Trouble in France

They take their bank fallures in France rather seriousy. A pawnshop in one of the provinces failed the other day and 40 million dollars belonging to the people were lost. There were charges of robbery. The head of the institu-tion committed suicide. The people blamed the government. They demanded that the premier resign. But the chamber of deputies gave him a vote of confidence.

This by no means satisfied the people. They were determined to make him resign. Royalists and communists This by no means satisfied the people. They were determined to make him resign. Royalists and communists alike demanded a change of government. In the rioting that followed they fought side by side against police and soldiers. Class distinctions and political antipathies were forgotten in the frenzied desire to get even with the agents who had stolen their money and with those government officials who they thought had been derelict in their watchfulness.

Daladier is still premier and with the support of the deputies, the soldiers, and the police, he may be able to survive this crisis, but when the rank and file of the people become as highly incensed as they have in Paris during the past few days, anything is likely to happen. It is not improbable that the present republican form of government will have to give way to a military dictatorship in order to avoid the more serious ravages of communism.

A Diet For Children

One of the best features in the paternalistic developfirst ingredient of the alphabet ment of our government is the advice which the United States Children's Bureau is giving in the proper rearing and improvement of youngsters. According to Katherine Lenroot, assistant chief of this bureau, the proper diet for a child from two to sixteen years of age should include the following items:

Milk-One quart of whole milk daily-either fresh or prepared by diluting evaporated or dried milk. To this may be added other milk products, such as dried skim milk, cream, and cheese. Milk is indispensable in the child's Butter-On bread or other foods.

Egg-One daily. Vegetables-At least one serving daily of a green leafy egetable and one serving of some other colored vegetable. Spinach, turnip tops, beet tops, cabbage, kale, chard, carrots. green beans, peas, beets, tomatoes (fresh or canned), squash.

Many vegetables may be used raw-such as cabbage, carrots (grated), lettuce, celery, watercress, tomatoes, Other vegetables, such as turnips, onions, parsnips, cauliflower, may be used, but not to the exclusion of green leafy or

Fruit-At least one serving daily of a fresh fruit. without a country may find a ref. ()ranges, bananas, apples, or other fresh fruits in season. Cooked dried fruits, such as raisins, prunes, apricots, and peaches are valuable foods and should be used frequently in addition to fresh fruits. Other cooked fruits may be

> Cod-liver oil-Two to four teaspoonfuls daily especially in the North Temperate Zone.

> In addition: Other energy and body-building foods-Bread-Two or three times a day; whole-grain bread > at least once a day. Cereals-Hot cooked cereal once or twice a day, served with milk or cream.

Starchy vegetables-Potatoes, sweet potatoes, rice, barley, macaroni, or hominy once a day.

Meat or fish-Fresh lean meat or fish once a day possible. The foods recommended for undernourished chi dren are the same for any age group, but the older child, especially the child in his teens, needs larger quantities of each food than does the younger child. Undernourished children of all ages should have a quart of milk; children in their teens may drink more.
