Anti-crime bill passes

By MIKE FEINGOLD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The long-debated crime bill was approved by the Senate on a 81-38 vote Thursday after two weeks of intense debate and six years of congressional deadlock, with 10 weeks to go before election.

It now goes to the White House for the president's signature.

The bill is designed to build prisons, increase the number of death penalty crimes and help pay salaries of 100,000 police for six years. (Republicans said the money was enough for only 10,000).

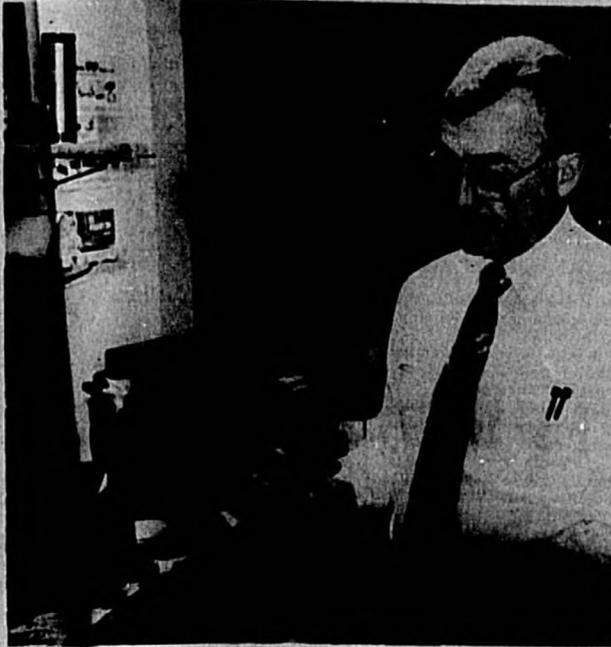

The measure will also ban 19 assault-style weapons.

Crime — spoken almost in a single burst as "tough-on-crime" — had belonged to the GOP for a generation. "For 25 years," grumbled Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, "basically Democrats have been coddling criminals."

And now the Democrats were taking the issue away.

The Republicans, on the penny-pinching side of a popular issue, were left to complain that the SANFORD — With Congress having approved the crime bill and President Clinton's signature expected soon, the public is focusing on the section dealing with gun control.

The problem at this time is not fully knowing what the bill will do regarding guns. "We don't have all of the details at this point," said Sheriff Don Ealinger, "but I don't see that the gun control portion of this new bill is going to be of much help."

Ealinger said he supports some of the bill, especially portions which will increase law enforcement and the number of prison beds available across the nation.

Bert Nelson, president of A&N Sports, 501 French Avenue in Sanford, was disappointed that the legislation passed, but not immediately concerned.

He said no one expected it to pass with the gun control portion in the bill. "I have no doubt that in order to keep this gun control part in the bill, there was some trading which

Friends grieve for fellow student

By VICKI BOESCHNER

SANFORD — Yesterday morning, students at Lakeview Middle School in Sanford tumbled off the buses from Lake Mary, preparing for a day of classes.

While most grumbled or gaped their way toward their lockers, many were visibly shaken by news they'd heard the night before or that morning of the untimely death of one of their fellow students.

School officials were prepared to offer assistance to those and any other students who wanted to talk about their friend and what had happened.

"I had gotten a call at home from a parent who told me about what happened," principal Jim Shupe said. "So I was able to make a mental plan and implement it as soon as I got to school in the morning."

Shupe called together his three guidance counselors and guidance counselors from Seminole High School, Sanford Middle School and Greenwood Lakes Middle School to help the youngsters deal with their grief.

The media center at Lakeview was cordoned off, the blinds were drawn and paper was placed over the doors.

Those who spoke to the counselors were guaranteed complete privacy, Shupe said.

The dozen or so counselors talked with the nearly 100 students about suicide and other problems facing teens.

The friends of the eighth grader spent the day together talking to both counselors and to each other.

Work on animal shelter to begin

By J. MARK BARFIELD

SANFORD — The long-awaited work to replace the Humane Society of Seminole County shelter destroyed by fire last year is expected to begin next week.

Ron Hardee, society board member and chairman of the building committee, said site preparation is expected to begin by the end of next week to replace the shelter destroyed by fire in April 1993. Seventy-three dogs lost their lives in the tragedy, found caused by a lint-clogged dryer exhaust.

The project was delayed from a May startup when uncertainties evolved over whether Sanford or the county was to provide water and sewer to the site, located partially within the city. Agreements were finally worked out to allow Sanford to provide both water and sewer

Schools plan ahead for zone realignment

By VICKI BOESCHNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — When Winter Springs High School opens next year, the high schools across the district will have to realign their attendance zones to accommodate the new school.

Overcrowding at most of the schools will be alleviated and, it is hoped, the underpopulation of Seminole High School will be rectified as well.

Though it is at least a year before the first student crosses the threshold of WSHS, the rezoning process is already beginning.

Dr. Hortense Evans, administrative assistant to the superintendent, is heading a committee which will undertake "one of the most challenging tasks" the district faces.

She says tempers flare and great divisions form when rezoning occurs, but it must be done.

The committee Evans leads wants to "eliminate the fight between certain schools; improve articulation by reducing and/or controlling the number of middle schools feeding into high schools; and request that the school board establish parameters prior to rezoning."

A time line has been established though Evans said, there are still many questions which remain unanswered.

"Parameters need to be established in order to get the process underway," she explained.

The school district has not gotten to the point of establishing how each school will be affected by the rezoning.

Murder trial: Self defense or depraved mind?

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A Seminole County jury will decide today whether Michele Roger acted in self defense and is innocent or with a depraved mind and is guilty when she stabbed her boyfriend, 28-year old David Richmond, to death two years ago. That is a pivotal question in the second degree murder trial which is coming to a close after nearly two weeks.

During closing arguments Thursday afternoon, prosecutor Steve Plotnick listed 13 things Richmond had done during the couple's 1 1/2 year tumultuous relationship which could have created, ill-will, hatred, spite or evil intent.

components necessary to show a depraved mind.

Roger claims she killed Richmond during a terrible fight which began outside a men's club where she worked as a topless dancer and continued as they drove to the Oviedo condominium where they lived. She said Richmond attempted to force her face onto a hot stove

FLORIDA BRIEFS

Wet weather causes higher hay prices

TALLAHASSEE — While wet weather is forcing many Florida cattlemen to face higher costs of hay, experts say consumers are not likely to see increasing prices anytime soon.

"The thing driving cow prices now is overproduction," said Florida Farm Bureau analyst Frankie Hall. "There's overproduction in all meat: cattle, hogs, even chickens."

But while the news is good for those in the grocery store aisles, many Florida cattlemen face a weather-related economic situation with clouds on the horizon. It's particularly true in northwest Florida, which still is seeing the effects of Tropical Storm Alberto and Tropical Storm Beryl.

Gov. Lawton Chiles has asked for a federal disaster declaration in Leon and Wakulla counties. Though neither are big cattle areas, much of northwest Florida has seen 1994 rainfall amounts higher than any in more than 50 years.

"The rain nearly every day has affected everything," said Gadsden County extension agent Bobby Durden. "From a livestock point of view, it's meant no hay. We might be producing a lot of bales, but it's low quality."

There has been only one cutting of hay this year for many growers in the Florida Panhandle because of the wet weather. Hopes for the usual second cutting are gone, since the drenched crop either went bad before harvest or was left underwater to rot after it was cut.

Pipe bomb at school defused

WILTON MANORS — Authorities have successfully defused a "sophisticated pipe bomb" planted in a school parking lot after evacuating people within a half-mile of the bomb.

Police and Broward Sheriff's Office deputies cleared the area after an employee at St. Clements Church School spotted the bomb near an underground propane tank on Thursday.

"It would have made the explosion much worse," said sheriff's spokesman Jim Leljedal. "They evacuated a 1/4-mile radius because they believed it would have been a very powerful explosion."

No arrests had been made late Thursday, but Leljedal said the bomb would be inspected as part of the investigation. A remote-controlled robot helped in the defusing.

A nursing home, church, school and several office buildings and apartment buildings in the vicinity were evacuated. County buses were brought in to help in the evacuation.

Rapist may face life in prison

ST. AUGUSTINE — A retired St. Augustine firefighter faces up to life in prison when he is sentenced for the 1971 rape of his 11-year-old niece.

Robert Maurice Rains, 58, was convicted by a St. Johns County jury Wednesday in the sexual attack on the girl in the summer of 1971 in his living room.

Defense attorney Richard Nichols said he will likely appeal the verdict, although it depends on the sentence imposed by Circuit Judge Richard Watson. No sentencing date has been set.

The victim, Karen Maples, now 34, told authorities last year that Rains had sexually assaulted her numerous times during the early 1970s. After charges were filed, six other women — four of them relatives — also came forward with stories of sexual abuse when they were children.

"We get our lives back. We gain our freedom," said Ms. Maples, a part-time bookkeeper in St. Augustine.

She said she came forward and let her name be made public to let other victims know they can successfully prosecute sex offenses.

Attorneys said the case was highly unusual because of the length of time between the rape and when it was reported. Although four of the other victims testified, the case boiled down to the accuser's detailed account of Rains forcing her to have sexual intercourse.

Buffett uninjured in sea plane crash

NANTUCKET, Mass. — The easy summer life that has made singer Jimmy Buffett famous nearly did him in Thursday afternoon when the sea plane he was piloting capsized during take-off.

Buffett escaped serious injury in the crash, which took place in Madaket Harbor on the island's west end, said police Sgt. Charles Gibson.

Buffett, best known for the song "Margaritaville," often vacations on Nantucket. He was alone aboard the nine-seater, twin-engine Grumman Q-44 Widgeon sea plane, Gibson said.

The 47-year-old Buffett, of Key West, Fla., was taxiing the plane in preparation for take-off when it ran into a wave and flipped. Buffett managed to swim from the plane and was picked up by a passing boat that carried him to shore.

Gibson, who met Buffett at shore, said the singer had "no visible injuries but complained of pain." He was taken to the Nantucket Cottage Hospital where he was treated and released.

"He was fine ... he walked out with his friends," said Donna Fleming, a nurse in the emergency room.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

More troops may be needed Camp costs may hit $20 million per month

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon says it will cost roughly $20 million a month to run an expanded Cuban refugee camp at Guantanamo Bay Naval Station, and it may have to call up reserve forces if the Caribbean island exodus continues.

The U.S. military on Thursday scrambled to transport the huge amounts of equipment and supplies needed to expand the detention camps at Guantanamo Bay from the current 20,000-person capacity to between 40,000 and 60,000.

Some 7,000 to 9,000 extra U.S. soldiers are expected to be sent to Guantanamo to help the 3,000 soldiers already there, officials said.

Pentagon spokesman Dennis Boxx estimated it would cost $100 million to set up expanded camps for the Cubans, assuming their numbers do not exceed 45,000.

"This is essentially a small city we're going to be running," said Marine Corps Lt. Gen. John Sheehan, who is overseeing the operation for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

President Clinton made it clear any U.S. discussions with Cuba would be limited to immigration issues — not lifting economic sanctions.

"I think Mr. Castro knows the conditions for changing that policy," Clinton said. "The people of Cuba want democracy and free markets."

He urged Americans to be "firm and calm about what is going on here now."

In a speech Wednesday night, Fidel Castro said the only way to solve the refugee crisis was for the United States to open talks with Havana.

Increasingly vehement U.S. government radio broadcasts, meanwhile, have been warning Cubans against trying to flee by boat.

Radio Marti, beaming the message day and night, has been highlighting incidents in which boat people have washed ashore in Cuba or died after rescue because of dehydration or other causes.

Aerial spotters have gone on the air to tell Cubans the sea of rafts in the Florida Straits was far more than Coast Guard rescuers could handle.

"We're working our people ragged," says Dick Lobo, director of the Office of Cuba Broadcasting. Radio Marti took steps to overcome airwave jamming by Cuba.

Meanwhile, 49 of the Cubans who made it across to U.S. shores were taken to an immigration facility at Port Isabel, Texas, — the first movement outside Florida.

About 5,500 Cuban boat people were at Guantanamo Bay as of midday Thursday, and more than 7,000 more were aboard U.S. Navy and Coast Guard ships headed there, the Pentagon said.

It said the base will be able to handle 40,000 by next week and is prepared to expand still further to look after 60,000 or more if necessary. Already there are 14,500 Haitian refugees on the base.

Looking for ways to save critical lands

By JAMES MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

POLK CITY — From beneath an oak tree in front of his house, Ed Stettner scans the cattle on his grassy ranch in the Green Swamp and curses the day his land was deemed environmentally critical.

"Environmentalists keep trying to save Florida to the way it was when Ponce De Leon came up on it," Stettner says. "What they've done is regulate my land to the point it's worthless. This is a taking from the landowner. You have to ask — What is being given to the landowner?"

The answer in Central Florida's Green Swamp, the region's rain barrel, is cold hard cash in the state's first effort to pay property owners not to develop their environmentally sensitive land.

Although the program applies only to the Green Swamp, environmentalists and state officials say the experiment could be expanded statewide as a way to marry the interests of environmental preservation and property rights.

Attempts to buy development rights have been tried before, mostly in Northeastern states, to control development in high-growth areas.

But backers of the Green Swamp plan say there is a unique attempt to compensate landowners in an area that has been under development restrictions since it was declared an area of critical state concern two decades ago.

"If you want to be fair to these people, you have to pay them," says state Rep. Dean Saunders, D-Lakeland, who came up with the plan. "This could be a model for the future."

The headwaters of four rivers, including two that supply most of Tampa's drinking water, the Green Swamp also is coveted as the highest point in the underground Floridan aquifer, providing pressure to keep springs and rivers flowing.

Calling it a swamp is something of a misnomer. Most of the 870 square miles of land in Polk and Lake counties is upland scrub and pine forest, or cleared "green pastures." And all of it is within commuting distance of fast-growing Walt Disney World.

Retiree mobile home parks fight for way of life

By JAMES MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

TAMPA — More than 2,000 residents of retirement mobile home parks showed up at a federal hearing to voice their anger at proposed rules changes that they fear could threaten their lifestyles.

They arrived by the busload Thursday to make sure that proposed Department of Housing and Urban Development regulations don't prevent retiree parks from continuing to bar families with young children.

"We earned the right to a peaceful retirement! LEAVE US ALONE," read a banner that was heartily applauded as it was paraded through the hearing at the Tampa Convention Center.

It was the second of four HUD hearings around the country to take public comment on a proposal setting legal definitions of what constitutes a retirement community.

The Fair Housing Act prohibits discrimination in housing on the basis of age. It exempts communities for those 55 and over, but only if they have significant facilities and services "specifically designed" to meet the physical or social needs of older people.

These "significant facilities and services" were never defined, and that vagueness often resulted in lawsuits and concerns from communities which sought the older exemption.

Last month, HUD published a proposed rule that would require communities for older residents to provide a variety of services, including transportation and lawn and health services, to be able to retain their exemption. A final rule was set for late this year.

Charly Cicardo, executive director of the Largo-based Federation of Mobile Home Owners, said the guidelines are costly and not needed in most mobile home communities.

Retirees who need these services usually live in a health care facility, not a mobile home, she said. The proposal threatens the mobile home retirement lifestyle because most parks would be unable to afford the required services and be forced to open their lots to everyone, she said.

"It's supposed to be a peaceful retirement age," said Marcia Snyder, a resident of the Colony Cove Mobile Home Park in Ellenton, the state's largest retiree park with nearly 4,000 residents.

"You love to have them visit," she said of her grandchildren. "You love to talk to them on the telephone, but you don't want them visiting every day. You get too old. That's the bottom line — you just get too old."

Roberta Achtenberg, HUD Assistant Secretary for fair housing and equal opportunity, chaired the hearing and sought to calm the fears of retiree park residents.

A Casselberry man was arrested Wednesday afternoon on three charges of sexual battery and one charge of kidnapping. A Casselberry woman reported to police Donald Joseph Parry, 27, 292 N. Post Way, came to her home Saturday to look at boat they owned together. Once there, the woman reported Parry forced her into her bedroom, removed her clothes, handcuffed her and sexually battered her. When done, the woman said Parry became remorseful and unbound her and allowed her to dress. She reported he gave her ice for her bruised arms. The woman said Parry allowed her to drive away with him. But when they returned, she reported he forced her into the bedroom again, undressed her and bound her to her bed using handcuffs and rope before sexually battering her again. After Parry became remorseful again and freed her, the woman said she ran outside and locked herself in her car until he left.

Florida college best buy

By MARK PFEIFFER
Herald Staff Writer

People planning to send their high school graduates to Ivy League colleges would do well to look closer to home.

On Sept. 6, Money magazine will present the results of a survey of America's 100 best college buys. It ranks schools by 18 factors related to cost and academic quality.

Number one on the national list, for the second consecutive year, is New College of the University of South Florida in Sarasota. Also high on the list are University of Florida, 29th, and Florida State University, 30th, well above such stalwarts as Dartmouth, 59th, Columbia, 65th, and Harvard, 82nd.

The personal finance monthly says New College ranked No. 1 in its annual evaluation by not raising tuition for 1994-95 while keeping its academic standards high.

Tuition for 1994-95 at New College is unchanged from the past school year — $2,030 for Florida residents, $7,943 for nonresidents, the magazine said.

Students at the Sarasota school also have academic credentials that include an average high school grade point average of 3.81 and high scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

The guide also lauds New College's 10-to-1 student-faculty ratio, substantially better than the 16-to-1 for all schools on the Money list.

New College was founded as a private school with the intention of rivaling the best of the Ivy League schools and later became part of the state college system.

Its 530 students meet individually with an advisor to devise a learning contract, Jim Feeney of the dean's office said Wednesday.

"It sets forth the student's long-term academic goals. And it establishes the immediate goals for the semester and academic activities that will take place to meet those goals," he said. Those activities include classes, one-on-one sessions with instructors, readings and other projects.

Students earn no letter grades. Instead, advisers determine if the student's progress for a semester was satisfactory, unsatisfactory or incomplete.

Following Sarasota, Fla.-based New College in the ranking was Rice University in Houston, No. 2 for the second year in a row.

"So what's new in our fifth annual ranking, you ask? The answer: historically black 2,007-student Spelman College in Georgia and 1,385-student St. Mary's College of Maryland joined the top 10 for the first time," Money said.

Filling out the top 10 were: Trenton State College in New Jersey, the State University of New York's Binghamton campus, Northeast Missouri State University, Hanover College in Indiana, Rutgers University's New Brunswick, N.J. campus, California Institute of Technology, Spelman and St. Mary's.

In addition to its overall list, Money also broke out the colleges in other ways.

Of those colleges with tuition and fees of more than $17,500, the magazine ranked those it dubbed "worth it." The top five: Yale University, Pomona College in California, Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Dartmouth College and Columbia University.

Money's top women's college values: Spelman, Sweet Briar College in Virginia, Salem College in North Carolina, Agnes Scott College in Georgia and Rosemont College in Pennsylvania.

And the best small liberal arts schools, according to Money: New College, Hanover College, St. Mary's, and Fisk University and University of the South, both in Tennessee.

The overall ranking did include the usual blue chips. Yale ranked as No. 17, Columbia No. 65 and Harvard University No. 82.

No. 2 Rice topped the Money list in 1991 and 1992. The magazine said Rice's rating was hurt by two straight increases in tuition and fees for freshmen — 9.4 percent in 1992 and 11.7 percent last year to $10,775.

But the school remained high in the rankings because of what the magazine called its "unusually superb" education.

Factors determining the ranking included entrance exam results, graduation rates, faculty resources and deployment, budgets for instruction and student services, and default ratios on graduates' student loans. The magazine then compared those figures with each college's tuition and fees.

Cops make peace after shooting

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — By at least one account, Officer Peter DeDebbio methodically shot a fellow cop in the back after mistaking him for a crook.

When DeDebbio visited Officer Desmond Robinson in the hospital Thursday, he leaned down and kissed him on the forehead.

"I'm sorry," DeDebbio repeated over and over, his right arm bandaged from a bullet shot.

"Don't worry," Robinson replied from his bed. Connected to machines and tubes, he seemed to sense that the other officer's wounds were in some ways deeper than his own.

"You did what you had to do." The tearful exchange — recounted by Robinson's friends moments later — momentarily drowned out the racially charged accusations that have followed Monday's chaotic rush-hour shootout on a subway platform.

Robinson, 31, a black plainclothes Transit Police officer, was shot four times and critically injured. DeDebbio, 31, a New York City officer of Italian and Puerto Rican descent, was hit in the arm. He left a hospital Thursday.

The two officers "seemed to have an understanding of what happened that maybe eludes you unless you're a police officer," Mayor Rudolph Giuliani said after meeting with both men.

What happened was pandemonium — police turned a crowded Manhattan subway platform at 53rd St. and Lexington Ave. into a shooting gallery after a teen-ager dropped a sawed-off shotgun and fled through a crowd of commuters.

The gun fired as it hit the platform, setting the two officers on a collision course. Robinson — dressed to blend in with passengers so he could catch pickpockets — ran toward the train with his gun drawn. DeDebbio, who was riding home in street clothes, also pulled his revolver.

The shooting started after they saw each other through an open subway door. As commuters ran for cover, DeDebbio emptied his five-shot revolver in a 15-second volley, with at least four shots hitting Robinson, police said.

Two bullets entered Robinson's back. Another bullet fired by a uniformed officer ricocheted off the train and hit DeDebbio in the arm.

2 patients hang themselves in 1 month

By The Associated Press

LONGWOOD — A Longwood psychiatric hospital that had only one suicide in its 10-year history has had two of its patients hang themselves within the past month.

Police and officials of South Seminole Community Hospital are investigating the deaths of the two men, both of whom hanged themselves at the psychiatric facility next door to the main hospital in Longwood.

The first suicide was July 24, and the other Aug. 19.

"We need to double-check everything," said police Capt. Terry Baker. "With two deaths in a month, it does look awfully strange. So we want to make sure the procedures were followed."

A 40-year-old man admitted for depression in July was taken off suicide watch when his condition appeared to improve. He was found July 24 hanging from a sheet tied to the bathroom curtain rod.

In the latest case, a 26-year-old man hanged himself with a towel from the bathroom door while on suicide watch.

In each case, the hospital notified police and the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

Insurance agents were at the facility Wednesday to determine whether proper procedures were followed and whether changes in operation are needed.

"The psychiatric hospital has been in existence for 10 years, and in that 10 years there's been one (suicide)," said Mary Jack, vice president of patient-care services. "So it's highly irregular to have them occur back-to-back like that."

Long before you go to the polls

The closer we get to September primary races and the November General Election, the more political debates, speeches and candidate forums will be held. They will be an excellent opportunity to learn more about the candidates and their plans for leadership, should they win.

What is said by a political candidate during these meetings however, should not, alone, be allowed to decide your vote.

It should be the role of every citizen to study the issues which face our government leaders. If the facts are known, what a candidate says may be seen in a different light.

Many years ago, at a political forum, a candidate seeking a state legislative position, promised to press for the widening of U.S. Highway 17-92 to reduce traffic congestion between Sanford and Orlando.

Following the meeting, a friend privately told the candidate, "Why did you say that? You probably wouldn't get on the highway committee and wouldn't have a thing to say about 17-92."

The candidate replied, "I know that, and you know that, but they (the voters) don't know that."

The man was elected. The point here is that people should not vote for and elect anyone to public office based strictly on what they say or publish in campaign literature. A candidate can promise almost anything and have a myriad of excuses on why they couldn't do what they said.

If we are to continue having the best government in the world, every citizen has a responsibility to study the issues and know as much as possible about the candidates.

They must be willing to listen to both sides of an issue before making a determination. And finally, on all election days, first or second primaries, general elections or runoff, they MUST vote. It's important.

I know that, and you know that, now let's have everyone know that.

Compliments, reminder

My compliments to your guest columnist, Mr. Nelson Tullar. It is refreshing to hear someone speak frankly about our inept criminal justice system. He spoke of using the stocks and flogging with the cat-of-nine tails as the first level of punishment for criminal activity. (May I add restitution to the victim?)

He spoke of the "Bill of Rights," but neglected to point out that the "Bill of Rights" was clearly added to the Constitution as protection for the victim, NOT as a tool to get the criminal off the hook!

Mr. Tullar seemed to find the greatest fault in the judicial system and I think he is on to something. So please let me remind the public that we the voters have five candidates for the 18th Circuit judgeship vacated by Judge Mize. ONE VOTE can make a difference and ONE JUDGE can make a big difference in whether the "Bill of Rights" is applied first to the victim or first to the criminal!

The primaries are Thursday, Sept. 8.

Ban on assault weapons

You should not be surprised that many citizens have asked their congressmen to vote against a ban on assault weapons. I am one of them. This attempt to ban a particular type of firearm is just one more move by certain forces to whittle away our right to keep and bear arms. These forces will not rest until all firearms are taken out of the hands of private citizens. Why do they try stealing away a part of our rights instead of calling for a constitutional amendment? Because they are thieves, not statesmen.

We who believe in the Second Amendment know very well that an assault weapon in the wrong hands can kill people in a hall of lead. We also know that a true marksman can kill just as many or more very methodically with a bolt-action rifle (i.e., Medal of Honor winner, Sergeant York in WWI). How long will it be before someone calls for a ban on bolt-action rifles, etc., etc.? You tell me.

If you agree that the pen is mightier than the sword, then consider some of the assault weapon equivalents protected under the First Amendment right to free speech. Is it possible that violent and/or profane movies, videos, television shows, newspaper reports, stage productions, etc., may cause violent and/or profane behavior? If Congress threatened to regulate these assault weapon equivalents what would you as an editor do about that?

Baseball strikes out with fans

When I was a child, I spoke as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

If you're a hot dog eating, T-shirt wearing, bleachers reading baseball fanatic and your baseball card collection once filled three boxes, then you know the answer to this important trivia question: Who was the last triple crown winner (most home runs, most runs batted in and highest batting average)?

Things have changed for both the beat and the worst in baseball since the Boston's Carl Yastrzemski won the triple crown in 1967 (although he shared most home runs with Minnesota's Harmon Killebrew).

More teams are playing big league baseball. More fans are swarming through the stadiums' turnstiles. More players are making over a million dollars, and more people couldn't care less whether the players went on strike or not.

The once mighty national pastime that transmogrified the grown men of winter into the little boys of summer and brought the nation to a massive standstill during the World Series is administering the last rites to itself.

Forty years ago, a national baseball strike would have unleashed a national wailing and gnashing of teeth. Today, the only national reaction to the players/owners squabble over how many millions all of them want to walk away with at the expense of the fans is a coast-to-coast collective yawn.

Forty years ago, players did sensational things. Think of Willie Mays losing his cap while running full speed, catching a homerun-bent ball over his shoulders, whirling and throwing the ball to third base.

America decimated the German war machine and brought Japan to its military knees. But the war of words has never reached an agreement over whether the Splendid Splinter (Ted Williams) or Joltin' Joe DiMaggio was the greater baseball player.

More players are making over a million dollars, and more people couldn't care less whether the players went on strike or not.

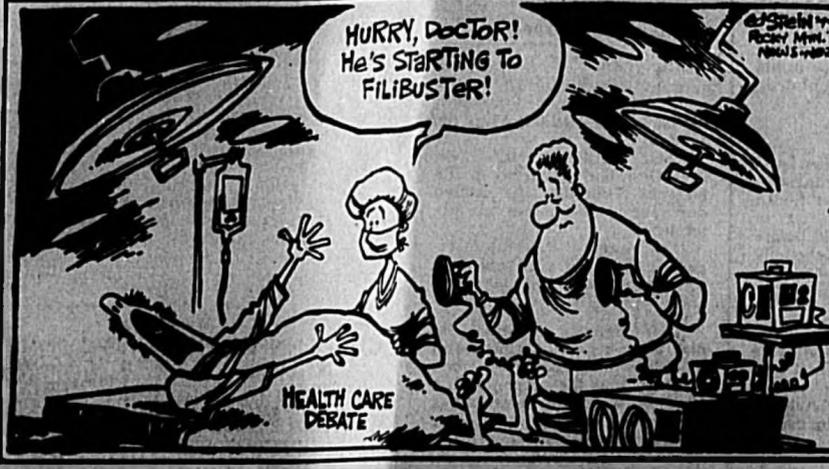

The argument really threatened to escalate into nuclear verbiage in 1947, when Williams won the triple crown, but DiMaggio won the most valuable player award.

Yesterday, baseball players played for the love of the game, the loyalty to their team and affection of the fans. Today, players play for the size of their bank account, the number of endorsements and the value of their autographs.

Recalling my teen-age years, I am amazed that black kids were so fanatical about a sport that ostracized them. My maverick predilections probably were baptized when, as a black Connecticut Yankee, I was the only New York Yankee fan in a New England city that placed fidelity to the Boston Red Sox just one step lower than devotion to God.

We hovered around our radios, listening feverishly to Red Barber and Mel Allen, and if you didn't know who those two charismatic vocal chords were, you were truly a subversive un-American.

But in the uncertainties of 1994, we are a different nation than we were in our uncluttered innocence of 1964. Our moral values have plummeted. Our political ethics would make Willie Sutton blush. The press, once universally respected for its consumer-friendly compassion, is disdainful for its voyeuristic intrusions.

America's health care system

DALLAS — America's health care system — the finest in the world — consists of tens of millions of very complex parts.

It took nine years and $300 million, for example, just to develop and test Mevacor, the pill that reduces cholesterol, and that is but one tiny part of the health care industry.

Health care is twice the size of the U.S. automobile industry. It is 14 percent of our economy. It impacts every American from birth until death. Successfully reshaping health care is far more complicated than building an aircraft carrier or designing the space shuttle or inventing the atomic bomb.

The Clinton health care plan was drafted in secret by a talented, well-intentioned group whose leaders had little experience in health care. This plan did not attract widespread support from the American people or Congress.

Now the Clinton plan is being hurriedly redrafted into a variety of new bills by congressional staffers who have little experience with health care.

Senate leaders are rushing to force a vote in the next few days on bills that have not been read.

Most of these bills include a vast new government bureaucracy to oversee health care.

Moreover, the proposals are being made along strictly partisan lines. The American people have been subjected to propaganda and emotional anecdotes instead of having these "reforms" explained to them in a logical and rational manner.

Worse yet, no one can accurately estimate what any of these proposals will cost American taxpayers — except that new health care costs will be massive.

In 1983 Congress thought the new Medicare program would cost $9 billion by 1990. The actual cost of Medicare in 1990 was $110 billion!

With our $4.8 trillion debt, we can no longer afford to make such mistakes. If you question this, see page 25 of President Clinton's budget where it is predicted that the next generation of Americans to be born will be taxed at a rate of 82 percent of their income.

Can the U.S. government effectively manage health care for the entire nation?

Consider the nationwide health care program it manages now — our veterans' hospitals. The services are so poor that only 10 percent of veterans make use of them.

There is a rational way to improve health care to deliver care to the uninsured and keep costs in line:

• Form a bipartisan team of Democrats and Republicans.

• Identify the parts of the health system that need to be improved.

• Bring in leading authorities to design the improvements.

• When this detailed plan has been completed, explain the system carefully to the American people in plain language. Skip the propaganda.

Once a consensus is reached, carefully figure out the cost of these changes and frankly explain how health care will be paid for.

ROSS PEROT

Don't mislead the American people by claiming "companies will pay for it" and implying that health care will be free — indeed, it will be the ultimate hidden tax on every American. Companies will increase their prices to pay the increased costs.

Finally, conduct pilot programs on these improvements to make sure that they work as planned and that their actual costs can be determined.

A logical pilot group would include every member of Congress, every member of the White House staff and all federal employees.

Under the original Clinton plan, the American people were to be the test subjects, with government employees excluded until 1998.

Testing a government-run program on government employees shouldn't impose much of a hardship. They already have an excellent health benefits program, so they should have good ideas about the operation of a nationwide system.

This would guarantee every citizen that any health care plan would be debugged, optimized and trouble-free before it is imposed on the entire nation.

Obviously, no one wants the rationing of health care services and waiting periods of up to 18 months for surgical procedures, two items that mark government-run health care programs in Europe, Canada — and, of course, our own veterans' hospitals.

Once the pilot operation is working successfully, at a cost we can afford, with the American people fully informed about the plan and its costs, the decision to implement these changes nationwide can be made with all the facts on the table and at minimal risk.

Compare this rational approach to the propaganda, emotional appeals and name-calling that is occurring in Washington today.

Democrats and Republicans must work to carefully design, test and price the new health care system. Encourage them to go slowly, take their time, get it right.

What's the hurry? Let's not destroy health care in a well-intentioned effort to save it.

Remember, the first rule of medicine is "do no harm."

The process I have described could take two years or more. Remember, it took nine years to develop Mevacor, just one pill.

This is a process that we cannot short-circuit if we want a cost-effective health care system that truly benefits the American people.

In the words of the carpenter, "measure twice, cut once."

JACK ANDERSON

CIA grounded a hit on the Jackal

WASHINGTON — Twenty years ago, the Central Intelligence Agency — and possibly the French government — conspired to save the life of the infamous terrorist known as Carlos the Jackal.

Carlos, who was turned over to French authorities last week by Sudanese authorities, became the world's most infamous terrorist, responsible for a string of incidents in the 1970s. French officials have accused him of murdering 18 people and wounding 200 others in France alone, while Carlos himself has boasted of killing 83 people during his reign of terror.

The incredible affair — details of which are buried in the CIA's own highly classified files — took place before Carlos had committed his most spectacular and murderous deeds. A very brief account of the episode is also contained in a 1979 report by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

which was never released. The report, based largely on CIA files made available to the committee, was an untitled preliminary study of "the operations conducted in the United States by six foreign countries' intelligence services directed at the harassment, intimidation and monitoring of United States residents." The report also covered many espionage operations abroad, as it related to those six countries.

Requests by journalists for a copy have been routinely denied since 1979 (the committee is not subject to the Freedom of Information Act), but a copy was obtained by our associate Dale Van Atta several years ago.

First, some background on Carlos the Jackal — whose real name is Ilich Ramirez Sanchez — is necessary:

Born in Venezuela in 1949 to a Marxist lawyer, young Carlos began training in Fidel Castro's guerrilla camps by the age of 17. At that tender age, Carlos learned the terrorist's art from Victor Shostakov of the Soviet KGB. By 1969, Carlos had migrated to Moscow, where he was expelled from Patrice Lumumba University. During his stay in Moscow, he developed a fast friendship with a Marxist Palestinian commando named Mohammed Boudia.

Four years later, in 1973, an Israeli hit team assassinated Boudia, and Carlos took over Palestinian terrorist operations in Europe. In December 1973, Carlos committed his first known act of terrorism when he shot Edward Steig, a British millionaire, in London. Steig survived the shooting. Nine months later, Carlos bombed a Paris drug store.

This is where the CIA came in. By September 1974, Carlos had gotten on the wrong side of several South American regimes for miscellaneous murders. An international hit team was dispatched to assassinate him.

According to the Senate report, the hit team was part of "Operation Condor," an ultra-secret consortium of intelligence services from Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay.

According to the report: "A highly secret dimension of Operation Condor — the so-called 'phase three' operation — involves the formation of special teams from member countries assigned to travel anywhere in the world to non-member countries to carry out 'sanctions,' including assassination, against Condor enemies."

The report goes on to explain how these sanctions would be carried out: A first Condor team identifies an enemy, thereafter a second Condor team is sent to locate and observe the target. A third team is then dispatched to carry out the actual sanction.

By September 1974, Carlos had gotten on the wrong side of several South American regimes for miscellaneous murders.

services to the site. The facility uses city water, but the shelter uses septic tanks for sewage disposal. Hardee said the new utility scheme required new blueprints and new permits, but all those steps are done. Following a meeting next week, crews will begin work on the four-acre site. The 11,200-square-foot shelter will feature the latest passive heating and cooling techniques to curb expenses, said Hardee. Cleaning and maintenance design features of the county's Animal Control Shelter were borrowed and improved upon in the society's facility, Hardee said. Future plans call for replacement of the society's offices. Hardee said the society has about $351,000 for the project and has several fund-raising events planned to raise the balance needed.

In other society matters this week:

• The society's revolving door to the executive director's office whirled again Tuesday when Barry Black was terminated. Society president Steven Mason said the position was eliminated in an effort to reduce expenses. Black was hired eight months ago to replace Krista Morgan, fired last October when the board of directors became dissatisfied with her performance.

"We've eliminated six slots during the past 90 days or so to reduce expenses," said Mason. "One of our problems was we were paying about $30,000 a month in payroll, but we weren't taking in $30,000 a month."

Mason said the six "slots" had been filled with full- and part-time employees. Volunteers will fill their positions.

Ironically, Black had recently received a raise to $26,000 a year. Mason said the board expected him to act as primary fundraiser for the society, but he had no skills in that area. Otherwise, he did a fine job, Mason said.

Mason said the society is seeking a professional fundraiser to work on commission or salary to raise money for the society.

It was not the first time the society has eliminated a paid director in a cost-saving measure. The board dismissed Diane Albers in September 1992 to trim her $25,000 annual salary. After board members operated day-to-day functions of the shelter for about a year, they hired Krista Morgan in September 1993 to take charge. Ten weeks later, Morgan was ousted and Black was subsequently hired three months later.

• Mason was re-elected to the president's position by fellow board members at Wednesday's meeting. Orlando lawyer Eric Eide was elected vice president. Pat Boden was re-elected secretary and Pat Wiseman was re-elected treasurer.

grader's suicide are still being investigated, the school wasted no time in helping his friends grieve.

His life is being celebrated without dwelling on his untimely death, Shupe said.

He said there will be about a half dozen counselors available to those students who still need to work out their feelings today.

As the students gathered up their books and prepared to head home at the end of the day yesterday, however, there were not the usual announcements and reminders blasted over the intercom system.

Books were closed quietly and the ballad by popular singer Bryan Adams, "Everything I Do, I Do For You" was played softly throughout the school.

Some of the students wrote letters to bid their friend farewell. Others left messages on his locker. Others wrote poems and stories about the things he had shared with them and said goodbye.

Still others created a colorful banner which will hang in the young man's honor in the school.

It was also decided that the school will purchase a tree that will be planted in his honor on the school campus later in the year.

"He was a very kind and likeable young man," Shupe said. "He was popular with the other students. Some of the students had known him for many years."

Democrats were proposing to spend too much on crime. Not much of an argument when polls show Americans consider the nightly death toll the most important problem confronting the country.

The Democrats had a counter to that anyway. It wasn't "pork" that the Republicans really objected to, they said, but "guns."

Guns? The Republicans barely mentioned guns in the debate, but the Democrats did. "It's guns, guns, guns, guns, guns," that motivated Republican opposition, said Sen. Joseph Biden, Democratic floor manager.

The Democrats sensed that the American people have formed a consensus on gun control: They want it. The National Rifle Association still is able to flood the Capitol with faxes and shower its friends with campaign donations, but in the end it couldn't raise a defense for leaving AK-47s and grenade launchers on the streets.

It took weekend negotiations and minor Democratic concessions and a Sunday afternoon debate to revive it. It almost died in the Senate on Thursday too, but six Republicans came to the Democrats' rescue.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., retiring from politics and with nothing to gain or lose, said he felt "lousy, just terrible" abandoning his party, but the nation needed a crime bill. He said there were plenty of other issues on which the Republicans could draw a difference with the Democrats: crime shouldn't be one.

Five other Republicans gave similar reasons. After the fight was all but over and passage of the bill was inevitable, Danforth stood in the back of the Senate chamber and spelled out his reasons for his action. He was in favor of what the Republicans called "pork" and what the Democrats called crime prevention.

Double the number of prisons in American every decade, he said, and you'll still have Americans covering in their homes, cursing the dark, afraid of their streets. Put a cop on every corner, he said, and you won't control crime.

Prevention's the answer, said Danforth. What's wrong, he asked, with midnight basketball leagues for young men with time on their hands? With keeping schools open into the night in places where the streets are unsafe? With job training programs and counseling?

The measure now goes to the White House for Clinton's signature.

School are pushing to force the district to ensure the student population at Seminole will be equal to the other district schools.

With fewer students, the school earns less state and federal funds to finance the programs they have.

The court-ordered desegregation of Seminole County schools mandates that the school must maintain "not substantially less" than 2,000 students. While other district high schools have struggled with overcrowding, Seminole has remained about 200 students under the 2,000 enrollment figure.

According to Evans, the U.S. Department of Justice will review the rezoning process along the way to make sure that all moves comply with the desegregation order.

The district timeline calls for the final rezoning plan to be adopted on July 11, 1995.

Guns

may have reduced the strength of some of the other parts of the bill.

"Look at it this way," Nelson said, "Clinton has been the best thing for the gun business in a long time, at least over the short term."

Nelson explained that in 1989, President George Bush approved legislation restricting customs from allowing certain weapons to be imported unless they were directly connected with sports. "There were all types of guns on that list," Nelson said, "and they have stopped coming into the country, but it hasn't made any difference in crime."

Sheriff Ealinger agrees. "All of the gun legislation we have had to date has had no effect on controlling crime," he said.

Other businesses selling some of the weapons classified as assault-type guns, say there has been no relatively large influx of buyers because of the possibility of this law passing.

"We had an influx of people looking for these guns about a month and a half ago," Nelson said, "when they first started talking about this, but I would say that sales right now are about normal."

Longwood Police Chief Greg Manning also commented about the gun portion of the legislation, saying that he didn't believe it would help reduce crime.

"It isn't going to make any difference," he said. "There are enough weapons out there now, if we stop importation or production, nothing will change."

Manning called the measure a "Smoking Gun," saying that it was just enacted to make some people look good before an election.

"We can't control drugs from being made, imported or used," Manning said, "so why should we expect this new gun control measure to help reduce crime?"

Will Congress recess kill health reform plan?

By NANCY BERAG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Disappointed by another setback on health reform, President Clinton nonetheless insists that it's too soon to write off any action this year.

In fact, the White House is hoping a two-week break in Congress' work on health care will help cool tempers strained by the rancorous crime debate and foster a better climate for compromise.

"I don't think the recess will kill it," Clinton said. "I think we just have to let this thing develop a little bit and see what happens."

Chief of Staff Leon Panetta acknowledged that the White House would have preferred that Congress work straight through August to rescue the centerpiece of Clinton's domestic agenda.

But as the Senate made plans Thursday to beat a quick retreat after finishing work on the crime bill, Panetta jokingly admitted he "wouldn't want to stand at the exit door" blocking their escape.

"It's been a long, hard summer," he said. "They're exhausted and, frankly, I think all of us are not sure that the best product would be produced in that atmosphere."

With the House already in recess, the White House believes the two-week break will give a bipartisan team of senators known as the "mainstream" group more time to negotiate toward a compromise with Democratic leaders.

Even as senators prepared to head home, work on the compromise crawled forward. Members of the bipartisan group said they would have their amendments drafted and ready for delivery today to the Senate majority and minority leaders.

Clinton said he wanted to see how the senators' talks progress and added that in the meantime, "I think the less I say about it, the better."

Conservative Republicans saw the agreement to take a break as the death knell for health reform in 1994.

"This is a dead body that they've been dragging around for the last two weeks," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

With legislators hoping to adjourn for the year in early October, there is little time left to find common ground in a Congress that is deeply divided.

And there is still a considerable gap between Clinton's call for guaranteed health insurance for all Americans and the mainstream group's work on a plan that would provide coverage for about 92 percent of the population.

As Election Day approaches, most legislators are anxious to get out of Washington to go home and campaign. But at the same time, they don't want to leave without being able to point to some action on health reform.

Polls show Americans are wrestling with conflicting emotions as well.

Many are eager for health reform but worried about how it will affect them personally. A Gallup survey for CNN and USA Today found 39 percent of Americans would be angry if health reform did not pass this year, while 47 percent said they would be relieved.

Paul Begala, a political consultant who advises the White House, predicted legislators would get an earful from voters while they're home and come back motivated to find a compromise.

"What they'll hear more and more is 'I don't want partisan posturing. I want a solution,'" Begala said.

Many of those still holding out hope for action on health care in 1994 believe Congress will come up with something considerably short of the president's call for universal coverage. But the White House is doing its best to dispel the notion that Clinton will grudgingly settle for less than he's demanded.

Land

Orlando and Tampa.

Since the swamp came under state control as an area of critical concern in 1974, ranchers and farmers have waged an increasingly bitter, losing battle to keep tightening development restrictions from eroding the inherent value of their land.

State officials recently insisted that no more than one home could be built for every 20 acres in the heart of the swamp.

Whether landowners had any intention of developing their land or not, the restrictions have caused their property values to plummet.

"Who's going to want to buy my land with those restrictions on it?" asks Claude Smoak, who owns 1,000 acres in the Lake County area of the swamp where he raises cattle and grows soy.

"They are basically taking money away from me — real dollars."

Under the Green Swamp plan Saunders pushed through the Legislature this year, the state will attempt to pay landowners the difference between the full market value of their land and its undeveloped value.

The owner can continue to use the land for such purposes as cattle grazing, hunting and fishing, but cannot develop it.

Murder

burner when she picked up a knife and stabbed him after he punched her in the face once and was attempting to punch her again.

Defense attorney Mark O'Mara described Richmond's death as a sad, unfortunate event but that Roger was in fear for her life, even asking two doctors if they would go home with her that night.

"Michele thought it was reasonable to think someone was going to die that night," the attorney said, describing "the look" Richmond had on his face at the club.

Plotnick questioned why, during "the flight of a lifetime," Roger would stop and make tea, leaving the stove burner on where she testified Richmond tried to burn her face. Instead of hitting Richmond with the tea pot or splashing him with boiling water, Plotnick argued she wasn't going to take it anymore. "She got real mad, grabbed for something...boom...stabbed him."

Although Plotnick also said Roger should have gone somewhere else in the residence to avoid the ultimate confrontation, O'Mara argued Richmond blocked the only escape route from the kitchen.

In the family coverup of the death, Plotnick said the Rogers "circled the wagons," telling investigators the last time Richmond was seen he was getting into a white van with unknown individuals and heading to South Florida to do tree work in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew. He hammered away at the continuing lies told in the coverup. Even when questioned by police and given an opportunity to state self-defense in Richmond's disappearance, Roger stuck to the coverup story. Richmond's body was never found.

"Don't let a stupid and absurd decision of a 75-year old man impact on Michele's fate," O'Mara urged the jury. "Don't convict her because the dead was desecrated. He's (Richmond) dead. She (Roger) killed him. All you've got to decide is (did she act with a) depraved mind." Trial testimony revealed Will Roger burned Richmond's body, mixed the remains with concrete and then dropped the blocks into the ocean. His son, Kenneth help his father remove Richmond's body, rolled in carpet from the murder scene and drop the blocks in the ocean. The elder Roger said he alone burned the body and made the concrete blocks.

The defense attorney urged the jury to focus on the facts of the murder case, not the coverup.

The ownership of the condominium may be an important component in the outcome of the case. If it is appealed, under the law, a person has the right to defend his home against an intruder who threatens great harm. In other instances, a person must make reasonable attempts to flee rather than strike back. The defense contended Richmond had only a few items at the residence the night of the stabbing after having moved out earlier during one of the couple's frequent breakups.

After a morning-long recess called by Judge Newman Brock to research the law, O'Mara reopened his case to submit the deed as evidence. Agnes Roger bought the condominium for cash with her daughter having right of survivorship. Michele testified she was making regular payments to repay her mother. Richmond lived there off and on during their relationship but contributed little money to repay the loan.

The jury was instructed that Roger should have made every reasonable effort to flee the confrontation with Richmond the night of the incident, short of leaving the home.

No-Tap at Bowl America

SANFORD — Bowl America-Sanford will conduct its weekly No-Tap Tournament this evening beginning at 9:30 p.m.

The entry fee is $15 and strikes are awarded when a bowler knocks down nine or 10 pins. Play is handicapped as follows: bowlers with averages under 140 begin each game with strikes in the first three frames; 140-159, strikes in the first two frames; 160-179, a strike in the first frame; 180 and over, no handicap strikes.

All players bowl three games of qualifying, the top 50 percent bowling a fourth game to decide the cash winners (hopefully down to six places), including the top three bowlers who will compete in a TV-style roll-off for the top money.

Two strikepots also will be awarded.

Sweep puts The A.C. Boys into senior lead

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — Nate Hall poured in 34 points to lead The A.C. Boys to pair of runaway victories Thursday night to take over sole possession of the lead in the Sanford Recreation Department Senior Summer Basketball League at the Sanford Middle School Gymnasium.

Tony Davja scored 18 of his game high 17 points and Hall added eight of his 12 in the opening half as The A.C. Boys raced to a 38-17 halftime lead and went on to dump C.E.I. Roofing, 63-44, in the opening game of the evening.

The A.C. Boys then came back in the final game of the night to knock the Wreckers out of a share of the league lead with a 68-41 thumping.

The game was actually close in the first half, with The A.C. Boys holding just a 27-18 advantage. But in the second half Hall broke loose for 18 points to turn the game into a rout.

The middle game found Sanford A.A.U. moving into second place in the league standings by holding the Runnin' Rebels, who were also tied for the league lead at the start of the night's action, to just 15 second half points in a 54-38 triumph.

The A.C. Boys are now 4-2 on the season, with Sanford A.A.U. just a half-game back at 3-2. The Runnin' Rebels and Wreckers are tied for third at 2-3 and C.E.I. Roofing is 1-4.

Next Tuesday (August 30), Sanford A.A.U. plays The A.C. Boys at 8:30 p.m. and the Wreckers at 8:30 p.m.; and C.E.I. Roofing takes on the Runnin' Rebels at 7:30 p.m.

Joining Davja and Hall in double figures for The A.C. Boys in the opening game was Bruce McCray with 10. Donald Harrang paced C.E.I. Roofing with 13, while Brian Johnson added 10.

In the Sanford A.A.U. victory, Brad Traina tallied 12 of his 18 points in the first half and Chuck Smith scored eight of his 10 in the second half. Jeff Merthle and Lee Taylor scored eight points each to lead the Runnin' Rebels.

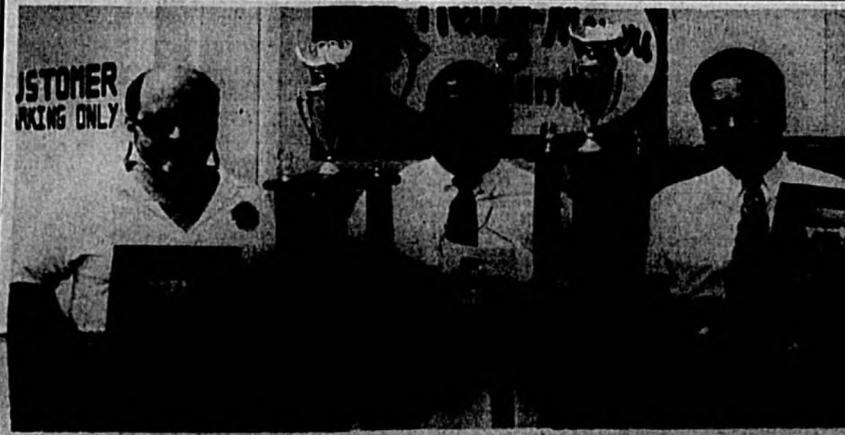

In The A.C. Boys' second win of the night, Tony Smith scored 14 points to join Hall in double figures. Eric Roberts and Andrian Mitchell topped the Wreckers with 13 and 12 points, respectively.

Modified players wanted

By DEAN SMITH
Herald Sports Writer

SANFORD — Softball players, are you ready for something new?

The Sanford Recreation Department is looking for players who want a little more physical challenge out of their game.

The SRD is hoping to start a modified fastpitch league. Modified has proven to be very successful in other central Florida leagues.

The modified game allows the pitcher to throw the ball as hard as he can, underhand, but unlike the true fastpitch game, the pitcher cannot windmill his arm before throwing and cannot turn his hip and shoulder toward the plate which would allow the ball to be thrown with a lot more velocity.

In hopes of getting the league started, the Sanford Recreation Department is holding "tryouts" for anyone interested in playing.

"We just want to get as many people to come out and see if they want to play," said Sanford Recreation Department supervisor Rocky Ellingworth. "They do not have to be part of a team. We hope enough players will show up to make up several teams so we can start a league, and we'll go from there."

Those interested in learning more about the modified-pitch are invited to come out to Pinehurst Park on West 24th Street (between Hungry Howies and Badcock Furniture off of 17-92) this coming Monday night, August 29th, at 6:30 p.m.

There will also be a practice at Chase Park, behind the Seminole County School Board on 13th Street (Celery Avenue), on Wednesday night, August 31st, at 6:30 p.m.

The league will be sanctioned with the ASA (Amateur Softball Association) and play under ASA modified-pitch rules.

The entry fee for the league, which will run for at least 10 weeks, is $250 for teams already registered with the ASA and $285 for teams not yet registered with the ASA.

A $10 or $15 fee is also required for any non-Sanford resident. The $10 fee is for individuals, while a family, from two members on up, can pay a $15 fee. The non-resident fee is good for one year, from October 1 through September 30.

Culverhouse loses battle with cancer

By FRED GOODALL
AP Sports Writer

TAMPA — The death of Tampa Bay Buccaneers owner Hugh Culverhouse rekindled speculation about the future of the NFL's longest franchise of the past decade.

Culverhouse, 75, died Thursday in New Orleans after a 20-month battle with lung cancer. He is survived by his wife and two children, none of whom are active in running the team.

Since January 1993, when a biopsy confirmed a recurrence of cancer in the only owner the franchise has had, the Bucca have been run by a three-man trust appointed by Culverhouse.

Although there has been speculation for months that the club might be sold after Culverhouse's death, trustee Stephen Story maintains the franchise is not for sale and that he, Jack Donlan and Fred Cone are committed to fulfilling the owner's goal of fielding a winning team in Tampa.

"We do not regard this structure as a temporary arrangement," said Story, Culverhouse's law partner.

"However, it is inevitable that rumors and speculation about the future of the team will continue to circulate. Like other NFL teams, we will be mentioned by all cities which aspire to have teams and by wishful ownership groups seeking franchises. We cannot allow these rumors to distract us. ... Our total focus is on building a franchise of which Tampa Bay can be proud."

Truth in labeling

FDA policy will extend to restaurant menus

If the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) gets its way, you may soon see fewer health claims and health symbols on restaurant menus. And the misnomer "diet plate" may disappear altogether.

Why? In a surprise move, the Clinton Administration is reinstating the original intention of the labeling law that says restaurants must comply with the regulations by sometime in 1994. The new stance follows in the wake of a lawsuit by the consumer groups Public Citizen and Center for Science in the Public Interest, arguing that the Bush administration's exemption of restaurant menus was illegal.

Restaurateurs are crying "no fair", while consumer groups are cheering over the demise of unsubstantiated or downright misleading assertions. The fallout, at least at first, may well be a lack of any claims.

Until now, there has been an abundance of dubious claims of good-for-you items on menus. For example, although often flagging truly healthy choices — sometimes with little hearts, pyramids, or apples — some establishments have touted suspicious-sounding "low-calorie" cheesecake and "light" pork chili with cheese and sour cream. Or worse, this gem: "extra-lean ground chuck," which is impossible. By labeling standards, extra-lean must contain no more than five percent fat by weight; ground chuck, by definition, is never that lean.

Small establishments won't be expected to analyze the nutrient content of all their recipes, some of which change daily. They simply must be able to show they have a reasonable basis for claims of "light" or "healthy" items.

Restaurant chains, which offer standardized menus, should have no problem complying with the new rules. Many of the national fast-food chains already provide nutrition information, though you may have to request it in writing.

In the end, consumers will be the winners. Though the FDA will allow greater flexibility for nutrition and health claims on menus than on packaged foods, there will be some assurance that wherever such claims appear, they are backed by something more than a restaurant owner's fancy!

Flowers cause grief at thank-you time

DEAR ABBY: Will you please do a tremendous service for many, and remind those who send flowers to a funeral to please request that their full names and addresses be written on their cards?

I have spent days trying to find out who some of the folks are who sent flowers to my mother's funeral. (One card said, "My deepest sympathy, Betty." No last name, no city. Just "Betty.")

You would think that when a florist takes an order for flowers, he or she would insist that all cards be signed with full names and addresses, since he is the one the family will pester later when trying to track down the senders to thank them.

DEAR STILL: Not only should flowers for funerals have cards with full names and addresses, but all gifts should have two such cards to identify the sender: one on the inside, which invariably gets thrown out with the tissue paper; and one on the outside, which is sure to be illegible due to water damage or rough handling.

DEAR ABBY: In the summer of 1944, I met and fell in love with a wonderful Marine. I knew he loved me, too, but for reasons I won't go onto, we didn't marry then.

I tried hard to forget him, but I guess I never really did. I still have his letters, and when I read them and play all those tunes, "I Walk Alone," "I'll Be Seeing You," "Saturday Night is the Loneliest Night in the Week," etc. I feel he is near.

I know he is still living in the Northeast and I would love to see him again.

While trying to forget him, I married a guy I'd known all through school, but it lasted only five years. I guess I didn't love him enough.

Abby, I am told I'm too nice-looking to stay alone, but I think I am one of those women who can love only once. I've never met a man who can measure up to my Marine. Any suggestions?

SEMPER FIDELIS
DEAR SEMPER: Quietly investigate and find out if he's married or single. If he's single, maybe you can pick up where you left off. It's worth a try. Good luck.

Aggressive behavior caused by denial

DEAR MARY: Have you ever noticed people who have had a drug or drinking problem often have an awful time getting along with other people, even after they're sober? Why do so many drinkers have such a nasty streak? I've seen them fly off the handle over nothing, even when they're stone sober, and I really feel sorry for little kids whose mom or dad is drinking too much. What do you suppose causes people to act so aggressive when they've been drinking?

DON'T LIKE FIGHTS

DEAR DON'T LIKE: Many experts feel that a part of the addictive process, whether the addiction is to alcohol or other drugs, is the development of a denial system. This denial system functions as a kind of wall supporting the addiction by reassuring the individual that any problem that exists is either too big to overcome or is the fault of someone or something else. With this system in place, and as the person continues to become more addicted, their behavior becomes more focused on the addictive lifestyle. At this point several personality traits or behaviors are commonly seen.

- The person starts to lie, even when it's easier to tell the truth.
- The person blames other people or external circumstances for everything that goes wrong.
- The person starts to

DRUG COUNSELOR

withdraw emotionally from other people.

Unfortunately, this process becomes circular, they use their drug to relieve their frustrations, then they act out and explain it away; thus the commitment to their addiction gets stronger. If an addict, whether alcoholic or other drug related, is to ever recover, most experts feel that the first thing they must do is break these behavioral and thought patterns, even before they are completely free from physical dependency.

How illness affects your sense of taste

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm 82 and had pneumonia eight months ago. During the illness, I took hundreds of antibiotics. Since then, I've lost my sense of taste and everything resembles straw. What's happened? Are the antibiotics to blame? Is there any medication I can take for this problem?

DEAR READER: Serious illnesses, such as pneumonia, involving the respiratory tract may temporarily alter taste and smell. The reason for this is not entirely clear, but the condition may be related to congestion and swelling around nerve endings that cause them to malfunction for several weeks.

I doubt that the antibiotics played a role, although this is a remote possibility; some antibiotics are known to affect nerve function. In most cases, the senses of smell and taste return within a year. Therefore, be patient. If you're still troubled by the symptoms in four or five more months, check with your doctor or request a referral to an ear-nose-and-throat specialist.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My late husband was diagnosed with hypertension of the lungs. He also had sleep apnea. What can you tell me about these conditions?

DEAR READER: Pulmonary hypertension is, literally, high blood pressure in the lungs. It is caused by a variety of ailments, including blood clots in the lungs, scleroderma (an autoimmune disease), previous lung surgery, emphysema -- or any disorder that causes a low oxygen level in the lungs. Therefore, I am intrigued by the association of sleep apnea and pulmonary hypertension in your husband. Patients with sleep apnea stop breathing for varying periods during the night. The cause is unknown, but this phenomenon could certainly reduce oxygen in pulmonary tissue, and -- over time -- increase blood pressure in the lungs.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

Here are a couple of signs spotted in Canada. In Vancouver, "For your added convenience, this Post Office will be closed on Saturdays." And on Highway 11 in Ontario, "You are now halfway to the North Pole." That reminds me of the famous two-liner:

"Do you know the way to Town X?"

"Yes, but you can't get there from here."

Today's deal was played in a Canadian event, and South showed that he could circumnavigate the apparently unavoidable diamond finesse.

After a takeout double of a pre-emptive opening bid, the advancer -- as the doubler's partner is called -- is assumed to hold six points. He makes a simple response unless holding noticeably more than this. However, after North cue-bid to show a very strong hand with spade support, South was happy to cue-bid his top heart card. North needed no more encouragement.

Maybe West should have led a diamond, which kills the contract. But he led his singleton, optimistically hoping his partner had the heart ace.

After East allowed dummy's 10 to win the first trick, declarer cashed dummy's spade king (hoping West had a singleton honor) and followed with a trump to his ace, getting the bad news.

South continued with a heart to dummy's ace, ran the heart jack and played a heart to his king. He cashed dummy's top clubs, eliminating the rounded suits, as hearts and clubs are known.

With his preparations complete, declarer cast as a trump. East won with the queen and had to lead a diamond away from his king into dummy's A-Q tenace.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bode Ouel

YOUR BIRTHDAY
August 27, 1994

Lots of changes are indicated for the year ahead, both in your social life and where your career is concerned. These will be welcomed alterations from which you might derive unique benefits.

VIROO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You are now in a cycle where you could receive unusual advantages through persons you know socially. Keep trying to add new names to your growing list of friends. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) A complicated matter that has caused you concern looks like it is going to be resolved to your satisfaction today through a mysterious chain of circumstances. Keep hoping.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Persons who meet you for the first time will be duly impressed today, especially if they are members of the opposite gender. Your charm and charisma are very strong at this time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Financial conditions continue to trend in your favor. Gains are a possibility through individuals who are closely involved with your work or career.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In a situation where you have a leading role, someone might attempt to usurp some of your authority today. Fortunately, his/her efforts may be futile.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Two associates might go out of their way to do favors for you today that they wouldn't do for others. The only condition they may request is that their deeds be kept confidential.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) If there is someone you met recently to whom you are attracted, don't disguise your feelings. This person has been waiting for an explicit signal from you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

Probabilities for success look hopeful in an area where you're motivated to look out for others, as well as yourself. Luck is enhanced where unity is stressed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try to exchange ideas today with individuals whose intelligence you respect. Each could contribute to a larger mosaic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your thoughts and concepts could be rather ingenious today, especially when making money is concerned. Don't be afraid to make small experiments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Although you might play the lesser role in a partnership arrangement today, you should come out as well as your counterpart in whatever transpires.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your material ambitions have an excellent chance of being fulfilled today, especially two matters which are very closely related. Each will possess a definite distinction, however.
