sentenced to serve 25 years and Matt drawing a life term.

PARIS.—Mademoiselles will be as friendly, Madames will be as motherly and the "Frogs" in general will be as kindly, to the American cities of the American Legion of 1927, as they were ten years ago, to the same throngs clad then in khaki. So run all indications.

Even the devastated regions where the debt question seems most to rankle, are cordial.

"Whatever our people think of American finance, they have nothing but admiration for the American soldier. Admiration and affection."

That was how their feeling was summed up by M. Garraud de Braquetmont, an influential farmer of this section.

He lives in Cantigny. A little way down the road from that village rises a broze shaft thickly inscribed with the names of American soldiers killed in that vicinity.

Cantigny is a small village on top of a hill. It is chiefly tidy little new houses, though there are gaps occasionally, where cellars yawn, overgrown with grass, and stones, neatly piled, are what is left of a pre-war home. Fields high with grain stretch in all directions except on the side of a hill, which seems covered with shrubs.

Men of the American first division remember that section. It was to take that town and "straighten out the line" that an American division went into the war for the first time as a unit. When they held it, it was heaps of stones and raw red earth in gaping holes, and no more.

There is a hardware store in one of the main streets of Amiens. "They say the American soldiers are coming," said Madame, over the counter. Do you think they will come here? I would like to see some of them again.

There were some in our house during the war. They were so gay, like boys. We were sad, with my husband at the front, but they made us laugh, with their jokes. And my baby was never so happy as when he was with them. They were always playing with him."

Above Saisons is a flat plateau which changed hands eleven times during the war, each time with heavy punishment to the section. On the slope on the way up is a cluster of new houses, the rebuilt town of Fontenoy.

One of the houses is of old stones newly put together. It belongs to an old couple who are bent and tottering with age, but always working.

A neighbor tells that they lost their two sons in the war; that they slipped back to their town before the armistice was signed. There was not a roof in the town, so they went at night to Ambleny, five kilometers away, to sleep. Eventually they put their house together again.

The old woman came along, carrying two heavy tin milk cans. She set them down and stroked her hair back from her forehead.

"So the American soldiers are coming? That is good. That is very good. I love soldiers, perhaps because I had two boys who were soldiers. Many American soldiers I saw during the war, just near the age of my own boys. Ce sont des braves gars—they are fine fellows. I would like to wave to them, if they go by here."

GARY ENDEARED SELF TO WRITERS OF WALL STREET

Many Tributes Are Planned To Memory Of Industrial Hero Who Had Friends Among Group Of Financial Writers

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—(INS)—Among the tributes that have been paid and will be paid to the high esteem in which the late Elbert H. Gary was held by his fellow men, none will be more sincere or more heartfelt than those contributed by the newspaper men of the financial district.

To say that Judge Gary was loved and esteemed by the financial writers and reporters would be putting the matter very mildly, indeed. Every interviewer who had the distinction of following the head of the Steel Corporation into his inner office, where he sat at the head of the director's table, and spoke in evenly modulated tones on important topics of the day, felt that he was receiving a message that was fit for the world to hear.

For many years Judge Gary was recognized as America's spokesman for the business interests of the country. He had made a special study of the art of fairness and squareness in business information, and scorned the idea of treating valuable industrial data as a possible means of enriching himself or his friends. Information contained in the periodic public statements of the Steel Corporation was brought together in such a way as to fit into the completed tabulation after the close of the stock market, or at the exact schedule time of the public announcements.

Enjoyed Interviews
Judge Gary took a great pride in these newspaper interviews and was extremely careful to avoid error in statements attributed to him in the press. In order to secure an interview it was necessary to make an appointment through his confidential secretaries. Having presented himself at the Steel Corporation office the interviewer was admitted promptly to Judge Gary's sanctum, the most impressive of furniture in which was the long directors' table. On the wall is a series of pictures of America's outstanding "strong men" in the sphere of finance and business.

Having decided on the topic for discussion, Judge Gary rocked his chair slowly backward and forward, carefully and deliberately answering questions and taking time occasionally to drive home some important point. Except in the case of statements prepared by himself and distributed to all newspaper men alike, Mr. Gary (as he preferred to be called) was quite insistent that the completed interview be submitted to him for his inspection.

Secured Pool Evils
One of his most important utterances on the subject of the stock market was given in an exclusive interview to the writer. In the interview Judge Gary roundly scored the evils of pool manipulation of stocks, and went as far as to say that "at times the reported sales on the stock market are fictitious and purely 'wash sales'—which means that the same interests control both the sale and purchase." He deprecated the fact that so much money was lost by inexperienced dabblers in stocks.

One of his most constructive measures was the establishment of the American Iron and Steel Institute, for the collection and distribution of information to world-wide conditions in the steel trade. For the annual meetings of this institute Judge Gary always prepared an elaborate survey of world-wide business conditions, with appropriate deductions therefrom, and publications eagerly awaited by business men.

Another outstanding event in Judge Gary's life was the annual meeting of the directors of the Corporation in the little quarters over in the At these meetings as soon as formal reports were out of way, and the sandwiches, pie and coffee disposed of, Gary was in the habit of giving formally on important matters and answering questions stockholders and others.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—(INS)—The great American urge to put a slot in a slot, then a crank or pull lever, and receive the staples and luxuries of life has been given another impetus. New York now has slot machine for the dispensing of ice cream cones, these evidently indispensable soft drinks for which every man evinces a terrific yearning. Immediately he sets foot in a slot machine follows the dispensing of those which dispense coffee, candy, and other hand-made delicacies.

and other articles and foods. The customer puts a five cent piece in a slot, turns a crank and presto! he has an ice-cream soda. The effect on the human soda dispenser market is expected to be unbelievable. The machine is put out by F. E. Gray of Philadelphia. Gray is a former advertising copy-writer who saw the possibilities of such a machine and hired an inventor to produce one. Middle-age has revolted against being tossed aside in business by younger blood. An organization has been formed in New York City to discuss and, if possible meet the problems of middle-age men and women who find themselves discharged after years of service because their hair is graying and their step not so quick.

AMERICAN JAZZ FAST CONQUERS GREAT BRITAIN

Europeans Taking To U.S. Productions Despite Their Love For Famous Masters Of Old

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (INS)—Despite European love for the never dying melodies of Wagner, Beethoven, Verdi and great masters of music, American "jazz" the music of the high, wide and careless moderns, is beginning to conquer England.

Taken in American possibly to counteract in the influences of prohibition, in its never stimulating rhythm, Broadway created jazz is now heard in many of the cafes, the hotel dining rooms and dance halls of the European capitals.

The mighty strains of the masters, suggesting as the poet said: "life's endless toil and endeavor" the music of the humbler bards is coming in and ever more popular, according to commerce department reports.

"The decided increase of American exports of musical instruments usually associated with "jazz" to England is significant of a popular demand for this new type of music," said a statement issued by the specialties division of the department.

During 1920 the value of band instruments shipped to England from this country was $3,514. In 1925, after a consistent increase in such exports during intervening years, the total value exported to Great Britain amounted to $121,000. While the 1926 shipment did not equal those of the preceding year, the loss is attributed to the British strike and other unfavorable conditions. The McKenna tariff duties of 33 1-3 percent also were effective during the entire of 1926, having a tendency to cut down the exports from United States.

The saxophone—the notorious producer of the jazziest of jazz—leads all other instruments in popularity for European use. The market for trumpets, trombones and cornets is depressed at the present time, although in the opinion of dealers these instruments will experience a boom similar to that of the saxophone, provided the popularity of the present type of music continues.

Neither foreign nor domestic products in England possess any distinctive features not incorporated by the better grade of American made instruments, which are considered the equal or superior to any of the competing makes, according to the commerce department.

The most popular saxophone is a silver-plated, satin finish instrument with the bell engraved and on the inside of the bell heavily gold plated; the keys, ferrules, engraving and inside the bell the hand burnished and equipped with pearl-inlaid fingertips.

Bandit Is Held In Philadelphia But Claims They Can't

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 6.—(INS)—Roy Dickerson, Alabama's phantom bandit whose boast is that no jail can hold him, is being held in Philadelphia, according to reports, and is said to have admitted his identity.

Dickerson was captured Saturday night after a fight with three officers who overpowered him and a companion following an alleged holdup of the manager of a chain store. Dickerson is wanted in Alabama to complete a term of 25 years of his part in the robbery of the Phenix-Girard Bank of Phenix City, Ala.

The bandit was caught following the Alabama bank robbery and confined in Kilby prison but escaped. Later he was captured in Los Angeles only to escape from officers there while an Alabama official was enroute to the California city to bring him back.

Numerous reports have been heard of his alleged activities since that time but all efforts to apprehend him had failed until his capture Saturday night.

After being held in the Quaker City over Sunday Dickerson, according to the Philadelphia officers, has confessed to a series of crimes dating back to the World War, when he is said to have murdered a military policeman in France.

More Than $100,000,000 In Public Improvements Are Jeopardized By Court Rule
TAMPA, Fla., Sept. 6.—(INS)—More than $100,000,000 in public improvement assessments in cities in Florida are jeopardized by a recent decision of the Supreme court in the action of the Atlantic Coast Line company against the city of Lakeland, according to local officials.

Following the decision action was taken before the city commission of Tampa and almost as much more in St. Petersburg.

The City of Lakeland assessed the Atlantic Coast Line for one half the cost of improving a street upon which property of the railroad company abuted. The railroad company claimed the assessment was excessive and illegal and that the assessors should have assessed certain benefit for improvement against the city as a whole.

Under this act of 1925 Tampa has paved streets at a cost of more than $5,000,000, all the cost of which has been laid upon the abutting property owners. The Supreme court now says this plan is illegal and that some portion of the expense should be laid upon the city as a whole because the entire city derives benefits from such improvements. The portion to be assessed upon the city must be determined, the court holds, before assessments can be laid against the property owners.
