Making A Man Of Him

The age over which the juvenile courts have jurisdiction has been raised in many states to 18 or even higher. This fact was brought out in a meeting of the National Council of Juvenile Court Judges in Chicago.

A half century or more ago, a fourteen-or fifteen-year-old was considered a man, and given a man's duties and responsibilities. He had faced life and grappled with its practical problems. He knew that no wood-chopping meant no warmth and that no crops and no well-developed livestock meant no food in the house.

The judges concluded that modern life does not teach a child cause and effect in any such practical way, and thus he is still a child at 18. If true, this is a sad commentary on modern life, and it seems unnecessary. There are many ways of learning about cause and effect beside choping wood and hoeing corn. Any intelligent parent with the will to do so can see that his child faces the consequences and make his own decisions. The trouble with the children coming before these judges is that they do not have intelligent, conscientious parents. So perhaps the judges are right in raising the age of maturity.

through II states. During this mileage, we had one detour less than o The judges concluded that modern life does not teach a child cause and effect in any such practical way, and are right in raising the age of maturity.

Trying to educate parents is beginning too late in the day to do juvenile delinquents much good. But making it plain to everyone that parenthood needs preparation, and s not to be entered into "lightly and unadvisedly", may have results in the long run.

Young United States

The death recently in Elliston, Va., of 85-year-old Mrs. Pearl Tyler Ellis, breaks a link that was only one generation removed from Washington's day. Mrs. Ellis, daughter of second wife, was the 14th child and last surviving offpring of one-time President John Tyler, who was nine years old when Washington died, Tyler's Virginia family knew the

Such a life as that of Mrs. Ellis, so close to the beginning days of the republic, brings home once more the fact that this, after all, is a very young nation.

More School Children

As a result of our rocketing birth rate during the war and postwar years, more than 5,000,000 children will be added to the elementary school population of the United States during the next decade, according to the Metropolitan

When school opens this fall, there will be about 2,500,000 ix-year-olds eligible for admittance to elementary school, and the number will increase each year until it reaches nearly 3,300,000 in 1953. The company calculates that the total elementary school age population will increase from its present 18,200,000 to more than 23,400,000 in 1956.

The number of children eligible to enter high school will for obtaining all the money that decrease this year and next, but thereafter the trend will is necessary for bringing deep be reversed and their number will jump from 2,200,000 in water to Sanford's front door. 1949 to more than 3,200,000 in 1961. The situation is considered sufficently serious to call urgently for "planning along practical lines in order that adequate provision be made for the education of the new crop of children.

There is a housing shortage here "This is particularly necessary in areas where schools are cause there are more people here already overcrowded," the Metropolitan points out, "and wanting houses than ever before, where, even now, there is a shortage of teachers."

Yes—way back vonder in the year 1935, a capitalist moved to Florida from another State. He purchased property in Sanford and in other cities in Florida, and one day he mentioned to the that fire insurance rates in Florida were considerable higher than in his Itome State, and he thought perhaps the reason for this was that the mutual fire insurance companies were not active in

He had carried most of his insurance in Mutual Companies and induced us to take on the representation of mutual fire insurance companies, giving us the names of the mutual companies he had had ratiafactory dealings with in his Itome State.

This is why we started a Mutual Insurance Agency in Sanford—way back yonder in July,

Our ambition has beer to build up an agency devoted to the task of providing good insurance protection for the people in Seminole County

That we have to some extent at least succeeded in doing this is indicated by the fact that today we have the pleasure of serving over five hundred customers, most of whom bought insurance from us because our agency was recommended by a
