Masaryk Speaks

The Foreign Minister of Czechoslovakia, Jan Masaryk, son of that country's first president, attempted in an article in the August Rotarian, to explain his country's stand in the world of today.

He tells of the age-old animosity between the 11 million Czechs and 20 million Germans, and the latter's continued effort to swallow its smaller neighbor. Czechoslovakia alone would be unable to stop another incursion of Germany, which might, he says, come from the east. He is particularly anxious to have friendly relations with Russia, with whom they feel kinship as Slavs, and with whom they have never had any trouble.

Masaryk says that the Czechoslovaks remember clearly, though without bitterness, that their close alliance with the Western democracies did not help or save them when the German flood inundated their country. Nevertheless, he insists that they are friendly with the democracies, and have a great interest in American newspapers, magazines and movies. The people study English as well as Russian and have much in common with Americans.

Masaryk's explanation of "Czechoslovakia's alliance with Russia" sounds clear and reasonable. His unambiguous frankness leaves no cloud on the issue. They have a right to seek protection where they feel sure of getting it. It is to be hoped that they will not be misled by the propaganda that the alliance will continue to be a peaceable one, but somehow, who would.

Interest in Brazil

The visit of U. S. Secretary Snyder to Brazil, while ostensibly a pleasure trip, covers a week's tour of coffee plantations, mines, factories, docks and farms, according to Eerie Hill, who writes from Rio de Janeiro.

Snyder is accompanied by the American ambassador to Brazil, and the Brazilian envoy to the United States, as well as by a staff of eight advisers. The Brazilian cabinet has been engaged in formulating a request for loans from the United States, but Snyder gives no encouragement in that direction. His idea is to sponsor the industrial and agricultural development of this South American country by direct participation of American capital and know-how.

If Brazilian enterprises can be stimulated by a transfusion of American knowledge, practical ability and capital, the hope is that they might be engaged in profitable projects. Uncle Sam should go easy about handling out mercian dollars. Too many of them have gone down the drain with little real progress made.

The Sleep Problem

More and more the question arises, how and where are people going to sleep? It isn't a question of noise, although some of that element enters the picture, too. Probably never before in this country has the mere problem of lodging been so pressing.

Millions of men home from the wars in this and other countries have no place to sleep. They are not naturally bad in the Old World, but it was worse here than it was before. And naturally there is complaining.

"All I am asking," says a disheartened family man, "is to have a place to sleep. My wife and I are decent people. I'm willing to rent a house for any price I can pay, and I'm willing to pay for the kids' board."

But in many cases it is almost impossible to make arrangements even on such a basis. So families are scattered around in almost any make-shift way, and there is not merely discomfort, but despair and even the beginning of a mental breakdown. British Crisis deals $6,319,792,047.

Attlee said British armed strength would be reduced by 420,000 men by next March. The forces numbered 1,297,300 men on July 1.

"An exhaustive inquiry has been instituted into the whole future of our defense policy," he said.

At another point, the Labor government leader said Great Britain was increasing the rate of her troop withdrawal from overseas.

"Despite these accelerations in the rate of withdrawal, there is no change in our foreign policy or in the defense policy which underlies our foreign policy," Attlee asserted.

The Prime Minister said his Socialist government would "leave to take some measure of control over the employment of labor" in order to stimulate production. He continued:

"This will involve some sacrifice of individual liberty, though as little as possible. It may be necessary to take steps to limit employment on less essential work."

Attlee said the government also would "take action" against any industries operated with "inefficiency or lack of will."

To save dollars, Attlee said Britain would take these steps:

Permit movie makers showing films here to convert only a fourth of their earnings into non-British currency. Permit Britons overseas to spend only $140 on foreign vacations in the 14-month period beginning Oct. 1, instead of $300 the yearly period as at present. Cut by one third the basic gasoline ration of 11 gallons a month for private motorists with 10-horsepower cars.

Attlee said the government would strive for a 20 per cent increase in domestic farm production and "press ahead" with plans for the expansion of production in the colonial empire.

"We shall apply ourselves to further development of our resources at home," he said, "We must concentrate attention on goods for export and the production of all those things which give us imports. This will mean cutting out non-essentials. We must increase our total output so that we can stand on our own legs as soon as possible."

Attlee, in his grim statement outlining the Socialist regime's plans to overcome its dollar famine, said Great Britain had proposed negotiations with the United States for revision of two classes in the loan agreement.

"I am glad to say Mr. Marshall (U. S. Secretary of State) replied agreeing to those discussions," he said. "They will not cut across the proceedings of the Paris conference."

His reference was to international conversations on Marshall's proposal of American aid for European economic recovery, a proposal shunned by Russia and the Eastern European countries in her sphere.

Attlee said the loan clauses to be discussed were the agreements on sterling convertibility and non-discrimination in trade, both targets in Churchill's address to the opposition Conservative Party.

Under the non-discrimination clause, Britain may not cut down her purchases in the United States in order to increase them in non-dollar countries.

Kiwanis Meet

living a Christian life.

"It is all too easy for youth to put religious life on a taken-for-granted basis," he declared. "They need to find out why they are Christians." He stressed the need for families playing and having devotion together, to develop more recreation together and attend less to paid recreation, and urged that business men aid in youth development programs.

Miss Mary Beth Joing told of the rapid growth of the Youth Caravan program during the past 15 years, and said that this year 80 teams are touring the United States and Cuba. She outlined the program as work, study, play and worship necessary to train members of the Caravan. Miss Naomi Rupert entertained the Kiwanians by leading them on an imaginary lion hunt and making them go through a lot of motions.

Howard Monahan announced that an interclub meeting with Orlando Kiwanis will be held on Sept. 10. E. C. Harper announced plans for a ladies night program.

Meyer Testimony

while he was not even in this country.

Meyer said the expense for Hall covered five or six days in January, 1944, and included four to six people.

"Why were you paying these bills for Col. Hall and charging it up to aircraft?" Ferguson wanted to know.

"Here we go again," Meyer said. "Business."

He has contended time and again in his appearances, starting last Friday, that he entertained freely and that he was instructed by Ferguson to charge such entertainment to Hughes aircraft. He reiterated again today that he kept his accounts "loosely."

Meyer read into the record a long list of smaller sums he said he spent on Hall in the same period.

Ferguson asked how Meyer learned that Hall had taken over from Roosevelt. Meyer said possibly through the Hughes company.

"Did you spend any money on Hall prior to this time?" Ferguson asked.

"I don't think so," Meyer replied.

He added that the entertainment occurred in Los Angeles.

Ferguson asked how Hall happened to be in Los Angeles.

"He obviously was there to look over our plant," Meyer said.

One of the Hughes contracts was a $22,000,000 one for reconnaissance planes. Ferguson read items of $48.65, $10 and $5 for dinner and tips at the Beachcombers Hotel, and $12 for lunch at Bonanza.

Ferguson said it was not clear whether the total bill covered entertainment for Hall alone, and Meyer agreed that "it definitely is not clear."

Ferguson—But it all is charged to Hughes aircraft.

Meyer—Right.

Ferguson—Whom was it for if it wasn't for Hall?

Meyer—I can't remember. As I have said before, I kept accounts loosely and (recorded) the dates and the money to the best of my knowledge.

Ferguson—I see some entertainment down at the bottom here for gifts. Why was that charged to Hughes aircraft?

Meyer—That's what I am trying to figure out myself.

When Hughes reached Washington, he told reporters he was ready to repeat under oath "Everything I have said" about the investigation of his contracts.

Truman's Trip

complex and unwieldy" that there is "grave danger that it would impede rather than promote the government's efforts to encourage scientific research."

The bill would have established a national science foundation as an independent agency to promote research in national defense and other fields, abolishing the present office of scientific research and development.

It would have had responsibility for developing a national policy for encouraging basic research and education in the mathematical, medical, physical and other sciences, as well as those related to defense.

He said government expenditures for scientific research and development now amount to hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

"Under present world conditions, this work is vital to our national welfare and security," Mr. Truman said. "We can not afford to jeopardize it by imposing upon it an organization so likely to prove unworkable."

In another sharp criticism of the legislation, the President said the qualifications prescribed for foundation members would mean most of them would have been people employed by organizations eligible for grants.

"Thus," he asserted, "there is created a conflict of interest which would inevitably give rise to suspicions of favoritism regardless of the complete integrity of the members of the foundation."

Hughes Accuses

template that anyone who has been in public life as long as I have—in the state legislature, as governor, in the house and the senate—could, on such short acquaintance with Hughes x x x make so bald a proposition as he here describes.

"It sounds more like Hollywood than it does Washington."

Pausing for a few seconds, Brewster said: "I can assure you that I never did."

Hughes told the committee that Brewster made the offer to drop the hearings "in so many words" at a luncheon in Brewster's hotel suite here the week of Feb. 10, 1947.

"During that lunch," Hughes testified, "the senator in so many words told me that the hearings need not go on if I agreed to merge the TWA airline with Pan American and agreed to go along with the bill for a single overseas airline."

Brewster has denied any direct or indirect connection with Pan American. He had been favorable to legislation which would set up a single overseas airline as the "chosen instrument" of the government.

Hughes made his charge only after a long exchange with Chairman Ferguson (R-Mich.) of the subcommittee conducting the hearings.

When Hughes took the stand at 1:42 P. M. (EST), he first asked more time to read testimony he had given previously in closed-door sessions of the committee.

Ferguson told him the committee was ready to hear the "side issues" of Hughes' transcontinental argument with Brewster.

"Is it your desire to go into this matter now?" he asked Hughes.

"It is not my desire, but I am willing to go ahead," Hughes replied.

"We have no desire to force you to do this," Ferguson said.

"You don't have to force me," the airplane builder retorted. "I am very happy to go into it."

He said he had "made statements to the press" about Brewster, the chairman of the full senate committee, and he stands by those. He asked, however, to be permitted to call witnesses of his own choosing and to cross-examine Brewster.

"The committee won't give Senator Brewster the right to cross-examine you now, will you have the right to cross-examine him?" Ferguson said. He added that Hughes could submit written questions to be asked Brewster when the latter takes the stand.

"That involves a certain delay," Hughes said.

"Yes," conceded Ferguson, "but the committee is accustomed to delay."

Hughes said he didn't want to "launch into this matter and have my hands tied."

Ferguson promised to consider calling any witnesses Hughes might name, as soon as his own appearance on the stand has been completed.

Hughes related that he conferred with Sam Trippe, head of Pan American, and promised to give Trippe his answer on Meyer in 30 days.

After conferring with Trippe, Hughes said he asked Nosh Dietrich, vice president of Hughes Tool Co., to go into the details of the merger proposition.

"Dietrich reported that he didn't think it would be possible to make an equitable transaction with Mr. Trippe," Hughes testified. "I then told Dietrich to drop the matter there, at least for the time being."

The merger plans manufacturer said that next Francis Flanagan, assistant counsel for the War Investigating Committee, came on the scene at the Hughes plant in California and started "acting very tough."

"It was apparent to me from the time it was the application of screws x x x after my failure to accede to the wishes of Mr. Trippe," Hughes said.

He said he wanted to correct a statement by Brewster that "it was my own idea for Mr. Flana-an to come to the coast.

He found a discussion of that in the record of the secret session, Hughes continued, and found that it came up after a talk about the number of man-hours spent on preliminary design on his 200-ton flying boat.

"It was for some such detail that I suggested that the committee send investigators to the coast," he said.

When Flanagan arrived, Hughes asserted "he wanted to go into Johnny Meyer's expenses account, and he said he knew there had been a $100,000 payoff" on the plane, and "What about it?"

In reply to a question, he said he does not recall when Flanagan showed up, but that "I know the timing was such I felt the two were definitely connected."

Hughes said "I have naturally been jealous of my reputation, and there is no question that the threat of publicity was a powerful weapon."

"I was exhausted fighting Mr. Trippe's political maneuvers in Washington," Hughes declared, and suggested they get together, so Trippe came to the coast.

Cross State Highway

new road is known as the Geneva or Mims Road. Recently a section of this road was completed east from the Lake Jessup Bridge through Geneva to Mims.

There are two proposed routes for tying in the completed section from the Lake Jessup Bridge with the present highway west of Sanford.

"One route proposes to take the road from the Lake Jessup Bridge along the river to Lake Monroe, thence along the lake, through the swamps, and connect with our Lakeshore Boulevard, and over part of the State Road No. 17 to the town of Lake Monroe, then southwesterly to the present state road. This will require a lot of expensive filling, and it might be reasonable to assume that considerable delay would be encountered because of the great expense."

Another proposed route is to go directly west on Geneva Avenue past the Country Club to a point near Twin Lakes, then northwesterly into the present road near Wilson's Corners. This route would open up new territory, would result in putting more values on the tax books, would be a shorter route, and would not throw additional traffic into our Lakeshore Boulevard, which is crowded with through north and south travel.

"Our Senators and Representatives have done some good work in getting the road completed as far as it is, so let's be on our toes and help push through to a speedy completion this link of the Cross State Highway."

equipment from virtually every greater Miami department, "we couldn't fight the fire because there was not enough water." He said exploding gasoline caused intense heat and prevented firemen from working in close to the blaze.

The buildings were used as repair hangers and storage facilities for the Air Transport Maintenance Company, the Peninsula Air Transport Co., and several smaller charter lines.

Marshall Kidwell, a mechanic for one of the charter airlines who turned in the alarm about 2:00 A. M., told firemen that "there was a small flash of light on the wing of the A-30 which quickly enveloped the whole plane. I ran for a fire extinguisher and the flames were out of control."

Daniel McLaughlin, also an airport employee, said that "an explosion accompanied the first flashes of fire and within a few minutes flames were leaping in every direction in the hangar."

Chase said that at least two fire engines were accosted by the blaze which raged uncontrolled until nearly 8:00 A. M.

No rain of consequence was in immediate prospect for most of the dry midwest topsoil, now gen-
