Magic fight back, fall short

The Orlando Magic overcame a 25-point fourth-quarter deficit Tuesday to tie the Golden State Warriors with just over a minute left, but it wasn't enough.

A charging violation against Terry Catledge with just over 10 seconds gave the Warriors a one-and-one free throw situation, of which they converted the back end to gain a one-point lead.

Orlando got two shots off in the final 10 seconds but couldn't find the mark before time expired.

Senators pass clean air bill

The Senate on Tuesday adopted a landmark clean air bill that would slice acid rain emissions in half, cut cancer-causing industrial pollution and dissipate smog in 101 cities.

The Senate vote of 89-11 was the first major step by Congress since 1977 to strengthen the Clean Air Act, an effort that repeatedly stalled on Capitol Hill during the 1980s.

Siamese twins separated

A pair of infant boys connected since birth at the chest and stomach were separated Tuesday during a marathon operation that left both in critical but stable condition, a hospital spokeswoman said.

"I think everyone is just elated," said Catherine Coleman, a spokeswoman for All Children's Hospital.

Coleman said doctors separated Jakob and James Watkins at 7 p.m. EDT, or about 11 hours into the delicate surgery. Doctors then divided their attention between the two infant boys, she said.

Challenger memorial planned

Plans were unveiled Tuesday for a $14 million tribute to the crew of the space shuttle Challenger.

Officials say a multi-million dollar education center will be built at the Kennedy Space Center as part of the memorial.

Students from kindergarten through 12th grade and teachers are to be admitted free to the facility, which would include an exploration station equipped with hardware used during space missions.

Cops take tip from Ninja Turtles

SANFORD — "Call me Michelangelo, one of the Ninja Turtles," a Seminole County sheriff's patrol deputy said today as he tapped his bulletproof vests.

Today it's mandatory for deputies on day patrol as well as night to wear their department-issued bulletproof vests.

The new order came from Sheriff John Polk yesterday.

Last Friday, Deputy Thomas Johnson was a hero on the ball-shell, like the fictional hero Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, when in an afternoon shootout with bank robbery suspects he was saved from two direct 9 mm rounds to the chest by his bulletproof vest. Johnson was voluntarily wearing the vest that saved his life.

Paperwork mixup gives death row inmate few more days of life

United Press International

STARKE — A man expecting to die in the state's electric chair this morning as a result of his murder conviction in Seminole County, received an unexpected reprieve because the processing of paperwork was bungled.

The state Supreme Court issued a temporary stay of execution Tuesday, 16 hours before Robert Preston was to be electrocuted.

Preston, 32, was to be sent to the electric chair at 7 a.m. today, but the stay pushed back his execution until noon Friday, said Bob McMaster with the Florida Department of Corrections.

McMaster said Preston, who was convicted in 1981 of stabbing to death a Altamonte Springs convenience store clerk, would not be moved from the death watch cell adjacent to the execution chamber at the state prison in Starke.

The full court issued the temporary stay about 3:30 p.m., about the same time the execution team conducted a "walk-through" in the execution chamber, officials said.

Defense attorneys had not been able to file their stay of execution request, the first in a string of expected appeals, until after noon Tuesday because of the mix-up.

Seminole County Circuit Judge S. Joseph Davis, the trial judge who sentenced Preston to die in 1981, denied his appeal late Friday, but the high court did not receive his signed order until Tuesday, court officials said.

Larry Spalding, director of Capital Collateral Representatives in Tallahassee, the firm representing Preston, said until jurisdiction was

Board advises against corporal punishment use

By VICKI DeBORMIER
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — Seminole County principals and teachers should look for alternatives to corporal punishment, the Seminole County School Board decided last night during discussion of changes to the student conduct code.

Last year there were 577 cases of corporal punishment in the district.

The board last night also discussed prohibiting students from consuming drugs or alcohol within eight hours of arriving on school campuses.

The board last night voted to accept recommendations of the policy review committee about changes to the student conduct code.

"We don't have much in the way of changes," Supt. Bob Hughes said.

The biggest change was the addendum to the district's policy on corporal punishment. The policy change, which is being recommended for advertisement, would insert a message to inform students and parents that principals are "being encouraged to develop and to implement positive alternative disciplinary measures in lieu of corporal punishment."

Lake Mary teacher has alternative

LAKE MARY — Lake Mary High School business education instructor Martha Posey has implemented an alternative to the use of corporal punishment or out-of-school suspension she hopes will keep students in school.

Known as the Phoenix Curriculum, the program was developed by Drs. Betty Youngs and Brian Tracey of California.

"It puts a lot of emphasis on the importance of self control and self respect," Posey said.

While she points out her plan is not original, it is still new to Seminole County and administrators at several other schools are watching to determine the success of Lake Mary's program.

Giving up her morning planning period on Tuesdays and Thursdays, Posey began in September to take 10 or 12 students at a time with offenses — ranging from truancy to assault on an adult — to work with them.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE

Governor's cease-fire call may not help

From staff and wire reports

TALLAHASSEE — The olive branch that Gov. Bob Martinez extended during his State of the State address Tuesday could easily turn into a political whip if lawmakers do not follow his agenda, some Democratic legislators said.

Even Republicans were predicting a long spring legislative session with lots of partisan battling as lawmakers face 60 days in which they have to solve a $1 billion deficit in the state budget.

"At the onset, I would say no to the question the governor's speech is going to produce any changes to the atmosphere," said Rep. Frank Stone, R-Casselberry, from Tallahassee this morning. "But I think after everyone has a chance to think about it, they'll see it serves no purpose to fight over everything."

Stone said though Martinez' speech was "subdued," it did lay the governor's ground rules that lawmakers should lay politics aside and work for the benefit of Floridians not their own re-election.

"It's unfortunate," said Rep. Dale Patchett, R-Vero Beach, the Minority Leader who is retiring after the session. "After 14 years I hoped my last session was going to be smooth. But this one's going to be rough. I'm afraid, and it's going to be a long session."

But Democratic leaders were ready for a scuffle while the governor's appeal was still ringing in their ears. Senate Majority Leader Jack Gordon, D-Miami Beach, said Martinez was only portraying part of the truth about Florida's state of affairs when he spoke of the Water re-use plan will help clean up Lake Monroe

By J. BRADLEY DILLING

SANFORD — A $30 million water re-use and conservation project on the city drawing board for more than four years will go on line within three months, city engineer Bill Simmons said.

When it is completed in 1992 or 1993, the system will end the dumping of treated water into Lake Monroe. The federal Environmental Protection Agency in the 1980s ordered the city to end the dumping by 1992.

The water meets all the Florida Department of Environmental Resources' standards for unrestricted irrigation use, and since all of it will be used for irrigation purposes, that makes it a conservation effort as well as a city engineering project, Simmons said.

"Yes, we're pretty excited about that," Simmons said.

Sanford's reclaimed water system was featured in a recent EPA seminar in Orlando.

The city treatment plant has recently upgraded the quality of the water with advanced chemical treatment and filtration processes to make the water recyclable.

Stolen refrigerator recovered

SANFORD — A refrigerator stolen from the First Baptist Church, 509 Magnolia Ave., Sanford, Feb. 28, was recovered by a church representative who bought it back from Earl's Used Appliances, 500 Sanford Ave., police report. Police said the night of the burglary they traced dolly tracks from the church to the rear of the appliance store. A church member reported finding the refrigerator in the store, and store owner Earl Black on Monday reportedly identified from a police lineup the man who allegedly sold the refrigerator to the store. That led to charges of burglary, grand theft and dealing in stolen property Tuesday at the county jail against Harold Charles Daves, 28, of 1110 W. Ninth St., Sanford.

Forgery charged

SANFORD — A man accused of stealing, forging and cashing three checks on the account of a Mary Stallings, has been arrested by Sanford police. He was arrested at the county jail Tuesday. Police said the checks were issued and cashed at Empire Bank, in Sanford, between Feb. 27 and March 9.

Lawmakers asked for 'cease-fire'

By RY BAUMAN
 United Press International

TALLAHASSEE — Gov. Bob Martinez called for a "60-day cease-fire" between lawmakers Tuesday as the 92nd session of the Florida Legislature convened for business, saying that the state's needs are too severe to be subjected to partisan differences. Democrats reacted coolly to his plea, however, saying the governor is just as ready to play politics as they are. "He wants to bury the hatchet, but he wants to bury it squarely in our backs and say, 'Here it is, now cooperate with me, and to the extent that you don't cooperate with me I'm going to call that partisan politics,'" said House Majority Leader Keith Arnold, D-Fort Myers. Others agreed, saying the Republican governor is simply looking for relief in a campaign year in which he is seeking re-election. "I didn't hear anything encouraging at all," said Sen. Carrie Meek, D-Miami. "It sounds like a long session to me."

Lawmakers and observers alike have been predicting that the session will be a stormy one, and Martinez acknowledged those predictions in his State of the State address to both bodies of the Legislature.

"Some say there is a risk that this year the battle will become so heated, so partisan, that it engulfs and destroys our work on behalf of the people of Florida," Martinez said. "That is why I ask you to join me today in declaring a 60-day cease-fire here in Florida's capital. For the next two months, let us all, Democrats and Republicans, House and Senate, legislative and executive — let us all agree that the public's business must come first." His plea prompted only scattered applause and cheers, however, almost exclusively from fellow Republicans.

The majority of Martinez' speech was a pitch for passage of his proposed $26.2 billion budget, which is heavy on anti-crime measures, such as expanding the prison system to house 9,400 more criminals. The state has authorized prison construction for 19,000 more inmates during the last three years.

Martinez also called on lawmakers to adopt a series of reforms in the state's ethics laws, beginning with the Legislature itself. "The time has come for the Legislature to extend the Sunshine Law to its own activities," opening all its meetings to the public and news media, he said. He also wants the Legislature to adopt a two-term limit for members of the Florida Cabinet and extend ethics requirements to members of the Public Service Commission. On the subject of new funding sources for transportation, where Martinez and the Legislature have been deadlocked for more than a year, the governor said little except to urge adoption of his plan to issue $3 billion in bonds over a 10-year period.

The governor concluded his address with another appeal for harmony. "There are many things that separate us, but one thing binds us together — service to the people of Florida," he said. "There is a time and a place for the fight in the political arena. For now, let's put away the swords and get on with our business," Martinez said. The House and Senate recessed shortly after Martinez's address and headed for a series of receptions and traditional opening-day functions. Some committees were scheduled to meet Tuesday afternoon, but the majority of them do not get down to business until Wednesday.

state's good health. "It's in good shape if you're not trying to get into a university. It's in good shape if you're in decent health. It's in good shape if you're not trying to get from one place to another on a road or a bus," Gordon said. Gordon said he thought Martinez was trying to call a truce to avoid another political disaster, such as the November special session on abortion where his attempts to place more restrictions on women's access to the procedure were shot down. "If I was taking as much of a beating as he was, I would have done what he has, which is to propose that we change the state flag to one that is all white," Gordon said.

One early point of dispute is prison expansion. Martinez wants to spend $150 million to accommodate 9,400 new inmates; House Speaker Tom Gustafson wants to spend the money on a juvenile justice program and crime prevention. Another is Martinez's plan to sell $3 billion in bonds over the next 10 years to buy environmentally sensitive lands. House Majority Leader Keith Arnold, D-Fort Myers, predicted Martinez would lose that fight. "Florida traditionally has been a pay-as-you-go state," Arnold said. "We incur little debt, we have a balanced budget requirement that we adhere to strongly. We believe in a solid fiscal response to the problems in this state. We've not been very supportive of basically borrowing and bonding in the past, and that's been true for Democratic governors as well as Republicans."

Education Commissioner Betty Castor, a Democrat, predicted Martinez would have a tough fight on his hands if he resists attempts to get more money in the budget for teacher's salaries and schoolchildren. "I think we ought to put the pressure on," Castor said. "Effectively, his recommendation is to increase class size. Parents don't want that. Teachers don't want that."

Castor said Martinez, a former teacher who led a walkout some 20 years ago when he was a union leader in Tampa, seems to have ignored teachers altogether. "Teachers didn't like his address at all, and they are the largest group of state employees," she said. "We have 60 days to fashion a better budget. We may not get as much as we have in past years, but we can try to get more than 2 percent, (which is what Martinez is offering)."

Committee OKs program for poor, pregnant teens

United Press International

TALLAHASSEE — A measure to curb the increasing number of poor, pregnant teenagers by providing counseling on abortion, foster care and adoption was approved Tuesday by the House Health Care Committee. Pro-choice activists were pleased that the bill survived a round of amendments that would have prevented counselors from mentioning abortion as an available option, but abortion foes were opposed to state money being used to educate children about abortion.

"It's a waste of legislators' time to resurface this issue," said Rep. Alzo Reddick, the bill's sponsor. "I don't think they're concerned with the welfare of those children."

The measure sponsored by Reddick, D-Orlando, would expand services available to pregnant teens through the Teen Parent Program, a component of the state Dropout Prevention Act.

Services would be coordinated through county health agencies and the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services. The program would provide counseling on the options available to a pregnant teenager, including foster care, adoption and abortion. It also would make health care available to teens not covered under Project Independence, a state program that provides job training and placement for teenage parents under 20. Before approving the bill, committee members defeated an amendment by Rep. Everett Kelly, D-Tallahassee, that would have prevented counselors from telling pregnant teens that terminating the pregnancy was an available option. Rosemary Gallagher, a lobbyist for the Florida Catholic Conference, told the committee that she and other anti-abortion activists were opposed to counselors mentioning abortion as an option. Gallagher said she was concerned that state money was being spent to "promote abortion" and refer pregnant teens to abortion clinics.

She also said she did not believe that counselors could list abortion as an option without conveying some bias. But supporters of the bill successfully argued that four federal courts ruled such language was unconstitutional because it violated the first amendment rights of the counselors.

Skull find believed prank

SANFORD — Police think it was a prankster who left an old, blacked skull outside the door of a Master's Cove apartment yesterday afternoon. Sanford Lt. Mike Rotundo said police believe the skull, which was found by Francis McQueen outside apartment 39, may have been taken from a crypt at a nearby cemetery. So far, police haven't identified the origin.

The skull is at the police station. Rotundo said police don't believe it is linked to any death-related crime or Satanism. They also don't think there is a connection between the "very old" skull and other very old bones found in January in boxes on the porch of the Henry Shelton Sanford Memorial Library and Museum on First Street.

Drug, sex quiz again blocked in Seminole

By VICKI DeBORMIER
 Herald staff writer

SANFORD — The Seminole County school district has received a national survey from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) asking high school students about drug and alcohol use and sexual practices. Local students, however, will not be given the chance to answer the survey questions. "It's the third year in a row that we haven't been given the opportunity to get this survey out," said May Waters, director of the Department of Education's comprehensive health education AIDS project. This was the first year that Seminole County was given the survey. "This is an on-going project," Waters said. "Every year we send it out and the Commissioner gets pressure from the Florida school superintendents' associations and the Florida School Board Association and the students never see the survey." Waters said she was told that Dr. Wayne Blanton, director of the FSBA had told DOE Commissioner Betty Castor the survey was too "politically sensitive." Blanton had no comment yesterday. According to Waters, some school officials in the state are worried that a quiz on drugs, sex and health habits would result in political fallout. She said she had heard they thought some questions in the survey were inappropriate and unnecessary. Castor has now sent a letter to all 31 school superintendents whose districts were chosen for the survey asking them not to have students complete them. She said the fact that the state Department of Education receives about $400,000 a year from CDC to support projects like Waters' does not require it to take part. The nationwide study is designed to obtain information about high-risk behavior of teenagers and how it affects drug abuse, the spread of AIDS, suicide and teenage pregnancy. Earlier this month, Castor's office mailed letters telling school superintendents their districts had been selected to take part in the survey. But complaints began pouring in shortly after the questionnaires arrived. Castor said. "We got the survey about three weeks ago and I passed it on to Dr. (Marion) Dalley and Roger Beathard," Supt. Bob Hughes said. "We were preparing to distribute it in the schools when Roger put in a call to Tallahassee with a question about the survey."

Beathard said he was checking on the wording of one of the questions when he was told by Waters not to have the students answer the questions. "She didn't tell me why we weren't supposed to do it and I didn't ask," Beathard said. Students in the ninth through 12th grades were to fill out the questionnaire on a voluntary and anonymous basis. Students also would be required to get parental consent and approval from the school superintendent before they could fill out the survey. "It was going to be a lot of costly paperwork," Hughes said. The 70-question survey contains multiple-choice questions, asking students how many times they have carried a weapon in the last month, how often they seriously consider committing suicide and if they use condoms during sexual intercourse to prevent sexually transmitted diseases. According to Laura Kahn, media relations specialist with CDC in Atlanta, nine states, including Florida, refused to allow students to complete the form.

Police chief and narcotics officers suspended by city

United Press International

COCOA — Police Chief Gene Powers and his department's two-man narcotics unit, under investigation by the city for criminal and administrative wrongdoing, have been suspended. City Manager Charles McCool, who has headed the investigation, said the suspensions were not disciplinary actions. "I feel this action is appropriate and necessary to avoid any possibility of further allegations or interference with the investigation," he said. Power, Lt. Mike Brown and narcotics Officer Dale Dixon were suspended with pay late Tuesday. Last week, Brown had asked to be demoted to patrolman, McCool said. Powers, who has been on sick leave since last week for stress-related ailments, was unavailable for comment Wednesday. In an earlier response to allegations, however, he said he had no knowledge of wrongdoing and did not intend to resign. About 20 people, many from within the department, have given statements implicating officers of criminal and administrative wrongdoing, McCool said. The allegations include charges that evidence was falsified and drug suspects were tipped off before raids. McCool said he was turning over the case and sworn statements made against the department to the Brevard County state attorney's office. Capt. B.G. Scott was appointed acting chief. This is the fourth time in four years the department has been investigated for wrongdoing.

A failed system

The mentally ill have always lacked political clout. As a consequence, they have been consistently victimized by a system that used to warehouse them in state asylums and now puts them out on the street to fend for themselves. But, the most recent example of their victimization is particularly appalling.

A congressional investigation has disclosed that hospitals around the country have misallocated upwards of $100 million in federal mental health funds to pay for such items as swimming pools, tennis and volleyball courts and the hiring of maids.

From 1963 to 1980, nearly $300 million was awarded to hospitals under the auspices of the Community Mental Health Centers Act. Recipients of the federal grants were required to document that the money would be used for in-patient beds, day-treatment centers, outpatient services, 24-hour emergency services, and education and consultation services. Instead, millions of federal dollars were allegedly misused by as many as half of the 575 hospitals, including Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles and Orlando Regional Medical Center in Florida.

One audit, conducted by a private company commissioned by the National Institute of Mental Health, found that about one-fourth of the 158 mental health centers it examined had not complied with the law. Many were providing little or no services to the patients the program was intended to help.

In theory, the program was supposed to provide community based services to the mentally ill, thereby enabling large mental hospitals to close or scale back their operations. In fact, many hospitals appear simply to have taken the money and run.

Some hospitals stopped providing services to poor patients altogether, while others limited their number and catered instead to persons who could afford to pay for the care. In the case of Cedars-Sinai, investigators posting as unemployed and uninsured mental patients were told they would have to pay $14.50 or more for a 45-minute counseling session.

This kind of negligence has caused tens of thousands of mentally disturbed persons in this country to wander the streets because they have nowhere to turn for help. As many as 40 percent of the nation's homeless are believed to be suffering from psychosis, severe neurosis or other forms of mental illness. These individuals deserve nothing less than a complete overhaul of the system that has failed them so miserably.

America's South African myths

SAN FRANCISCO — What little hope there is that the American people will understand even a modicum of what is going on in South Africa in the months and years ahead depends on grasping at least the basic elements of the racial and ethnic situation there.

It is natural enough for Americans to assume that South Africa's race problem is not unlike our own, with the significant difference that the blacks there outnumber the whites nearly five to one, instead of being outnumbered by the whites (as here) by something on the order of six or seven to one. We further assume that South Africa's black population is more or less comparable to our own, in terms of cultural level, background and desires.

Armed with these assumptions (all of which are wholly mistaken), Americans quickly come to the conclusion that "the blacks" are entitled to take over South Africa — Q.E.D.

It's bad enough to have such king-sized misconceptions floating around at all, but it is vastly more unfortunate when they turn up in an ordinarily intelligent journal of opinion like The New Republic, from which a good many of America's most influential people (primarily but not exclusively liberals) tend to derive their information and their opinions.

I have before me an article from the March 12 issue of The New Republic, entitled "Mandela Unbound." It was written, from Johannesburg, by one John Carlin, who is described as the Southern Africa correspondent of the Independent of London. It is largely in praise — indeed, one is tempted to say "worship" — of Nelson Mandela.

But it discusses the forthcoming negotiations between Mandela and State President F.W. de Klerk with considerable perspicacity and (at least in comparison with most other such articles) commendable balance. If it were true that the coming negotiations will be essentially a bilateral affair between Nelson Mandela's African National Congress and de Klerk's white regime, Carlin's article would constitute a splendid analysis.

But, alas, that isn't true. It is, in fact, very nearly the exact opposite of the truth. At the bargaining table will be at least a dozen other groups, most (though not all) of them black. Among those present, you may be sure, will be the shrewd and articulate Chief Mangosuthu Buthekezi, political leader of the Zulu nation (pop. 6 million), who detests apartheid every bit as much as Nelson Mandela does, but also detests Mandela's closest ally, the South African Communist Party.

Also present, in person or by proxy, will be the leaders of several African Christian churches (one of which boasts 5 million members), all far more conservative politically than the ANC. Entitled to representation too will be the elected leaders of the various black homelands, speaking for the nearly half of all South African blacks who still live, tribally organized, in their ancestral areas.

Then, moving beyond the black-vs.-white debate, what about the 3 million "Coloureds," a mulatto group that has enjoyed three centuries of acculturation to the West? These are the true analogues of America's blacks, and they resemble the average Bantu about as much as a middle-class Harlem resident resembles an Apache straight off the reservation.

GEORGE F. WILL

Baker's 'realism' not so real

WASHINGTON — Perhaps Rep. Harold Rogers, the Kentucky Republican, was just joking in the robust, exaggerating tradition of America's middle border. Let us assume so, for his sake. Otherwise he becomes one more reason to doubt Republicans' seriousness. What he said was:

"Every statesman in the world over the last four decades, from Churchill to Reagan, has attempted — with millions of troops and trillions of dollars — to free up Eastern Europe...and to no avail, until the first year of the Baker administration at State."

The scrumptious specimen of the post hoc ergo propter hoc fallacy (the rooster crows and the sun rises, therefore the crowing caused the sunrise) was contained in a Los Angeles Times report on how bullish Washington is about Secretary of State James Baker. The report contained another illuminating passage.

The scene was a breakfast table around which sat Baker and some congressmen, two of whom, both Democrats, asked: If the Cold War is over, why does the budget not reflect that fact, particularly regarding increased aid for new democracies in Eastern Europe, and poor Third World countries?

According to the Times, "Baker's hazel eyes narrowed. His honeyed voice went cold." And his de-honeyed voice said: "You want to go out and argue for higher taxes to pay for foreign aid? Try that argument out in your district, congressman."

Such swaggering "realism" sends shivers of admiration through some Washingtonians. But the important issue is not whether the congressman can afford, politically, to take that position regarding foreign aid, or whether the country can afford, economically, the aid. Rather, the crucial question is whether the country can afford to have a government that thinks so much the way Baker does.

Baker reflects the President, and policy-by-polls reflects thinness of beliefs. So does the hitching of U.S. foreign policy to foreign personalities, as in U.S. dithering about Lithuania, an unseemly policy of solicitude for Gorbachev, whose survival is the President's only clear foreign-policy aim. More "realism."

Recently Washington went into one of its periodic seizures of loquaciousness, and this time the great question of the hour concerned the presidential epidermis: Who gets under George Bush's skin. No one does, said Himself, through clenched teeth, when asked specifically about Rep. Richard Gephardt, the House majority leader. But Gephardt clearly did, by saying things like:

maxim of the Bush administration seems to be, "Do polls, risk nothing." Truman, Gephardt notes, launched Point Four and the Marshall Plan (the seed of containment, which precluded Baker's thrilling dissolution of communism) when a Gallup Poll showed only 14 percent support for foreign aid.

Americans had long deferred purchases of houses, cars, even clothes, and had shed blood on the soil of nations when seeking aid. And Truman was then more unpopular than Nixon was to be during Watergate. But he would not be a President who "thinks he is too big to do the necessary persuading," so he deserved to be re-elected, and was.

Today's popularity-hoarding President may yet learn that such political parsimony is false economy. Speaking of which...

We are in the midst of (although perhaps not yet even halfway through) the costliest debacle in the history of American governance. The savings-and-loan scandal is another black hole swallowing a share of our children's standard of living. New losses are much larger than even recently predicted. The eventual cost is unknown (estimates range from $300 billion to $500 billion), but three things are known.

We know that in this decade alone the bailout will, as Sen. Lloyd Bentsen says, cost more than will be spent on highways, or on the war on drugs, or on preschool education.

We know that this diversion of capital from more productive uses will, like the Reagan-Bush deliberate deficits, lower the standard of living, economic and cultural, of coming generations.

And we know that one reason so many billions are hemorrhaging away is that the Bush administration is saving a few millions by scripping on FBI agents and Justice Department investigators and prosecutors.

The savings-and-loan crisis is complicated, silent and slow-motion. It is the sort of murky mess about which there is no focused public opinion. So no polls tell the Bush administration to behave properly. So it doesn't.

Such swaggering 'realism' sends shivers through some Washingtonians.

Another scandal brewing at FDA

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration was far from humbled by its recent generic drug scandal. Instead of being more cautious about the approval of drugs and food additives, the FDA looks like an agency bent on self-destruction.

The debacle du jour is the review process for bovine somatotropin (BST) — a synthetic growth hormone injected in cows so they will give more milk. Last fall we exposed the confidential studies from three companies that make BST. Those studies, submitted to the FDA as part of the approval process, showed that cows injected with BST may lose weight and suffer low fertility rates, anemia and mastitis. And the jury is still out on what effect BST will have on people who drink milk from treated cows.

A senator and two representatives have asked the FDA to scrutinize the way it has handled the BST approval process, and the General Accounting Office has launched its own investigation.

But instead of being dismayed, the FDA is barreling ahead with plans to approve BST for widespread use. And the chief critic of BST within the agency, Dr. Richard Burroughs, was fired after he raised objections to the rubber-stamp treatment BST was getting. Five years ago, the FDA approved the use of BST on test cows pending full approval for widespread use. Many Americans have already tasted BST milk because the milk from the test cows has been mingled with the regular supply.

The synthetic hormone is made by Monsanto Agricultural Co., American Cyanamid and Elanco (a joint venture of Dow Chemical, Upjohn and Eli Lilly.) Those companies stand to make an estimated $500 million a year off BST if widely accepted by farmers. The companies have embarked on a massive public relations campaign to win friends in the farming community and to convince consumers that BST milk is safe. But some experts remain unconvinced. Dr. Samuel Epstein of the University of Illinois School of Public Health has been a food safety advocate for 30 years. He challenged the beef industry for injecting growth hormones into cattle, and now he has turned his attention to BST.

Epstein recently stepped up his attack after seeing the test data from the BST manufacturers and how the FDA treated that data. Epstein told our associate Tim Warner that the FDA approved the sale of BST milk from the test cows without proof that it was safe for public consumption. Epstein calls the BST approval process the worst example of "suppression and manipulation of data" by the FDA that he has seen in his 30 years as a watchdog. Burroughs was the inside watchdog until the FDA fired him. He was a target animal safety reviewer at the FDA's Center for Veterinary Medicine. Burroughs won early recognition from the agency for his work on the BST approval process, but after he began to raise objections, he was transferred to a make-work job. Then the FDA fired him for not performing that job satisfactorily. The FDA says Burroughs' firing had nothing to do with his outspoken comments on BST. Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. and Reps. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., and John Conyers, D-Mich., are taking the complaints about BST seriously. They ordered the GAO to investigate the FDA review process. But that investigation may not be finished fast enough to catch the FDA.

Sources at the GAO told us the investigation is just getting off the ground and may be hampered by trade secrets.

Clean Air 1990

Pollution controls would cost everybody

By GEORGE LOSSEK
United Press International

WASHINGTON — After 13 years of legislative paralysis, the Senate adopted a landmark clean air bill to slash acid rain emissions in half, cut cancer-causing industrial pollution and disperse smog-choking 101 cities.

Senators approved the bill 89-11 Tuesday night and sent it to the House, ending more than two months of floor debate and back-room negotiations with the Bush administration on a bipartisan compromise.

Florida's senators, Bob Graham, a Democrat, and Connie Mack, a Republican, voted for the bill.

The Senate vote was the first major step by Congress since 1977 to strengthen the Clean Air Act, an effort that repeatedly stalled on Capitol Hill in the 1980s due to strong opposition from the Reagan administration.

The final legislation will touch every American's pocketbook through higher utility bills, increased auto and gasoline costs and other effects rippling from pollution controls affecting industries ranging from coal mining to petrochemicals to the neighborhood dry cleaner.

Industry officials warned the changes could cost hundreds of thousands of jobs, but agree with environmentalists that the nation must address its gargantuan — and growing — air pollution problems, including:

• An estimated 23 million tons of acid rain emissions belched from coal-burning power plants each year, damaging lakes, streams and forests in the Northeast and Canada.

• About 2.7 billion pounds of nerve-damaging and cancer-causing pollution released by factories each year. The Environmental Protection Agency has regulated only seven of the hundreds of toxic chemicals routinely spewed into the environment.

• Smog-causing emissions from cars and industry that have put 101 cities in violation of federal health standards.

Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell of Maine said the failure to act had allowed air pollution to worsen substantially over the past decade.

"We've had 13 years of statements, and the air in some places has gotten dirtier," he said. "Now we need a law to make the air cleaner everywhere. This bill will do that. It dramatically expands and strengthens the clean air law and does it in the most cost-efficient manner possible."

While praising the bill, Mitchell also told reporters he would seek to toughen the bill in negotiations with the House. That could provoke a showdown later this year with President Bush, who has threatened to veto any bill that costs industry too much.

Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas said the "landmark" bill would probably rank as the Senate's most important accomplishment in 1990. "I don't think anything else we will do this year will surpass this legislation," he said.

White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater, returning from a two-day domestic trip with the president, said after the vote, "We're pleased. We'll work for passage in the House."

Senate sponsors estimated stricter emission limits on cars, factories and coal-burning power plants will cost the economy $21 billion a year, on top of $32 billion now spent by industry on pollution control. Industry groups said the bill actually will cost $40 million more.

Some Senate opponents said the bill would take a dramatic economic toll. Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said he could not support it because its acid rain provisions would devastate his home-state coal industry.

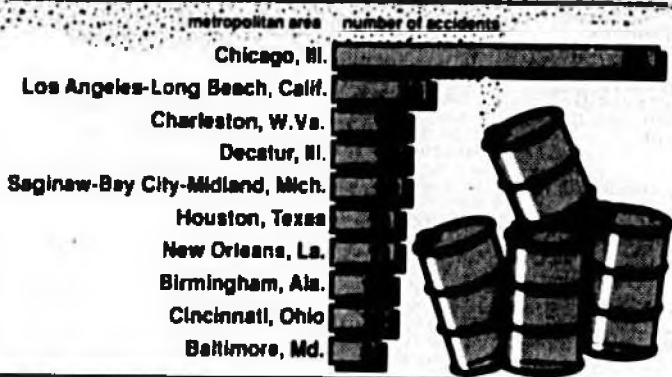

"Clean air need not be bought with reduced economic growth, job losses and human suffering," he said.

Environmental activists were unhappy the bill did not go farther to clear the air.

"Without major improvements, this bill will not deliver on the promise of clean air for our children and grandchildren," said Blake Early, a spokesman for the Sierra Club, which along with other environmental groups vowed to seek stronger legislation in the House.

Risky Cities

Metropolitan areas where the most chemical accidents released toxic chemicals into the air

Source: American Demographics

NEA GRAPHICS

Chicago, the Windy City, holds a dubious distinction: Among major U.S. metropolitan areas, it had the most chemical accidents (from 1982 through 1986) that released toxic chemicals into the air. The Los Angeles-Long Beach area was a distant second.

Highlights of Senate clean air legislation

United Press International

WASHINGTON — Here are the major elements of the clean air bill passed by the Senate:

Urban Smog

The bill imposes clean-up requirements to reduce industrial and automobile emissions in the 101 cities now violating federal health standards for ozone smog.

Most cities would have to come into compliance by the year 2000, but the nation's nine smoggiest urban areas would be given more time in recognition of the severity of their problems. A deadline of 2005 would be set for New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, Houston, Milwaukee, San Diego and Muskegon, Mich., while Los Angeles, the nation's dirtiest city, would have until 2010.

If a state fails to impose an adequate smog control plan, the Environmental Protection Agency would be required to impose one penalty for each year of non-compliance. Possible penalties include limitations on the use of federal highway funds, a ban on construction of new factories that emit smog-forming pollution, a ban on connection of drinking water hookups in new buildings and the withholding of federal air pollution control funds.

The bill eliminates a section of current law requiring the EPA to impose cleanup plans on states and cities that drag their feet on pollution control.

Acid Rain

The bill would require 107 coal-burning power plants, primarily in the Midwest and South, including three in Florida, to reduce annual sulfur dioxide emissions by roughly 10 million tons below 1980 levels by the turn of the century. Sulfur dioxide is one of the key "precursor" pollutants that causes acid rain in the Northeast and Canada. (The only Central Florida site is at Bartow.)

The bill also would set up a system of marketable pollution permits that utilities could buy and sell among themselves so that emission control could be carried out at those plants where solutions were the cheapest.

The pollution permit system will be used by the EPA to "cap" sulfur dioxide emissions after the year 2000, ensuring the 10-million ton reduction is not eroded.

The bill contains incentives for utilities to use smokestack "scrubbers" or innovative "clean coal" technologies that would allow them to continue burning high-polluting, high-sulfur coal in an environmentally sound way.

Utilities also would be required by 2005 to cut annual nitrogen oxide emissions, another pollutant linked to acid rain, by 2 million tons below 1980 levels.

Toxic Air Pollution

The bill would require the Environmental Protection Agency to set limits for 191 cancer-causing or nerve-damaging pollutants emitted from a wide variety of industrial facilities.

Any plant emitting more than 10 tons per year of a regulated pollutant would be required to install pollution control devices to reduce emissions below the applicable EPA limit.

The bill sets a goal of reducing emissions so that "the most exposed individual" near any plant would face a cancer risk of no greater than one in a million.

The bottom-line health standard would be a cancer risk of one in 10,000. Any plant that could not meet that standard would have to shut down, unless the plant operator conducted a site-specific health assessment that showed actual cancer risks were below that standard.

Auto Emissions

The bill would require automakers to reduce smog-forming tailpipe emissions from cars by the mid-1990's. The cuts would reduce nitrogen oxide emissions by 22 percent and hydrocarbon emissions by 60 percent.

A second round of tailpipe emission reductions would take effect nationwide in the year 2003 if 12 or more seriously smoggy cities — outside of California — did not meet federal health standards at the end of 2001. If required, those reductions would reduce remaining emissions by 50 percent.

Alternatively, if a city had smog 25 percent above federal health standards in the year 2000, the second-round emission reductions would be required for all cars in that city.

Alternative Fuels

The bill requires that reformulated gasoline — a special blend with reduced contaminant levels — be used in the nation's nine smoggiest cities by the mid-1990's. Affected cities are Los Angeles, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Houston, Baltimore, San Diego, Milwaukee and Muskegon, Mich.

It also would require by 1991 that new mass transit buses run on cleaner-burning alternative fuels such as compressed natural gas or alcohol fuels made from grain.

Bulls, Pacers ready for playoffs

If Tuesday night's date with the Indiana Pacers and Chicago Bulls was a playoff preview, then both sides gave it a thumbs-up.

The Bulls used a rare balanced attack to score their fifth straight victory, 109-102, but the Pacers limited Michael Jordan to 29 points, including 12 of 12 from the free-throw line.

"It's very possible that we'll meet in the first round," said Jordan, whose 10 points in the last 3:49 led the triumph. "We wanted to make a statement."

The Pacers made a statement themselves: Expect them to pound the ball inside on one end of the floor and Jordan on the other.

Elsewhere, Golden State edged Orlando 127-126, Philadelphia beat Houston 133-112, Detroit defeated Boston 93-82, New York topped Cleveland 106-97, Minnesota edged San Antonio 92-90, Utah routed Charlotte 127-104, the LA Clippers beat Sacramento 114-105, Seattle defeated Portland 136-134, and Phoenix beat Dallas 117-111.

Mattingly threatens free agency

Don Mattingly, who has played his entire career with the New York Yankees, says he will hang up his pinstripes if the team fails to sign him to a new contract before Opening Day.

Mattingly has vowed not to negotiate a deal once the season begins and has threatened to file for free agency at the end of the year. He is upset by what he perceives as a lack of effort to get a new deal worked out on the part of Yankee owner George Steinbrenner.

The All-Star player wants a five-year package similar to the one Will Clark of the San Francisco Giants netted. Clark signed a major-league high $17 million, four-year deal in the offseason.

Elsewhere, Minnesota edged Boston 5-4, Pittsburgh trounced Texas 11-5, Philadelphia nudged Toronto 13-8, Los Angeles nailed the New York Yankees 6-1, Baltimore nipped Atlanta 4-0, Houston beat Cincinnati 8-6, the New York Mets topped Montreal 12-9, the Chicago Cubs defeated San Francisco 11-7, San Diego crushed California 11-2, Cleveland stopped Seattle 2-1, Oakland beat Milwaukee 6-3 and St. Louis and the Chicago White Sox ended in a 5-5 tie.

Gators' Kruger optimistic

GAINESVILLE — Newly appointed Florida basketball coach Lon Kruger expressed optimism Tuesday as he took the reins of the beleaguered program.

"The situation here provided a tremendous amount of potential," said Kruger, who was hired Sunday after spending four years as head coach at Kansas State. "I know there has been some trouble here, but this opportunity intrigues us."

Kruger takes over a program that is under NCAA investigation.

He replaces Norm Sloan, who resigned under pressure Oct. 31 amid allegations of NCAA rules violations, and interim coach Don DeVoe, who said he would not seek the full-time job after drawing the ire of fans critical of Florida's 7-21 record last season.

Peters, Rams overtake Oviedo

LAKE MARY — Senior captain Terri Peters drove in the game-winning run in the bottom of the seventh inning as the Lake Mary Rams rallied past the Oviedo Lions 5-4 in a key Seminole Athletic Conference softball game Tuesday afternoon.

The win improves Lake Mary to 16-4 overall and 9-1 in the SAC, a half-game ahead of Lake Brantley (8-1 in the SAC after beating DeLand Tuesday night). Oviedo, 11-3 and 8-2, falls one game off the pace.

Oviedo took a 2-0 lead with single runs in the top of the first and fourth innings before the Rams exploded for three runs in the bottom of the fourth to take a 3-2 lead.

Tara Calvin started the three-run rally with a single and took second on a throwing error. Pam Fischl then ripped a triple to score Calvin and

Magic fourth-quarter charge comes up one point short

United Press International

ORLANDO — Chris Mullin and Mitch Richmond combined for 60 points, as the Golden State Warriors withstood a furious fourth-quarter rally to edge Orlando 127-126 Tuesday night.

Trailing 112-87 at the tail end of the third quarter, the Magic outscored the Warriors 23-4 to slice the deficit to 116-108 on Ous Smith's three-pointer with 7:12 left in the game.

Smith poured in 13 of his team-high 27 points in that span, starting the run with consecutive baskets to close the third period. Rookie Mervyn Wiley, who wound up with 18 points, contributed seven in during the rally.

Tim Hardaway, who had a triple-double by the time the Warriors' cushion swelled to 99-75 late in the third period, hit two of his 25 points at the free-throw line to hike Golden State's advantage to 124-117 with 3:16 remaining.

Back came the Magic. Wiley and Smith both connected on three-pointers, then Jerry Reynolds sunk a pair of free throws to tie the score, 126-126 with 53 seconds showing.

Rod Higgins' free throw with 10 seconds left accounted for the final point, though the Magic had their chances to snap their five-game losing streak.

But Wiley answered on two three-point attempts, the last coming just before the buzzer. Nick Anderson's last-ditch slap shot under the basket failed to fall.

Kidney ailment may be cause of body odor

DEAR DR. GOTT: I recently met an older lady at a retirement home whom I like and want to be friends with. She is in good health, alert and fun to be with, yet she has a strong odor of urine about her. Is there any way I can approach her without hurting her feelings, or can you suggest a remedy?

DEAR READER: The odor of urine can be caused by kidney disease or by careless health habits. If, because of renal disease, the kidneys stop working efficiently, waste products build up in the system, giving an unpleasant odor to breath and perspiration. Depending on the cause of the kidney disease, treatment — such as dialysis — may be necessary to remove these waste products and return a patient to normal.

In elderly people, the odor of urine is more likely caused by carelessness. Many senior citizens become somewhat forgetful and vague; this leads to a disregard for the usual hygienic measures younger folks take for granted. The elderly often dribble or wet themselves inadvertently. Unless they are motivated to change their underclothes, the urine becomes malodorous because of bacterial decomposition.

Women, in particular, may have trouble remaining continent; they can be unaware of urinary leakage that causes a social, not a medical, problem. I cannot offer you precise advice about how to tackle this situation: It's somewhat analogous to the teen-ager who is reluctant to inform her boyfriend that he has body odor. I think you must be diplomatic and, perhaps, question your friend about medicines she is taking. Such a discussion might get around to the subject of the elderly's ordinary health problems, such as stiffness, forgetfulness and loss of independence.

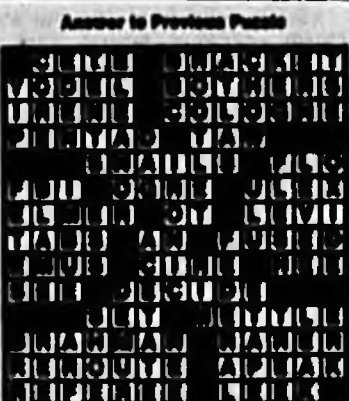

As you and she become better friends, you may find an opportunity to broach the subject of her body odor. Or, you could talk to the retirement-home staff about a suitable approach.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By James Jacoby

Here is a deal where, depending upon the choice of plays, both defender and declarer have a chance to shine, but not at the same time. Let's first try defender East. After South opens with a strong no-trump and is raised to three, West leads a spade. When declarer wins and plays a diamond to the jack, it is natural for East to win the king and return a spade. Too bad. Declarer wins, plays on more diamonds and gives up a trick to West, but still has control of the hand. What if East simply plays low on the first diamond, letting dummy's jack win the trick? South will surely return to his hand to try another diamond finesse. East now takes the king and declarer is no longer able to set up a long diamond trick, so the contract is set. You can say that declarer could have gone up with the ace the second time diamonds were led, but that assumes that the declarer could see through the backs of the cards. However, X-ray vision is not necessary for declarer to make a play that will guard against any but the most bizarre distribution in the diamond suit. Let him simply win the first spade and play a low diamond from both his hand and the dummy. Of course the defense wins the trick, but now South can play a second diamond to the jack. East will win, but dummy's diamonds will be good, and the club king will be the entry to get to them. Declarer sacrifices a possible overtrick or two to give himself the best chance for guaranteeing nine tricks.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
April 5, 1990

Conditions in general in the year ahead should be more comfortable than they have been in the recent past. Just because things will be improving, however, should not be used as an excuse to be wasteful.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's commendable to be able to say nice things about our friends, but be very careful you don't attempt to flatter the undeserving today. Insincerity will be readily perceived. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You'll be well aware of what you should be doing today where your career is concerned, but there is a chance you might not expend the necessary effort to achieve your goals. Don't drag your feet.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be optimistic regarding the outcome of events today, but try to see things as they are and not as you wish they were. If you're a dreamer instead of a doer, you're likely to fall short.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you're involved in a situation today where there is something to be shared, don't expect more than you deserve, because you could be disappointed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If you have to team up with someone today in order to achieve a common objective, be sure to select a partner who can make a contribution and is not just your "yes-man."

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Under certain conditions today, there is a possibility you might be inclined to make promises you'll later find hard to keep just because you do not want to hurt another's feelings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Members of the opposite gender will find you attractive today, but not necessarily as appealing as a manipulator may make you think. Keep your guard up.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Someone on whom you've been counting may prove to be a severe disappointment to you today. The impact can be considerably lessened if you make an allowance for this person's frailties.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) There is a possibility you may be a trifle flirtatious today and you could unwittingly flash some signals to the wrong person. Be very careful where you cast your roving eye.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may not be too shrewd a shopper today, especially if you are looking for bargains pertaining to merchandise about which you know little. Remember the old adage, "Buyer beware!"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) If you want to delay making decisions in matters that solely affect you, that's one thing, but if you procrastinate in situations that affect others, you'll be doing them a disservice.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be helpful to others where you can today, but don't let someone who can easily take care of him/herself dump problems on you. Be a pal, but not a "patsy."

Couple work, cook together Forty sweet years of potato pie

By JOAN KING
Herald correspondent

SANFORD — Virginia Williams learned to cook as a teenager in York, S.C.

"I learned to cook by watching my sisters in the kitchen. We were always in the kitchen," Virginia continues. "With thirteen children, there was a lot of cooking going on and my sisters did it all because my mother died when I was five year old."

Our Cook of the Week has been married for 40 years to Frank Williams, owner of Frankies French Cleaners. They raised a family and lived in New York City until Frankies' retirement in 1983.

"We settled in Sanford because Frank wanted to come home. He's from Sanford," Virginia states.

Frankie scurries from the stove to the washing machine, busily baking pie shells, whipping up pie filling, and washing a load of clothes. He briefly sits down once to recite his Sweet Potato Pie recipe before hurrying back to the kitchen and the pie filling.

"He's always doing," says Virginia. "He does too much."

Frankie and Virginia are busy "doing" seven days a week.

They may have retired from New York, but they haven't stopped working. They spend six days a week together at Frankies store. Virginia helps at the counter while Frankie works the press.

They are both active church members. Virginia is a member of Allen Chapel AME and sings in Choir #3 with rehearsal one night a week.

On Sunday afternoons, Virginia visits one of her sisters, who is a patient in a nursing home in Deland, while Frankie starts dinner. When Frankie cooks, he is careful to shy away from excessive salt in the food because of Virginia's high blood pressure.

"Occasionally, I eat some fried food and a little salt" laments Virginia.

The sound of sadness in her voice is a sound all too familiar to many Central Floridians with high blood pressure, who must give up favorite foods for health reasons.

Following are some of Frankie and Virginia Williams' favorite recipes.

VIRGINIA'S FRIED CHICKEN

2 to 3 pounds chicken cut into serving size
1 fresh lemon
Pepper
Garlic powder
Accent
Paprika
1/2 cup vinegar
Pinch of salt
Skin chicken, wash in vinegar and salt mixture to remove any

POSS & NUTRITION

alime on the chicken. Dry with paper towels. Squeeze lemon juice on chicken pieces. Mix all dry ingredients together with 1 cup flour in a bag. Shake well to cover chicken. Heat about 1 cup of vegetable oil in a skillet and brown chicken on both sides. Reduce heat, cover, let cook for about 10 to 12 minutes then lift lid for another 5 minutes. Drain on paper towels before serving.

Virginia doesn't measure anything; it's a pinch of this and a dash of that. If you are just learning to cook measure to taste.

COLLARD GREENS

1 to 2 bunches of good collards (no yellow leaves)
1 package smoked knuckles (cooked bacon or any meat drippings)
Mrs. Dash seasoning
2 tablespoons margarine
1 pinch sugar
Inspect each leaf for worms. Separate leaf from stock and wash leaves in salt water about four times or until water is clean and free of grit. Cut into 1/2 inch slices. Cook knuckles about 15 minutes before adding to greens. Start greens with about one half cup of water. Add Mrs. Dash, margarine, sugar and knuckles or bacon or drippings. Cook until tender about 45 minutes.

Virginia serves her greens with rice.

FRANKIE'S SWEET POTATO PIE

(This recipe makes 2 to 3 pies, cut in half for less)
4 or 5 large sweet potatoes
1/2 cup water

3/4 cup milk (evaporated is the best)

1 small bottle vanilla flavoring (about 1 ounce)
2 cups sugar (white or brown)
1/4 pound butter
Nutmeg to taste
Dash of cinnamon

Boil potatoes until tender. Strain, peel and mash or use a ricer to remove all strings and skin. Set aside.

Heat water, butter, vanilla and milk in a small pan. Add remaining ingredients while heating and stir. Blend hot mixture into mashed potatoes gradually adding the liquid while beating the potatoes until the consistency is similar to a thick cake batter. Pour into pre-cooked pie shells and bake at 350° for about 1/2 an hour.

Use ready made pie shells for convenience. Frankie makes his own shells by using a standard pie crust recipe.

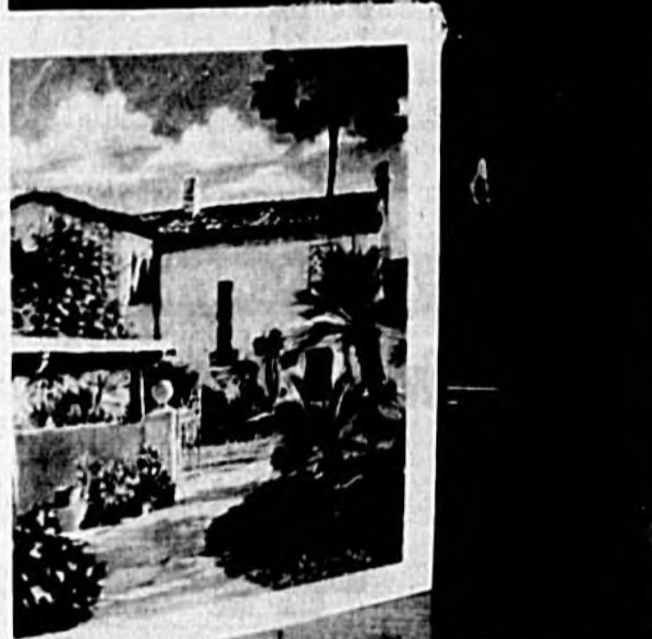

Who's cooking?

The Sanford Herald welcomes suggestions for cooks of the week.

Do you know someone whose food is always the highlight of company picnics, church potlucks, receptions or covered-dish luncheons? It might be an acquaintance who has won a cooking contest or invented a new twist to the peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwich.

Submit your nomination for Cook of the Week to the Herald People editor at 322-2611, ext. 34.

The Cook of the Week feature is published in this section each Wednesday.
