Election boundaries remain

TALLAHASSEE — Voters in the state's new, more compact 3rd Congressional District don't have to worry about the lines changing again this year. A panel of three federal judges says the new boundaries created last month by the Legislature will have to do the job in 1996. Elections officials are also pleased. "I am pleased we have timely resolution in this matter because it ensures the integrity of the elections process," Secretary of State Sandra Morham said Tuesday. "I feel it was appropriate for the courts to defer to the Legislature in adopting the plan." The 3rd district, held by U.S. Rep. Corrine Brown of Jacksonville, was redrawn after the judicial panel ruled it had been gerrymandered in 1992 for purposes of electing a black lawmaker. Brown, a Democrat, said she plans to seek reelection to the new district. The percentage of registered black voters in Brown's district will decline from almost 48 percent to 41.5 percent.

Trial continues

SANFORD — The trial continues today in the case of Tonya Sur Hickman, 28, accused of aggravated child abuse. Hickman, of 3525 Shirley Drive, Apopka, was arrested by Seminole County sheriff's investigators on May 6, 1995. She was accused of giving her 9-month-old son, Samuel, doses of Syrup of Ipecac in order to induce vomiting. The incidents reportedly occurred at the Hickman home and at Florida Hospital, Orlando, in April of last year. According to sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough, the Syrup of Ipecac was administered to the child without a doctor's knowledge or consent. McDonough said the drug could have caused serious medical problems if it had not been detected by the medical staff at Florida Hospital.

Aggravated child abuse is a second degree felony in Florida. It carries a maximum penalty of 15 years in prison upon conviction. The trial is being held before Circuit Court Judge Wallace Hall in Courtroom C of the Seminole County Courthouse.

Fireworks fund

SANFORD — The fund-raising effort for Independence Day fireworks in Sanford is progressing, although slowly. According to the project's chairman Rod Loyer, out of the estimated $15,000 needed for the event, $2,560 has been collected thus far.

The following donations have been reported: Carryover from last year, $2,400. Richard and Mona Walker, $20. Duke Adamson, $25. Knights of Columbus, $100. Walgreens, $15 gift certificate. Other donations will be reported in weeks ahead. The fireworks display is scheduled for Wednesday night, July 3, at Fort Mellon Park on Sanford's lakefront.

Test your driving

SANFORD — The Seminole County Community Traffic Safety Team is sponsoring a "Virtual Reality" Kiosk, for people wishing to test their driving skills. Officials say there are three separate segments in this computer game from which to choose, to determine if you are "Road Savvy" or "Highway Disaster." The kiosk allows people to test their skills. The kiosk will be at the Seminole County Tag Office, at the Seminole County Administration building in Sanford from June 13 through 21; at the branch tag office in Casselberry from June 22 through 28.

Rain, rain, go away

Torrential rains brought the Sanford Recreation Department's Babe Ruth City Championships to a watery halt Tuesday night at Sanford Memorial Stadium. As the members of the Nobles Construction White Sox waited solemnly for a break in the weather, Unipac Press DuBoise got above the tide by standing on a pallet. See Page 1B.

Retiring cop chief may get extra pay; outside search or promotion could lead to successor

By NICK PFEIPAUF

SANFORD — Selecting a new police chief and the salary of the present chief both came up for discussion this week during the Sanford City Commission work session. Commissioner Whitely Eckstein proposed a salary upgrade for present Chief Ralph Russell, and City Manager Bill Simmons reported on steps which might be taken to find a replacement. Russell has submitted a letter of retirement effective January 3, 1996. "I would like to suggest bringing the police chief's salary up," Eckstein commented during the work session meeting. "He (Russell) has saved us lots of money and I think he has done a good job. He's done a yeoman's job." How much more do you propose we give? See Chief, Page 5A.

Balance sought for students online

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — While the Seminole County school district does not yet require permission slips for those who want to venture out onto the information superhighway, they do want to make sure students don't run off the road. The school district is currently trying to formulate a policy that will help give parents information about things to which the students have access on the Internet and get their permission to allow that participation. The policy is still in the early stages of formulation. Later in the process, parents students and the community will have the opportunity to give their input into the policy before the school board approves it. "We want the parents to understand," Gary Becker, director of the media and technology department, said. Becker said many of the schools have very limited access to the Internet. Time spent online is strictly for specifically educational purposes at those schools. "Some schools have only four or five computers," he said. "There isn't time to 'surf the net' in those schools." Still, in schools where there are more computers and access to the See Online, Page 5A.

Taxpayers to pay for 'Crazy Joe's' legal expenses

By The Associated Press

RAIFORD, Fla. — Taxpayers will pay the legal expenses when former death row inmate Joseph "Crazy Joe" Spaziano appeals a 1975 rape conviction that sent him to prison for life.

"I don't have no money," Spaziano told Circuit Judge Helvin Perry at a hearing Monday at Union Correctional Institution. Spaziano, 50, earlier this year was granted a new trial in the murder of a young woman because a key witness recanted his testimony given at the 1976 trial in Sanford. He now seeks to throw out the 1975 Orlando rape verdict for the same reason.

The court hearing was held in prison because Spaziano's Orlando lawyer, James Russ, said he was concerned about his client's safety if he had to travel to Orlando. The reasons for that concern were not disclosed.

Testimony from Spaziano and other witnesses on Monday disclosed that $5,000 the inmate had in his prison bank account last year had been given to his family, spent in the prison canteen or used to buy art supplies Spaziano uses to draw cartoon characters.

Prosecutor Paula Coffman suggested that Spaziano purposely hid his money to avoid paying legal costs.

A $100,000 legal bill submitted by Spaziano's lawyers to Seminole County for work on the murder hearing has Orange County prosecutors concerned about Monday's indigency ruling by Judge Perry. The state attorney's office in Sanford is protesting some of those expenses.

Perry placed an initial cap of $7,500 on the Spaziano expenses. The judge will review any further requests from Russ.

Spaziano, who became known as "Crazy Joe" during his days as an Outlaws motorcycle gang member in the Orlando area, was sentenced in August 1975 to life in prison plus five years for the rape of a 16-year-old student.

School GPA: Seminole County leads the way

By DORIS BLOODEWORTH
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — It remains to be seen if Seminole County middle school and high school students will share the enthusiasm of school board member Dr. Barbara Kuhn who said, "I have been excited about this since I first heard about it." Kuhn's excitement was directed at recent efforts of the Florida Legislature to raise the standard of achievement in grades 6-12.

Marion Dailey, executive director for instructional services for SCPS, outlined the new pupil progression plan for the coming school year at the school board meeting Tuesday.

According to Dailey, the following changes will be in effect for the 1996-1997 school year: For incoming sixth graders to be promoted to the seventh grade, they must pass all courses, including exploratory courses such as art and music, and have an overall grade point average of 2.0. (The 2.0 would be equivalent to a C average.)

The following school year will see changes in the grading system. Currently, grades are given as follows:

- A grade of C is 75-84.
- A grade of D is 65-74.

● A grade of F is below 65. However, for the 1997-1998 school year, grading standards will be as follows:

- A grade of C will be 77-84.
- A grade of D will be 70-76.
- A grade of F will be a 69 or below.

Several school board members expressed concern that parents and students be made aware of the See Grades, Page 5A.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

FLORIDA BRIEFS

First Union to repay losses

MIAMI — First Union National Bank is offering to pay $1 million in losses on mutual funds bought at unlicensed Florida branches, but a two-page letter outlining the refunds reads like an accounting textbook.

A key sentence in the bank's letter to customers acknowledging "this oversight on our part" is 103 words long. The refunds would cover every penny, plus interest, lost by 648 customers out of a total of 4,500 people who invested $43 million at the unlicensed branches while the fast-growing bank was on a takeover binge.

The bank's plan for paying back investors was filed Friday as part of a federal lawsuit in Tampa charging customers were defrauded on First Union securities sales.

First Union proposed notifying the losing customers by a letter requiring them to claim the refund within 30 days. If everyone who lost money sought a refund, the bank would owe $1 million.

Attorney Jonathan Alpert, who filed the securities suit against First Union last August, objected to the speedy time frame and the bank's request that its proposal be considered on an emergency basis.

"My concern is their letter has a 30-day drop-dead date," he said Tuesday. "It's like they're giving with one hand and taking it back with the other."

The refund offer by the Charlotte, N.C.-based bank is "the worst nightmare of bankers wanting to expand into new products — the fact that you would be liable for actual investor losses," said Ken Thomas, a banking lecturer at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Business.

The bank halted sales at 138 of 880 branches in Florida when registration errors were found during an internal review in March.

"These registrations need to be in place before mutual fund sales should have occurred, and that was the mistake," said First Union spokesman Jeep Bryant. "This was an oversight that should not have occurred."

Sales of mutual funds, stocks and bonds by banks have gradually evolved since the mid-1980s through a series of court rulings and regulatory decisions, and banks have been a substantial player in the mutual fund business since the early 1990s.

But surveys indicate as many as 30 percent to 50 percent of people with mutual fund accounts at banks believe the uninsured accounts are backed by the government.

The probe into First Union's operation of unregistered branches is part of a broader investigation of the bank by the state Division of Securities. Violations are punishable by anything from a fine to a license revocation.

"The statute allows for a $5,000 fine per violation," said division director Dan Saxon. "Any sale out of that branch could be considered a violation."

Algae worry scientists

KEY WEST — Scientists are worried about the survival of coral reefs off the Florida Keys after noting an increase of pollution-fueled algae at a popular diving spot.

In the last four months, greenish cotton candy-like Cladophora algae have been found wrapped around corals and sea fans in portions of the Looe Key reef, one of the top diving destinations in the nation, scientists say.

Researchers have also found a related algae species blanketing parts of the reef with what looks like an underwater garden.

"Cladophora algae on the reef is significant because the amount of algae is more than three miles away, suggesting that sewage pollution is flowing off the Keys that is entering ocean waters far from land."

Bill Matsie, a researcher at the Harbor Branch Oceanographic Institution, said he found the algae while diving in February.

"I went, 'Holy mackerel! What's that doing out here?'" Matsie said. "It's the Sea-At-Jee's sign showing what's going on here."

Other forms of algae have been showing up increasingly on the reefs in recent years, worrying scientists.

But Cladophora algae can thrive only where the waters contain high levels of nitrogen, a substance found in sewage and other waste products, said Matsie and his colleague, Brian Lapointe.

Ken Hebbell, science coordinator for the Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary, said that while he is unsure of the significance of the Cladophora outbreak, the appearance of several kinds of algae on the reefs in recent years indicates something is wrong.

"We're very concerned," Hebbell said.

University of Georgia researchers documented a loss in coral at Looe Key of more than 40 percent from 1984 to 1985.

Several highly visible diseases that produce white lines, bleaching and black bands on the Keys' corals, all signs of disease that eventually kills the animals that make up the reef, have been noted in recent years.

Lakeland aviation museum gets boxes of Hughes memorabilia

LAKELAND — A full-length flying suit and a 14-foot model of the famous spruce goose — it doesn't get much better than this for Arthur Henderson.

That's because Henderson is general manager of the Sun 'n Fun Aviation Museum. And the items, along with 180 crates of other memorabilia, once belonged to Howard Hughes and now have been donated to the museum.

"After this, Christmas is going to be a letdown," Henderson said Monday, after the boxes of memorabilia were delivered. They came as a gift from Howard Hughes Corp. in Las Vegas, a realty firm that is the remnants of the late billionaire's once-vast aviation, film and equipment empire.

The Sun 'n Fun Aviation Foundation beat out such heavyweight competition as UCLA and the University of Southern California for the Hughes collection.

Vernon Olson, senior vice president of Howard Hughes Corp., told Henderson he liked the Sun 'n Fun Aviation Foundation's offer to put the collection on public display.

"At first, we just wanted the magazines and books for our library," said Milton L. Voigt, foundation archivist. "When Mr. Olson came to visit us in June, he said he thought we should be a repository for all his memorabilia. They knew we wouldn't keep it in a warehouse."

It helped that Hughes' friend, Al Lombard, who helped plan Hughes' trip around the world in July 1931, is from Lakeland.

Hughes, who died a rich eccentric in 1976, set speed records for flights around the world and across the United States. He also designed several airplanes, including the Spruce Goose — a wooden cargo carrier the size of a large building that Hughes flew just once, to prove he could.

In one box are the fabric-backed maps Hughes used on his record-setting flight around the world. In another, there are negatives of blueprints to the Spruce Goose and newspaper clippings trumpeting Hughes' aviation feats.

Also in the donated collection are large models of airplanes Hughes designed, including the silver model of the Spruce Goose and a 6-foot mock-up of the XF-11, a twin-engine fighter.

Hughes nearly died when he crashed the second prototype of that airplane in 1948.

The treasure trove also includes film cans with reels of Hughes' exploits, and scrapbooks.

The library, now in a double-wide trailer, and the 30,000-square-foot museum are ill-equipped to accommodate all the material.

For now, a Sun 'n Fun supporter who wishes to remain anonymous has offered to keep perishable materials in a climate-controlled warehouse until the foundation's museum can handle the collection.

Sun 'n Fun Aviation Foundation Executive Director Billy Henderson said he hopes to have a display ready by this fall, or by the first of the year.

"We've got the premier collection of Howard Hughes material on the East Coast," he said. "He was an aviation pioneer, and we want people to be able to see this collection."

IRS won't tax any states' prepaid tuition programs

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE — The Internal Revenue Service plans to keep its hands off the proceeds from state-sponsored prepaid college programs.

The Department of the Treasury announced Tuesday it won't alter the status of the increasingly popular plans — meaning parents won't have to pay taxes on the plans' earnings each year.

Florida is among about a dozen states with programs that allow parents to pay for their children's future college education at today's tuition rates. The price of the contracts depends on the child's age and can be paid in a lump sum or monthly.

The IRS last year began informing states it planned to start treating the plans like interest-bearing bonds, on which income tax must be paid each year.

That plan drew criticism from legislators such as U.S. Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., who said it would discourage families from saving for their children's college educations.

Florida has sold 378,000 tuition and dormitory contracts since 1983. The state pools the money collected each year from buyers and invests it. The IRS wanted to tax individual prepaid plan holders on their share of the annual investment earnings.

Tuesday's ruling means plan participants will instead pay taxes at the time of the child's enrollment in college. At that time, the child must file a return listing as income the difference between the tuition and what was paid into the program years earlier.

Cuban group says it may sail into Cuban waters

By State Department Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — A Cuban exile group is being sketchy about its plans for a flotilla to Cuba next month because of emergency rules imposed by the Clinton administration to crack down on violations of the island's territorial waters.

"We are going to take a flotilla into international waters," Democracy Movement spokesman Luis Felipe Rojas said Tuesday. "We reserve the right to announce later if we will enter Cuban territorial waters."

The July 18 protest falls on the two-year anniversary of a Cuban gunboat's attack on a boat filled with refugees. At least 41 people were killed, many of them women and children.

In not announcing its intentions, the group is hoping to get around a presidential declaration of national emergency preventing boats from leaving

South Florida to enter Cuban waters, Rojas said.

Under the emergency order, the U.S. Coast Guard has established a three-mile perimeter around South Florida from Naples, around the Keys and to Boca Raton on the east coast.

The order gives the Coast Guard complete control over all vessel operations in the perimeter and prohibits boats under 163 feet in length from departing with the intent to enter Cuban territorial waters.

"Right now they are in the organizing stage," said Coast Guard spokesman Senior Chief Petty Officer Luis Diaz. "We are aware of what's going on. But no one has declared they are leaving here and going into Cuban waters."

Three boats of Cuban exiles staged a protest one mile outside Cuban territorial waters May 1 under Coast Guard protection.

AAA: Infrastructure in crisis

By DAVID BROWN
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — In an unprecedented move, the American Automobile Association is urging its members to lobby for better roads and an updated air traffic control system, saying the status quo is moving the country toward a transportation crisis.

AAA says the federal government is spending only 66 percent of the amount needed to maintain the existing level of the nation's infrastructure, and the deterioration is threatening the lives of motorists and travelers.

"Our highways and bridges are declining at a rapid rate" and have already caused fatalities when bridges collapse and overpasses fail, said AAA spokesman Bill Jackman. "These are isolated and rare events now, but there's a real possibility that these kinds of things are going to increase."

In its report released today, "Crisis Ahead: America's Aging Highways and Airways," the 55-million-member auto association cites federal statistics that say:

—More than a third of the major roads are in immediate need of repair. About 80,000 miles of highway are in "poor" condition, meaning they need work to restore their serviceability, and almost 180,000 miles are in "mediocre" condition, meaning they will soon need improvements in order to preserve their use.

—Twenty-six percent of the 157,000 bridges along the National Highway System are "structurally deficient" or "functionally obsolete." The former means the bridges are closed or restricted to light vehicles because of deteriorating structure, while functionally obsolete means the bridges are unsafe for the volume or type of traffic it carries.

Using figures released last year by the Federal Highway Administration, AAA calculates that it will take $72 billion over the next five years to upgrade roads and bridges. It will take $65 billion a year just to maintain current conditions, but spending today is only $66 billion.

"We're not spending enough money to stay even," Jackman said. "We're on a downward trend."

The report also takes aim at the nation's air transportation network. It says that hundreds of daily flight delays in an overworked system already cost the airline industry and its customers an estimated $3 billion annually.

The number of air travelers is projected to grow 45 percent in the next seven years, from 550 million passengers last year to 800 million in 2008.

"If airport capacity is not significantly increased, it is estimated the number of severely congested airports will increase from the current 23 to 33 in less than 10 years," the AAA report said.

AAA wants a revamping of the way transportation revenue is raised and doled out. It wants all taxes collected from motorists and air travelers to be used to improve highways and airways — not for deficit reduction — and it wants the trust funds where transportation dollars are held to be removed from the federal budget so that they are not subject to politicking.

POLICE REPORTS

Burglary

Marcos Padilla, 38, of 615 Laurel Avenue, was arrested by Sanford police early Tuesday. Officers responding to a call regarding a burglary in progress and with the assistance of a K-9 unit, located Padilla reportedly hiding under clothing in a bedroom closet. Police said the owner of the house was out of town at the time. Padilla was charged with burglary and criminal mischief.

Traffic stop

Eladia Rivera, 37, of Orlando, was arrested by officers on Sand Pine Circle in Sanford Monday. Police said her vehicle had been involved in an accident, and the woman was found sitting in her vehicle. She was charged with driving under the influence.

Domestic

Michael Leon Williams, 34, 1915 Sheppard Avenue, Sanford, was arrested by Sanford police at his residence early Tuesday following a reported dispute with a female. He was charged with domestic violence.

Sanford police reports

Power tools valued at $650 were reportedly stolen from a garage Monday in the 100 block of Spreading Oaks Court in Sanford.

A 1980 Dodge parked in the 700 block of Palmwood Avenue.

A red Toro lawnmower valued at $600 was reported stolen Monday from a garage in the 200 block of W. Sixth Street.

A battery valued at $150 was reported stolen Monday from a business in the 1100 block of Sanford Avenue. Police said a 1988 Nissan was also reported stolen, but has been recovered by police abandoned behind the 800 block of Sanford Avenue.

Ethics complaint filed against D'Amato for stock deal

By RONALD POWERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Sen. Alfonse D'Amato should be investigated for allegedly accepting special treatment from a brokerage firm that was under scrutiny by the Securities and Exchange Commission, a private watchdog group says in a Senate ethics complaint.

The complaint says D'Amato, R-N.Y., may have violated Senate rules when he bought the stocks in 1993 through Stratton Oakmont of Lake Success, N.Y.

"Stratton Oakmont gave Senator D'Amato a $37,125 favor at a time when they were in dire need of assistance from the Senate Banking Committee," said Gary Ruskin, director of the Congressional Accountability Project. The group, which is affiliated with consumer advocate Ralph Nader, filed a complaint against D'Amato with the Senate Ethics Committee on Tuesday. The committee now must decide whether to begin an inquiry or dismiss the complaint.

A report prepared for the SEC by an outside consultant overseeing a 1994 settlement with the commission to resolve allegations Stratton charged its clients found that D'Amato received "atypical" treatment because of his influence. The report found nothing illegal in the transactions, but said Stratton violated its own internal rules to help D'Amato make money.

D'Amato called Tuesday's filing "nothing but politics" and said "It's obvious people are trying to embarrass me." Last week he said any suggestion he'd received special favors was false.

"Senator D'Amato's relationship with Stratton deserves a heightened level of review by the Ethics Committee because Senator D'Amato was not merely any member of the United States Senate," the complaint said.

D'Amato, at the time, was the ranking Republican on the Senate Banking Committee, which regulates banking and financial interests and has jurisdiction over the SEC. He now chairs the committee.

D'Amato made a $37,125 profit in a single day in 1993 from an initial purchase offering, or IPO, of a company that underwrote by Stratton.

Take Sanford for a real test drive

While the influx of British tourists coming into Sanford is relatively new, people have been visiting Sanford for decades. But what are they seeing?

While brochures now being produced by the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce and other information expound on the Central Florida Zoological Park, Rivership Romance, historic downtown antique shops, oak-shaded streets and other eye-attracting features, these aren't the only sights to be beheld by first-time visitors.

How will they enter Sanford? They could arrive from the south on U.S. Highway 17-92 (French Avenue), on SR-415 which becomes Sanford Avenue, or from 17-92 on the west and SR-46 from both the east and west.

This weekend, take an hour or more and play tourist. Drive down some of these major arteries and pretend you are visiting Sanford for the first time. Take a good look at what you see on both sides of the street.

Most of these highways are kept relatively clean of debris. That's an advantage. Except for the traffic burden on S. Sanford Avenue at SR-415 where construction has been in progress for what seems like a year, most of the roadways are easily navigated. Another plus.

But take a close look at the buildings and signs as you enter Sanford. You will find dilapidated signs advertising businesses which may not have even existed for several years. You will see unkempt buildings with chipping paint falling from the exterior walls.

You will see merchandise which is not exactly attractive, stacked outside the businesses in an attempt to lure buyers. You will see signs with information on the buildings which seems words spelled incorrectly.

Along some of the more rural areas, you will often find bushes which you must know haven't been trimmed or cleaned out in months. And while most of our incoming streets are well-kept, there are still areas where people appear to be using the roadside as a public trash pile.

Don't take our word for this. Make an effort to see for yourself. Then imagine what opinion people get of Sanford as they approach the city. After all, we all know that first opinions are hard to break. Regardless of how appealing some of our structures and features may be, those which are eye-sores are ruining the overall image.

There are those who will tell you the reason is because of a lack of code enforcement. Others will say that it's because enforcing city codes is difficult.

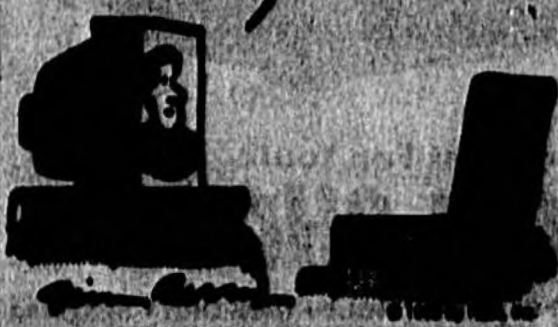

But if the city and/or county can't do anything to clean up and improve the city's image, does that mean nothing can be done at all? No. People who own property, especially commercial businesses, must be made to realize that appearance is more important than location, location, location.

The general public must let their feelings be known to others, and for those responsible for our structures and areas, take it upon themselves to clean up their own act.

There's no doubt, Sanford is a beautiful city. But do our visitors see it as such? Make your own test drive.

Tobacco image sinks even lower

And you didn't think it was possible for the tobacco image to sink any lower. Now Big Tobacco is the evil Empire of a John Grisham novel. What next? A Stephen King film with a villain named Philip Morris?

It's been that kind of year. With an anti-smoking president in the White House, with company memos leaking all over the media, with states suing for health expenses and smokers hiding in doorways, the tobacco executives will soon be slinking into work with trench coats over their heads.

The anti-smoking movement is on a roll. But there's one little piece of bad news: The statistics for less smoking are going up, not down. The Centers for Disease Control tells us that the number of smoking teens has risen from 37.9 percent in 1991 to 34.9 percent in 1995.

Over the past few years, there has been a subtle shift in public health strategy. Surgeon General Kohn's call for a Smoke Free America has veered into a campaign for Smoke Free Kids.

On the surface, this makes sense. Smoking is not an adult custom, as the tobacco companies like to say, it's a childhood addiction. Ninety percent of today's addicts got hooked on this. The government can't hook the children today, they will be out of business tomorrow, at the best in a few decades.

There has been a subtle shift in public health strategy.

This is a very different strategy from the one and the other. The Surgeon General and the Joe Calton. It's like a kid being everywhere can agree on it. It's like "Don't drink and drive."

But there is a problem in this line of persuasion. The anti-smoking we concentrated on kids—the more seriously we insist that cigarettes are not for children—the more we may be pushing them toward the forbidden fruit of adolescence.

Cardiology Professor Stan Oates has been offering high-school warnings about this to his public health colleagues. Talking from the National Tobacco Control Conference in Chicago last week, he said, "The tobacco industry presents smoking as a way to be grown-up. By emphasizing the hidden issues, we're just reinforcing the industry's message."

The youth turf is in fact the tobacco company's bribe point. They love it there. In mid-May when Philip Morris tried his out-run around FDA proposals on marketing to kids, a spokesman said with a straight face "the time has come to address the issue of underage use of tobacco ..."

This was just the latest in a long line of helpful hints on "underage smoking." Since 1975, the tobacco folks have received whole boxes of "tobacco education materials" which describe smoking as "one of the many serious risks people choose to do as adults" such as "young driving a car, drinking alcoholic beverages, marriage, having children."

There you go. Linking cigarettes with driving, drinking and sex. What a bargain!

"It's clear that whatever the tobacco industry suggests is 180 degrees wrong," says Richard Daynard of the Tobacco Litigation Project. "They have figured out what sort of plea will maximize the adolescent rebellion."

Medicare: Market competition

As President Clinton and congressional Republicans trade blame for doing nothing to save Medicare from bankruptcy, they are both overlooking the most promising solution to the problem: market competition.

For all their wrangling, both parties want to retain the current system of government price controls that has failed to keep the program solvent.

Republicans claim that they intend to reform Medicare by giving seniors private alternatives to the government-run program, but they actually are resorting to the same device — a "global budget" — that they condemned when Clinton proposed it as part of his comprehensive health care reform proposal in 1994.

The GOP plan places an arbitrary lid on Medicare outlays as the means of cutting the rate of growth of the program from 10 percent a year to 7.5 percent and saving $160 billion in anticipated outlays during the next six years.

The lion's share of savings will come from reduced payments to doctors and hospitals under the same rigid system of price controls that govern Medicare rates now. Republicans hope that seniors facing reduced funds to pay doctors will shift to HMOs, other managed-care options, or medical savings accounts.

The administration, meantime, is not proposing any structural changes in Medicare, just a short-term, $154 billion "fix" that will keep Medicare in the black until 2001.

Of the $154 billion, $20 billion would be saved by the increasing amount of private health care costs out of general revenue. The rest would come from reduced payments to hospitals and doctors.

A market-competition alternative to price-controlled Medicare rates could be passed next year by the Congressional Budget Committee, the main body of the "New Democrat" Democratic Leadership Council.

While the proposal was passed at the turn of its unveiling by Democratic Sen. Bill Bradley (N.J.), Joe Lieberman (Conn.), John Chafee (R.I.), and Sam Nunn (Ga.), none of them converted it into legislation.

Understandably, it is a program that has been drafted by congressional Democrats and held back to avoid interfering with the party's plan to use Medicare as a stick to beat Republicans this election year.

It is clear that Republicans and Democrats get serious about saving Medicare — maybe next year — the proposal deserves the congressional attention.

Drafted by David Boswell, aide to aide to former Sen. Mike Anderson, D-Texas, and a leader of former Rep. Jim Cooper, D-Texas, 1994 managed-competition health care proposal, the FBI plan offers financial incentives to encourage seniors to join managed-care groups instead of sticking to traditional fee-for-service doctors.

Without putting an overall lid on Medicare outlays, under the plan the government would pay seniors' medical insurance premiums up to the average amount charged by private managed-care plans in a region. Those who wanted to continue seeing unaffiliated doctors on a fee-for-service basis would have to pay the extra cost out of their own pockets.

Under the plan, beneficiaries would choose among competing private insurance plans that would bid for Medicare business much as insurance companies now do for federal employees, and the government would have no price-setting role.

The independent consulting firm Lewis-Vix reported in April that the FBI plan would save between $20 and $27 billion over seven years — less than the Republicans' plan, but more than Clinton will get in real savings — but without cutting services.

Moreover, the study showed that for more Medicare recipients would join HMOs and other managed-care programs under the FBI plan than under either the GOP or Democratic proposal.

While a majority of younger workers now are enrolled in managed-care programs, the cost of Medicare coverage is higher than for doctors on a fee-for-service basis. Lewis-Vix estimates that the percentage of managed care will rise from 5 percent to only 13.8 percent under current law and 30 percent under the OCP plan, but it would be 40 percent if passed under the FBI proposal.

By 2014, the study found, the total cost of Medicare would be $160 billion, but the OCP plan would reduce that to $140 billion and the FBI plan to $120 billion.

According to Lewis-Vix, both Republicans and Democrats want the reform, but now wanting about Medicare's fate, they are in a race to show they are serious.

For all their wrangling, both parties want to retain the current system.

Liberals, angry men taint news

The problem with media watchdogs is, all they do is bark. What we need are some media watchdogs that will bite as well.

Take the Media Research Center, which you probably never heard of because it is conservative and the liberal media won't tell us about it. The guy who runs it, Brent Bozell III, is the nephew of right-wing sage William Buckley Jr. Bozell also worked for Patrick Buchanan's 1992 presidential campaign. He sometimes fills in for Rush Limbaugh, and he once headed the National Conservative Political Action Committee.

The liberal media therefore automatically assume he has a bias and refuse to deliver his message.

Just the other day, for example, Bozell called a news conference at the National Press Club, and wouldn't you know it, not a single representative from the three networks bothered to show up — thus proving Bozell's point that the media are engaged in a "nonstop campaign against the conservative movement."

Well, you'll get the truth here, by gum. What Bozell is doing is launching a $5.5 million campaign to educate America about the media's liberal bias. He is setting up a World Wide Web site, dispatching e-mail "cyber-alerts" on media trickery, advertising in conservative publications and distributing thousands of "I Don't Believe the Liberal News Media" bumper stickers, pens and refrigerator magnets.

My guess is he will not personally handle the magnet distribution, as they have a tendency to stick to his head. But that's neither here nor there. My question to you is, what is wrong with the Media Research Center's approach?

Never mind, I will tell you: Bozell doesn't suggest how to rectify this situation. Everybody knows the media are crypto-Communists. What we need to know is how to fix this mess.

And I have to tell you, also, liberal bias isn't the only problem. Just listen to this litany of recent media sins:

• The chief of naval operations, Adm. Jeremy Burch, who committed suicide after he learned Newswatch wanted to question him about his right to wear valor pins on medals, "was led to his death by a relentless trash mob that has haunted the U.S. Navy." According to former Navy Secretary John Lehman, a writing copier in the anti-Navy campaign, he said, was the media.

• Front-page mentions of women are declining, according to the watchdog group Women, Men and Media. From 1994 to 1995, they dropped from 20 percent to 15 percent. Last year, they dropped to 13 percent. One of the summaries involved in the project, author Betty Friedman, believes this "reflects a backlash against women," especially on the part of "angry white men."

• The notion that so many people think O.J. Simpson is guilty of murder — this according to O.J. himself — is because "they were led to" by the media. The details, he said, are available on his video for only $24.95. O.J. also told a community college professor in California that he had been "intimidated." He continued, "There's nobody out there intimidating me."

• Questionnaire answers Clark agrees with the press the need to control, as far as the media are concerned. "Who should my hair make me (J)'s 'white' serve?" she asked a New York business executive.

I could go on, but the point is made. So, what to do?

The answer is not listening to the media.

Everybody knows the media are crypto-Communists.

Madison, Wis., ranks as No. 1 place to live: Money survey

By MICHAEL MCKENNA
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Despite higher unemployment and more economic uncertainty through April, Madison, Wis., ranked at the best place to live in America, according to Money magazine's annual ranking.

Home to a University of Wisconsin campus with 40,000 students and a vibrant economy boasting just 1.5 percent unemployment, Madison beat out the nation's other 200 biggest metropolitan areas to top the best-places list, released today in the magazine's July issue.

"It snagged the top spot because it's a city that has managed to tell the folks in Madison that life is supposed to be full of trade-offs," the glossy personal finance magazine writes.

On the opposite end of the list, but not far from Madison geographically, Rockford, Ill., ranked dead last at No. 200. Money cited higher unemployment, fewer job growth and a below-average health-care system.

The proximity of the first and last-place cities represents a major flip-flop from last year. Madison and Rockford are just 75 miles apart by car, according to the American Automobile Association.

Last year's top city, Gainesville, Fla., is a 2,500-mile drive from the 1995 loser, Yuba City, Calif.

Money's ranking of the best places has become an annual rite, generating unusual attention. The list is compiled by polling residents to see what factors are most important to them, collecting data and using them to rank the 200 largest metropolitan areas.

The factors deemed by readers as most important this year were a low crime rate, clean water, clean air, plentiful detailed, many hospitals, rising housing values, good schools, low property taxes, low income taxes and strong state government.

Madison's ascended to the top spot from last year's 16th-place ranking. Following Madison this year were No. 2 Punta Gorda, Fla. (last year's No. 61); Rochester, Minn. (8); Fort Lauderdale, Fla. (9); and No. 5 Ann Arbor, Mich. (20).

Rounding out the top 10: Fort Myers/Cape Coral, Fla. (24); Gainesville (15); Austin, Texas (28); Seattle (4) and Lubbock, Fla. (41).

Money noted that for those put off by Madison's cold climate, high temperatures during the winter average just 50 degrees. Florida took five of the top 10 spots for a second year running.

But Madison is the year's big winner, or, technically, Madison and the rest of Dane County. Eighty miles west of Milwaukee, the area has a population of 200,000 but, the magazine says, a range of cultural activities usually associated with cities twice as big.

Besides the low unemployment rate, lowest of the 200 places Money examined, the magazine also notes Madison is home to more than 200 technology companies and 20,000 recreation-dependent government jobs.

"Mad City, as locals call it, is also Fun City, especially if you like the beer and blues," Money writes. The magazine cites nearby lakes and bike trails, as well as cross-country skiing in the winter. In the fall, the university's Badger football team dominates Saturdays.

Last-place Rockford, in contrast, was noted for a work force that is apparently fleeing in search of better opportunities, crime problems and steep property taxes.

Rockford's last-place ranking represented a dip from No. 200 last year. Immediately above Rockford in the listing of the list: No. 199 Yuba City (last year's No. 200); Peoria, Ill. (207); Davenport, Iowa (209); and Lima, Ohio (248).

Rounding out the bottom 10: No. 200 Springfield, Ill. (278); Mansfield, Ohio (285); Albany/Schenectady/Troy, N.Y. (327); Waterbury, Conn. (114); and No. 201 Alexandria, La. (68).

him," questioned Commissioner Lon Howell.

"Well, it could be a very minimum amount, but even a six percent increase would result in several thousand dollars more."

"I can't go along with that," Commissioner Kerry Lyons immediately responded.

Howell added, "Well, I have no problem with it, but the wage standards need to be raised a lot more for many other employees we have."

Simmons suggested that as Ponce had reached the top of his salary grid, the amount should either be given as two weeks salary under a special merit pay, or the salary level should be upgraded.

No decision or overall opinion on the matter was reached. It is expected to be discussed further at subsequent work session meetings and possibly during budget preparation time.

As a separate note, Simmons told the commissioners he had received word from the city attorney regarding the wording in the city charter about the replacement of the police chief. The charter apparently suggests a replacement be made by the next in line for the position, as long as that person is properly qualified.

"The city attorney says we apparently have two choices," Simmons said. "We can either promote from within if a person is qualified, or we should change the rule and replace the word 'shall' with 'may,' which would change the meaning of the wording." He added that this could be done by ordinance.

Simmons added that he had discussed the situation with several department heads who would also be included in the replacement process. "They all agreed that we should make a change in the words," he said.

Once the change is approved,

Simmons said the city would be allowed to begin advertising to fill the police chief's position elsewhere.

The commission opined that Simmons should go ahead and prepare the proper change in the wording. An official vote will be taken at a future commission meeting.

School Board Chair Sandra Robinson also supported the proposal, and even suggested a headline for the newspaper: "Seminole County leads the way."

Internet, students are kept from too much exploration along the superhighway by assignments. Becker says, that "keeps them too busy to stray."

Many of the schools have access to the Internet through the Florida Information Resource Network (FIRN), an educationally-based server that does not give students access to all of the online chatrooms or other sources that a public server might provide.

"Of course, there are students who are sharp enough and bright enough to get access to places we don't want them to go," he said.

Becker said the schools are concerned with student safety and they "know there are people out there who would take advantage of children" and that is why the district is trying to formulate a policy as quickly as possible.

"We should have something ready for the board by the next school year," Becker said.

Becker said the Internet is like the Wild West.

"There were some benefits in the pioneering spirit and exploration of the west in the 1800s," he said, "but there was also lawlessness and violence and crime. When that happened, they brought in the marshall, the schools and the church to try to strike a balance. That's what we're trying to do...strike a balance between freedom of speech and expression, the right to have access to information and those who would take advantage of our children. There has to be a balance."

So far, there haven't been any complaints from parents about the access students have been given to the Internet, Becker said. Because of the socio-economic status of many of the families whose students attend school in Seminole County, he noted, about 20 percent of the students have unlimited access to the Internet at home.

"I really don't think they have as much access to the Internet at school as they do at home," Becker said.

The victim was stabbed in the eye and left for dead in a rural field but recovered.

Some five months after the Orlando rape conviction, Spasiano was tried and convicted in nearby Sanford in the death of Laura Lynn Harberts, an Orlando hospital clerk.

Anthony DiLisio, a Pensacola auto restorer who testified against DiLisio in both trials, recounted that testimony last year. Circuit Judge O.H. Eaton Jr. ruled in January that Spasiano should get a new murder trial. The state is appealing the ruling.

Freemen negotiate

JORDAN, Mont. — A Freemen leader who was flown by the FBI to meet a jailed comrade carried a deal back to the anti-government group, and a source said a surrender could come as early as Thursday.

Edwin Clark returned to the ranch late Tuesday and most of the Freemen could be seen entering a barn, presumably to discuss the surrender proposal.

"They've pretty much agreed it won't be a gun battle," the source said. "I'm extremely hopeful at this point. It's an extremely positive sign."

The source, who is familiar with the FBI strategy and spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, said progress was made toward a deal that could lead to surrender of the 17 remaining Freemen by Thursday.

Clinton to see burnt church ruins

CHARLESTON, S.C. — President Clinton arranged to see the burnt ruins of a rural South Carolina black church for himself today and deliver a message of racial unity and conciliation that he's been honing on the campaign trail.

Clinton was traveling today to Greeleyville to tour the spot where the Mt. Zion AME Church once stood and help dedicate a new sanctuary built on another site. The church, burned a year ago, is one of 30 that have been set afire in Southern states over the past 18 months.

During today's rededication, Clinton planned to announce new federal law enforcement initiatives to help protect black churches and better coordinate the investigations of past fires.

"I'm encouraged by the rebuilding they're doing," Clinton said earlier. "And I want to reaffirm to everybody in this country that we're going to keep working until we get to the bottom of all these cases."

Calling 911

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators are prepared to adopt rules that would help emergency dispatchers locate people who call 911 from cellular phones. The change could save lives, public safety groups say.

Each year millions of people call 911 from cellular phones but, unlike the same calls made from regular phones, the caller's location is not automatically sent to emergency dispatchers.

Knowing who the caller is and where he or she is calling from are vital to providing a prompt response, 911 dispatchers and public safety groups say.

The Federal Communications Commission today was expected to require cellular companies within five years to upgrade their networks with technology that would tell 911 dispatchers the location of an emergency caller to within 400 feet, FCC attorneys and cellular industry officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Headed for the heartland

WASHINGTON — He's slipped his Washington moorings and heading for the heartland this week, somewhere else after that, practically everywhere before it's over. Now it's all or nothing for Bob Dole, ex-senator. He left the perks, the legislative platform and the encumbrances behind Tuesday in an emotional farewell to the chamber he loved. First stop: the still-bare walls of a campaign office a few blocks away.

"I think my season in the Senate is about to come to an end," he told senators and a packed gallery as the clock ticked toward his 3 p.m. quitting time. "But the season before me makes this moment far less the closing of one chapter than the opening of another."

Today, the Republican presidential candidate is off to Toledo, Ohio, to begin a three-day, eight-city "heartland tour," one of his most ambitious campaign trips since the primaries.

Forcing tissue to grow

PHILADELPHIA — Patients with unhealable wounds, from deep burns to mastectomies, may one day be able to regrow their own tissue, maybe even organs.

It sounds like science fiction, but researchers are discovering ways to force tissues that normally don't regrow to do just that — opening the possibility of painless tissue regeneration.

"One day you could actually grow a new breast or replace an ear," said Stephen Push of Genzyme Corp., which has government permission to sell the first method to regrow joint cartilage pending Food and Drug Administration approval.

FDA biotechnology chief Dr. Philip Noguchi, who unveiled the agency's new tissue regulations to companies meeting in Philadelphia Tuesday, said: "Tissue engineering will be here in five years. I'm sure."

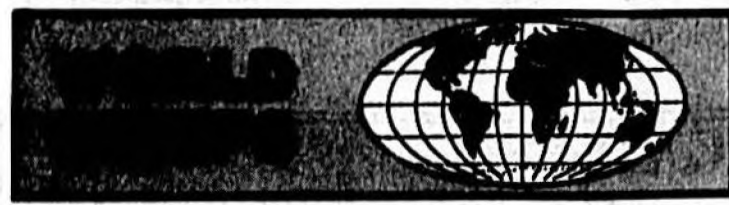

Museum of Coal Mining

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill. — Chris Ledvina might be expected to be a bit gun-shy of coal mines after 30 tons of rock crushed him in one nearly two decades ago, leaving him paralyzed.

But the coal miner-turned-college professor loves his former profession more than ever. So much, in fact, that he's fulfilled his dream: creating the National Museum of Coal Mining.

"I'm a coal miner first," Ledvina said at a shuttered mine that was dedicated as the new museum Tuesday. "It gets in your blood, and you think of doing nothing else. I've always celebrated the idea that they actually paid me to do it."

Beginning Aug. 1, thrill seekers or just the curious can descend more than 600 feet into the Old Ben No. 25 mine. Former coal miners will serve as tour guides.

Northern Ireland peace talks

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — After a hard-fought compromise with wary Protestants, former Sen. George Mitchell took the chairman's seat early today at Northern Ireland peace talks. Protestant hard-liners promptly walked out.

The after-midnight drama followed 15 hours of backroom haggling with the largest Protestant party, the Ulster Unionists, who finally agreed to let Mitchell chair the negotiations on the future of the disputed province.

But 12 delegates from the other two Protestant parties represented at the talks stormed out of the hall in protest.

The aim of the talks is to strike a compromise on governing Northern Ireland — one that will end the sectarian violence that has killed 3,200 people since 1969.

Senate Republicans pick Lott as leader

By CAROLYN KORNECK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans today chose Mississippi Trent Lott as majority leader to succeed the just-retired Bob Dole. Senate aides said, opting for a more aggressive and conservative politician to run the Senate during a heated election year.

A genial, if brashly ambitious man, Lott was among the last of the Senate Republicans to endorse Dole's presidential candidacy. And as majority whip — the Republican's No. 2 office — he had none-too-subtly coveted the majority leadership post long before Dole announced last month that he would quit the Senate to campaign full time.

Senate GOP aides said Republican senators elected Lott, 44-8, over fellow Mississippian Thad Cochran, a more reserved and courtly man who is equally conservative politically.

In choosing their first new Republican leader since 1985, the senators said they were looking for a pragmatist who could get work done. They said they believed Lott could do the job even though some say he's less compromising than Dole was.

Moderate Republican Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont, who predicted Lott would win, said in advance of the vote he was not concerned about Lott's conservative political views.

"We don't mind someone who has strong philosophical convictions," Jeffords said Tuesday, as long as "you're tolerant and pragmatic. Those two words I think are critical, and I think that Lott has those. ... He understands that the only way you can get things done around here is by getting compromise."

Lott, who holds the second-ranking post of Republican whip, was widely predicted by fellow senators to prevail over Cochran. Cochran recognized he was waging an uphill battle, but said he would not drop out before the ballots were counted.

"I don't intend to concede. I've decided to stay in it and let senators vote," he said in an interview, adding that his one hope for victory rests with senators annoyed by Lott's intense campaigning for the job.

"He's been a very relentless, effective campaigner, pushing people for commitments, going back and back and back until he gets it," he said. "My only hope is he may have pushed people too far."

Dole, who resigned his seat Tuesday to focus on his campaign for the White House, was noted for an ability to find consensus.

IN BRIEF

CONNECTION

Oops. Sorry Tire City

SANFORD — It was erroneously reported Tuesday that Sanford Tire, not Tire City, had posted a championship winning 10-0 perfect season in the Sanford Recreation Department Girls' Spring Slowpitch Softball League.

Members of the title winning Tire City club were Kristin Weaver, Marahita Woodard, Jennifer Sellers, Kenya Lawson, Shanika Lawson, Stephanie Foreman, Dione Brown, Whitney Bishop, Amy Platt, Laleya Brown, Savnee Pitch, Sha Sha Lawson and Kaley Beine.

The Herald and its staff wishes to sincerely apologize to the sponsor TIRE CITY, as well as to the team, its coaches and its fans for any problems or inconvenience the mistake might have caused.

Jim Morris signs new contract

CORAL GABLES — University of Miami coach Jim Morris signed a new five-year contract which runs through the year 2001, Athletic Director Paul Dee said Tuesday.

Morris, who led the Hurricanes to the championship game of the 1995 College World Series, originally signed to five-year contract in November 1993. The last two years of the old contract are replaced by the new five-year deal.

Morris, who has the highest winning percentage in UM's baseball history, has compiled a 147-45, or .765, record in his three seasons.

Extra Inning loss for O-Cube

JACKSONVILLE — Tom Schmidt's sacrifice fly scored Justin Maahore in the bottom of the 13th inning to give the Jacksonville Suns a 7-6 win over the Orlando Cubs.

Phil Nevin led off the 13th with a walk, then went to third on a single by Terrel Hansen. Maahore pinch-ran for Nevin at third, and one out later, Schmidt hit the sacrifice fly.

Luis Garcia and Bubba Trammell each hit two-run home runs in the ninth and 10th innings to bring the Suns (35-27) back.

Error dooms Marlins

MONTREAL — The Montreal Expos capitalized on second baseman Ralph Millard's throwing error in the seventh inning to rally for a 3-2 victory over the Florida Marlins.

With Montreal trailing 2-1, Darrin Fletcher and Cliff Floyd hit one-out singles off Kevin Brown (4-5). Pitch-hitter Sherman Obando hit a potential double-play ball to short, but Millard couldn't complete the play, throwing the ball past first and into the Expos' dugout, allowing Fletcher to score and sending Obando to second.

Dave Silvestri followed with a check-swing RBI single for a 3-2 lead and the Expos went on to snap a three-game losing streak.

Montreal took a 1-0 lead in the second on a Moises Alou triple and a Fletcher groundout.

In the fourth inning, rookie Edgar Renteria hit his first major-league homer and Terry Pendleton had a run-scoring groundout that gave Florida a 2-1 lead.

The ball is in Schott's corner

NEW YORK — It's decision day for Marge Schott, who will receive a suspension of up to five years unless she agrees to voluntarily give up day-to-day control of the Cincinnati Reds.

Baseball's ruling executive council is to speak by conference call at 4:30 p.m. EDT, sources said. The council met last Wednesday and set a one-week deadline for a decision on Schott.

Bullets shoot past Post 53 in summer baseball

By GARY COATMAN

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — Todd Radcliff was 3-for-4 with two doubles and an RBI to lead the Longwood T.G. Lee Bullets past Sanford Post 53 (Altamonte Springs) 4-3 in a clash between teams from the National Amateur Baseball Federation and American Legion summer baseball league Tuesday evening at Lake Brantley High School.

"Eric Paulus pitched well," said Longwood coach Bob McCullough. "They chased some bad pitches, and Eric put the ball near the plate. When you do that, positive things will happen. We scored just enough runs to win."

Jason Odom got the Bullets started in the top of the first inning with a two-out double down the left field line, then made the score 1-0 when Tyler Carr followed with an RBI single.

Aaron Russell reached first base on an error with two outs in the second inning to get Post 53 started, stole second, and took third when Bryan Chancellor reached first on an error. Russell and Chancellor scored to give Post 53 a 2-1 lead when

Longwood tied the score 2-2 when Tim Wolgemuth walked, stole second, reached third on a passed ball, and scored when Radcliff singled down the left field line. Carr doubled with one out in the fourth inning, while Randy Jonda and Duatin Owen followed with a walk and a single to load the bases. Bill Hess then took advantage of the opportunity with a walk to put the Bullets ahead 3-2.

Wolgemuth singled to right field to lead off the fifth inning for the Bullets, advanced to third on a double by Radcliff, and scored to make the score 4-2 on a sacrifice fly by Carr. Post 53 pitcher Shawn Child gave up two walks and a single in the seventh inning to load the bases, but escaped the inning thanks to a fly out and a strikeout.

Post 53 pulled within 4-3 in the seventh inning when Mitch Hunt had a two-out single, reached second on a passed ball, and scored on a single by Derek Hansen.

"This is a summer game," said Post 53 coach Mike Smith. "We're just trying to find out who can play. I'm very happy with what I have seen so far."

Carr was 2-for-4 to help lead the Bullets, while Odom, Jonda, Owen and Wolgemuth each had one. Paulus allowed seven hits and three walks while recording three strikeouts in six innings to earn the win, and Trevor Dixon has one strikeout as he worked a perfect seventh for the save.

Hunt and Hansen each had two hits for Post 53, while Kevin Gurgie, Matt Krol and Chris Martindale each had one hit. Greg Lee allowed five hits and four walks over the first four innings while recording two strikeouts, and Child surrendered three hits and three walks while recording two strikeouts in the last three innings.

The Bullets host a double-header against Boone at 5 p.m. today at Lyman High School, while Post 53 (Altamonte Springs) hosts Sanford Post 53 (Seminole) at 6 p.m. at Lake Brantley.

Legacy Soccer creates grant at SCC

SANFORD — The positive impact of hosting World Cup '94 in Orlando continues to provide dividends. Central Florida's Legacy Soccer Foundation and its title sponsor, the Lever Brothers Company, announce the establishment of a $10,000 endowed scholarship at Seminole Community College.

"I am excited about the new relationship between Seminole Community College, the Legacy Soccer Foundation and the Lever Brothers Company," said Dr. E. Ann McGee, President of Seminole Community College. "The creation of this $10,000 endowed scholarship is just the beginning of what I hope will be a long and mutually beneficial partnership."

"It is also a good example of how SCC is aggressively pursuing new linkages with our community to better serve our future students," McGee concluded.

Providing an education to any and all residents of Seminole County is just part of the Seminole Community College mission. To that end, the SCC Foundation serves the College by providing support to students and faculty for scholarships and enrichment purposes. Over the years, hundreds of scholarships have been provided to SCC students.

Typically, money is generated by fund-raising events such as the annual SCC Dream Auction, by receiving gifts from community-minded businesses and philanthropists, and from SCC faculty and staff donations.

Contributions received by the Seminole Community College Foundation, incorporated for scholarships and faculty enrichment purposes may be matched by the state at a 60/40 ratio.

For example, a contribution of six-thousand dollars to the SCC Foundation can be matched by the state with four thousand dollars, creating a $10,000 scholarship fund. The same principle applies to matching monies for faculty enrichment purposes.

"More than $40,000 has been allocated by Legacy and Lever Brothers to support scholarships in our area," said Lary Adams, Legacy Soccer Foundation. "In most cases, funding will be matched by state monies. In this way, Legacy hopes to give back to the Central Florida community a return on its investment for hosting one of the best World Cup's ever staged."

When the heavy rains came once again to Sanford Tuesday evening, everyone chipped in to try to help cover the field. In the top photo the umpires take care of the mound, while several players from the Marlins try to cover the plate (middle). The rain was not the only thing that dampened spirits as the Sanford Fire Department (left) had to be called out after the pitcher and catcher from the White Sox collided and the catcher had to be transported to the hospital. The Marlins and White Sox will try again today at 6:45 p.m. to get in the final game of their base ball season to see who gets to play the Pirates for the City Championship.

Organ donor's wish nearly cancelled

DEAR ABBY: My loving, vibrant 60-year-old mother suffered a massive stroke in January. When the doctors told us there was nothing they could do, we had him and the emergency room staff that she wanted to be an organ donor. When Mother was alive, she frequently stressed how much it would mean to her to help others in this way. As Mother lingered in a coma in the intensive care unit, her nurse called us, suggesting we return to the hospital to say our final good-byes. Her blood pressure was falling quickly and death could be imminent. When we arrived, I asked the attending nurse how the organ donation process works. He stated at no time and was surprised to hear Mother was an organ donor. They immediately started administering medication to sustain her organs. I'm grateful I spoke up before she passed away and her organs were no longer viable. Thankfully, five people benefited

DEAR ABBY: My husband, Arthur, and I have been married 1 1/2 years and have a 1-year-old daughter. My problem may seem minor, but it is extremely frustrating. Every night after dinner, Arthur lies down on the couch to watch television. He then falls asleep. About 8 or 9 a.m., he comes upstairs and crawls into bed with me. Abby, we never cuddle or fall asleep together. I'm very hurt that we don't spend any time alone at the end of the day like most married couples. I have discussed my feelings with Arthur many times. He understands that it upsets me but says he can't go to bed as early as I do. He says he really enjoys watching TV and the "thing" of falling in bed with me. I'm at the point of wanting to kick him out of the bedroom so he can watch TV and sleep on the couch all night. What do you advise?

DEAR ABBY: My husband, Arthur, and I have been married 1 1/2 years and have a 1-year-old daughter. My problem may seem minor, but it is extremely frustrating. Every night after dinner, Arthur lies down on the couch to watch television. He then falls asleep. About 8 or 9 a.m., he comes upstairs and crawls into bed with me. Abby, we never cuddle or fall asleep together. I'm very hurt that we don't spend any time alone at the end of the day like most married couples. I have discussed my feelings with Arthur many times. He understands that it upsets me but says he can't go to bed as early as I do. He says he really enjoys watching TV and the "thing" of falling in bed with me. I'm at the point of wanting to kick him out of the bedroom so he can watch TV and sleep on the couch all night. What do you advise?

What are risks of aspirin therapy?

DEAR DR. GOTT: What is it about aspirin that causes stomach ulcers when used over a long period of time or in doses of 4,000 mg per day? What does enteric-coated aspirin do to the intestines?

DEAR READER: Aspirin (and similar drugs) affect the chemistry of the stomach lining, reducing a natural barrier against the effects of gastric acid.

Although the effects are more pronounced with regular aspirin, the consequences also occur with buffered aspirin, enteric-coated aspirin, liquid aspirin, or roval aspirin. With continued use of the drug, the stomach becomes progressively more irritated, often leading to heartburn and indigestion.

The gastric lining frequently bleeds. Eventually, an ulcer may form (sometimes painlessly), and the bleeding can become quite intense. Many experts have reported that aspirin and drugs used to reduce inflammation are a major cause of intestinal hemorrhage in this country.

As with any drug, the consumer must weigh the risks against the benefits. A few aspirin tablets over a brief period — for a cold, for example — pose little hazard. Similarly, the practice of taking an aspirin a day to prevent strokes and heart attacks is appropriate.

However, several daily aspirin tablets for weeks or months will put most patients at risk for the major complications I mentioned. Not everybody, you understand, but many.

These complications of aspirin, ibuprofen and prescription anti-inflammatory drugs can be lessened by taking a prescription antacid called Cytotec, a drug that helps maintain the normal gastric barrier. Or, as many people have discovered, the stomach irritation can be ameliorated (but not altogether prevented) by taking the aspirin with a full meal.

DEAR DR. GOTT: What kind of dreams do people who have been blind from birth have? Obviously, not with pictures or colors!

DEAR READER: Dreams are thoughts that we have while sleeping. As thoughts, they are governed by past experiences and perceptions. For example, you won't dream about something that is totally alien and unfamiliar to you — although your imagination (which depends, after all, on past experiences) can certainly play a role.

The blind are no different. Their dreams contain the same elements, but with a slightly different twist.

To research your question, I talked to a lovely patient of mine who has been blind since birth. Claire doesn't dream in color, because she has had no experiences with such visual stimuli.

However, her dreams are quite full and very normal, as a result of her phenomenal use of other, non-visual

PETER GOTT, M.D.

... For example, if she dreams of a room, she imagines how it would "look": the smells, the warmth, the touch of the carpet, the sounds.

She rarely feels emotion, as do we all, because this is a prominent part of any dream sequence. When she dreams of people, they are as she imagines: somewhat vague, black-and-white silhouettes with indistinct features.

Claire is quite quick to point out that her life — and her dreams — are quite rich. She is clearly experiencing her greatest and richest world in a manner that is different — but not less — than we sighted people do. She insists that she has no developed fear of other senses — hearing, touch, smell, and taste — that they take the place of vision. Thus, the "dream" portions of Claire's dreams are really a patchwork quilt of sensations that provide a highly full and vibrant individual experience.

Because this is such a fascinating subject for which I have used only one resource, I'd be delighted to hear from other readers who could give additional insights.

Still trying to win

By Phillip Alder

The next morning, after a quick trip to downtown Brisbane on the ferry, I went over to the Brisbane Bridge Centre to play in its Wednesday morning duplicate with Meta Goodman. (This game is recommended as long as you don't mind smokers, especially since the lunch is excellent and cheap.) We could come home only second, primarily because I forgot my contract in one deal. I could have taken 12 top tricks in three no-trump, but thinking I was in the laydown six clubs, I took a stupid finesse (only stupid in no-trump, not in clubs) at trick one and held myself to nine tricks.

We did well on this deal despite a bidding misunderstanding. One normally opens one diamond when 4-4 in the minors, but I opted to bid my stronger suit in case partner ended on lead. East should not have made a one-diamond overall; she should have made a takeout double. Meta intended two spades as a fit-showing jump in competition, promising spades and clubs. However, we had never discussed it. I thought she had either a weak or strong jump shift. In case it was the latter, I raised spades. East felt she had enough trumps to beat four spades, but Meta showed that East needed a fourth ace. After winning trick one with the diamond ace, East switched to her singleton club. Meta won in the dummy and called for a low spade. East ducked this trick but won the next spade and tried unsuccessfully to give partner a diamond ruff. Now Meta drew trumps, ran the clubs and conceded one heart trick for plus 800.

Two endeavors that appeared to be totally unproductive in the past might be revitalized in the year ahead. You were closer to success than you realized. This time you will know better.

GENIUS (May 21-June 20) If you are influenced by your associates' suggestions today, you might be thrown off course. Set your own pace and abide by your own procedures. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2.75 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1756, Albany Hill Station, New York, NY 10186.

GAMBLER (June 21-July 20) Although you may feel an urge to spend your time leisurely today, you must take care not to neglect your responsibilities.

LEAD (July 21-Aug. 20) Associate with enjoyable companions today, but take care not to impose your will on them. You should have respect for the will of the majority.

WISDOM (Aug. 21-Sept. 20) Striving for lofty goals will be an admirable desire today. However, try to keep your feelings in check. If something goes wrong, don't blame others.

LUNA (Sept. 21-Oct. 20) Associates will not be receptive to your suggestions today if they think you have a closed mind. At least, you should be willing to listen.

SCORPIO (Oct. 21-Nov. 20) Constant vigilance will be essential today if you manage a delicate development for someone else. Do not let your guard down, even for a minute.

SABOTAGE (Nov. 21-Dec. 20) For the sake of harmony, both you and your mate should try to build on each other's ideas. This will be a time to build bridges, not barriers.

SARACENS (Dec. 21-Jan. 20) Your physical and mental energy level could be high today, but you might not be more productive. Try to distinguish between asserting and aggressive behavior.

ADAMANT (Jan. 21-Feb. 20) Avoid associating with a stupid today if some of the members remind you uncomfortably. Instead, try to find companions who spend their time in more pleasant ways.

POWER (Feb. 21-March 20) If you want others to help you to finish a matter which interests you, share your objectives with them. If you don't, they may not support you.

ARMY (March 21-April 20) It looks as if you'll be in a tentative mood today, so you must guard what you say. If you don't you might distance a friend.

TRAVELER (April 21-May 20) Your material desires could be very pronounced today and in your eagerness to get what you want, you must take care not to get involved.
