

Briley Follows Brother To Chair

RICHMOND, Va. (UPI) — James Briley, the middle brother of three of Virginia's most feared criminals, was executed for killing a pregnant mother and her son during a 1979 Briley gang murder spree that claimed 12 lives.

Briley was strapped in Virginia's death chair at 11:02 p.m. Thursday and was given back-to-back jolts of 2,300-volts of electricity.

Convicts at Virginia's State Penitentiary, who staged a brief but bloody riot Thursday morning in a futile attempt to halt the execution, were silent when the 28-year-old killer and convict hero was pronounced dead at 11:07 p.m.

A prison spokesman said Briley made no final statement, but looked at the nine official witnesses in the cramped death chamber, smiled and asked: "Are you happy?"

Before the death mask was put over his shaved head, officials said Briley thanked the Rev. Marjorie Bailey, the minister who married him to a freelance writer last month, and told the minister: "I love you."

Outside the old prison in downtown Richmond, a rowdy crowd of 600 mostly death penalty advocates cheered, whistled and clapped as Briley became the 42nd convict executed in the nation since 1976. Police made 10 arrests for drunk and disorderly conduct.

Guards quelled the Thursday morning disturbance in 15 minutes, but nine guards and one inmate were injured in the melee — none seriously.

Briley's new wife, Evangeline Grant Redding, thanked the inmates for their riotous support, then added: "We're sorry people were hurt in the process, but this is what happens when the state engages in violence.

Violence breeds violence."

Briley was executed six months after his older brother, Linwood, sat in the same electric chair for the fatal shooting of a popular Richmond disc jockey. A younger brother, Anthony, is serving a life sentence for another murder.

James and Linwood became convict heroes last May 31 by staging a bomb hoax that tricked Mecklenburg Correctional Center guards into opening the gates, allowing them and four other condemned killers to make the biggest death row escape in the nation's history. The brothers were caught in Philadelphia 19 days later.

Briley insisted in his last public statement that he was innocent and was framed by another member, Duncan Meekins, who turned state's evidence in exchange for a life sentence.

Man Facing Trial For Sexual Assault On Girl

Jury selection is scheduled to begin Monday in the case of 6-year-old Sanford girl who was treated for syphilis and herpes following an alleged sexual assault.

A 20-year-old Sanford man is being held without bond in the Seminole County jail. Reginald Grant, of 2029 Airport Blvd., was indicted by a grand jury in November and faces life in prison if convicted. He is charged with sexual battery to a child under 11 and committing a lewd and lascivious act.

According to court records, the girl's mother took her to the hospital in October because she had sores around her mouth and in her nose. The girl, now 7, was diagnosed and treated for syphilis and herpes.

A Luther investigation revealed that the girl had genital sores during the summer but they went away following application of a non-prescription salve. The medication was applied after the girl's grandmother and mother noticed she was walking strangely.

Following the October trip to the hospital, the girl told investigators that while a kindergarten student a man she knew attempted to have sex with her, records show.

Grant was arrested Nov. 28 at Lake Mary High School where he was a student. According to court records, Grant has been treated for syphilis.

Consultant's Statements Draw Criticism

WASHINGTON (UPI) — National organizations representing America's 36 million disabled Thursday called for the resignation of Eileen Gardner, an Education Department consultant, for statements they say insult the handicapped.

A spokesman said 15 groups, including the Paralyzed Veterans of America, the American Council of the Blind and the United Cerebral Palsy Association, sent President Reagan a letter late Wednesday in which they wrote in part:

"She says, 'there is no injustice in the universe,' that we have somehow earned our disabilities and those who seek equal opportunities are 'ineffective malcontents.'"

Calling for her "immediate resignation," they said, "This kind of thinking is an outrage and an insult to the fundamental principles of American democracy."

There was no immediate comment from the White House or Education Secretary William Bennett, who hired Gardner as a $36,000-a-year special assistant in the agency's soon-to-be-created Office of Educational Philosophy and Practice.

Gardner began working as a department consultant this week. She is to assume the post as special assistant when necessary paperwork is completed.

A firestorm of criticism began Tuesday when Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., at a hearing by his education subcommittee, cited a draft report Gardner wrote in 1983 for the Heritage Foundation, a conservative "think-tank."

In it, Gardner said laws for the education of the handicapped have "selfishly drained resources for normal school population" and that "the handicapped constituency shows a strange lack of concern" for the general public.

Another passage that has particularly irked the handicapped is, "There is no injustice in the universe. As unfair as it may seem, a person's external circumstances fit his level of inner spiritual development."

Turlington: No Retreat From Past School Reforms

TALLAHASSEE (UPI) — Education Commissioner Ralph Turlington said Thursday the Legislature is "fine tuning" education reforms of the past two years — not backing off from them.

A House education committee and the full Senate have voted this week to make the 7th period of the high school schedule optional, retreating from last year's mandate of a longer school day. Turlington said he was not worried that the Legislature would abandon the toughened graduation requirements and student testing standards set in the past few years.

"We've got an excellent overall thrust. You take one small part and say, 'Is this part absolutely necessary?' — I don't know of any one part that is absolutely necessary," Turlington said at a news conference.

The Senate voted unanimously last Tuesday for a bill (SB 199) by Sen. Betty Castor, D-Tampa, to make the 7th period optional. Her bill would still provide state funding for districts that want the seven-hour high school day, but it would no longer be mandatory next September for all school districts.

After the Legislature mandated a lengthening of the school day last year, 59 of the state's 67 counties made arrangements for some combination of the 7th period of six 60-minute classes. Some large districts, including Dade County, were unable to do so on the "incentive money" appropriated by the state — so the Castor bill was introduced to make it optional.

There May Be Gold In Your Trash Can

By Susan Loden
Herald Staff Writer

Stop! Check your trash before you toss out those cardboard and plastic containers. A future fortune may be wrapped up in the garbage bag you're about to chunk into the dumpster.

Don't laugh. If you had saved your trash from the pre-plastic and paper container era you might be a budding Rockefeller with your wealth in the form of tin cans. So there's no telling what the market for today's plastic and paper throw-a-ways might be.

You may find it hard to believe that Log Cabin syrup tins in the shape of a cabin, little tin pails that once held peanut butter, even old tobacco tins and other similar former discards add just the right touch to the homes of collectors. At least that's the way they see it.

And in some cases collectors pay $100 or more to add just the right tin to that certain knick-knack corner. Other tins have been picked up for a couple of bucks, or free of charge. After all we're talking about trash — faded containers with cracked, painted labeling that were once cast aside as unwanted, having outlived their usefulness.

They have been found or bought by collectors who have scoured grandmother's pantry — and Lord

A REVIEW

Walk On The 'Wildside' Can Be Refreshing, Fun

By David Handler

"Wildside" is colorful and fun.

Now, I'll admit my judgment may be clouded here. I've had to watch so many new comedy-detective shows in recent weeks that it's possible that anything that isn't a comedy-detective show would seem fresh to me.

Still, this ABC mid-season entry is something different — it's a western. I miss westerns. It's got plenty of action, no car chases, some wit, style, and a couple of good performers in William Smith and Howard E. Rollins Jr.

And it's not a comedy-detective series.

Wildside is not your typical western settlement. This California hamlet is downright civilized. No cowpokes. No saloon.

The restaurant has white tablecloths. The country store is an elegant emporium owned by a dapper black gentleman named Bannister Sparks (Rollins).

The newspaper is run by a liberated, comely young female. So, for that matter, is the funeral parlor.

Strangest of all, there's no sheriff.

'TW3' Reborn

Frost To Give Political Satire A Go On ABC

By Vernon Scott
UPI Hollywood Reporter
 HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — American television's token English personality, David Frost, returns to the tube Sunday in an hour-long revival of "That Was The Week That Was."

It was "TW3" that first brought the bloke to the attention of colonial viewers in 1964. Frost had starred in the BBC version for two seasons before bringing the irreverent show to the New World.

While hundreds of British actors and actresses have peopled American TV for years, few Brits endear themselves as personalities per se. Frost is an exception.

A fixture on English TV for more than 20 years with a string of shows too long to list — among them "Frost Over England" and "We British" — he has managed to please American viewers with his breezy style.

He credits his success to lack of a specific English accent. While his speech is clearly British, it is neither upper class nor condescending.

Frost appreciates his acceptance by Americans and hopes "TW3" becomes a series here once again.

"Irreverent political and social satire hasn't been done in prime time for 20 years," he noted, dispatching a glass of noontime wine.

"Saturday Night Live" gave it a go, but not in prime time. Johnny Carson provides topical humor, but our "TW3" special is the only place to find satirical jokes before 11 p.m.

"One can understand why political satire wasn't popular after 1964 with the assassination of Kennedy. Things were in a shaky state. It was not a time for a joyously irreverent demolition job.

"But the time is right now. There is no doubt your republic has never been stronger. People are ready to laugh at many things. That is less true in England where our problems are much more serious."

President Reagan will be a primary target of the ABC-TV "TW3" special. So too will be the feminist movement, the Kremlin, Margaret Thatcher and other prominent figures and causes.

"The party in power has more chance to mess things up than the opposition," Frost said. "But you can have fun with the outs as well — like getting Leonard Nimoy to host a show titled 'In Search of a Democrat.'"

"It would be nice to present a solution to that Mideast problem by having the Iran-Iraq war settled in 'The People's Court.'"

Anne Bancroft will co-host the show, which Frost hopes will be done loosely with a feeling of "live" programming. Should the ratings live up to expectations, it will become a weekly ABC series next season.

Frost is pleased to note that a general election is almost four years away in the event "TW3" does become a series again.

Looking Back

CBS News Special Correspondent Walter Cronkite returns to Hanoi in "CBS REPORTS: Honor, Duty and a War Called Vietnam" Thursday at 10 p.m. on channel 6. Cronkite reported from Hanoi in 1973 when he covered the release of American POWs.

Lucie Arnaz Tries Her Hand At Sitcom

By Joan Hanauer
UPI TV Reporter

NEW YORK (UPI) — Lucie Arnaz may be a crazy housewife at home, but on television she is strictly professional.

Lucie, daughter of Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz, is the star of the new CBS sitcom, "The Lucie Arnaz Show," about a psychologist who co-hosts a talk show and writes an advice column in a magazine.

She is still shaking her head because everyone immediately started making comparisons with her mother — as in, if you loved Lucy, you might like Lucie.

"Did they think I was going to be a crazy housewife?" she asked. She said that's strictly her off-screen role as the wife of actor-writer Laurence Luckinbill and the mother of three children, the youngest of whom is 12 weeks old.

"If I played a nurse in Vietnam, they'd compare me to my mother," she said with a resigned sigh.

That's one of the reasons she has avoided doing TV sitcoms for the last 10 years.

"I've been happy doing theater and making films," she said. "There was no reason to seek it out."

She said when she received bids for TV series, she fluctuated between not even reading the offering, or taking a chance on reading something and finding she just did not like it well enough to return to television. Her last series was her mother's "Here's Lucy" show, which she did for six years.

She changed her mind about television comedy when a former agent talked her into watching a British sitcom about a psychologist called "Agony," and she was tempted to try an American version.

"It was more than just high quality stuff," she said.

When she became convinced that the writing could be kept up to top quality, and they promised her the show would be shot in New York, where she and Luckinbill live — as she put it, "I was running out of things to get out of it with."

She stressed one point about the show — there's no laugh track when her character, Dr. Jane Lucas, has to deal with someone's problems.

"We do one show about a battered wife," she said. "She says some funny things about herself — putdowns of herself that women in this position tend to do. There's no laugh track, even if some of the lines are funny, because there really is nothing funny about the situation."

She said she had talked to Alan Alda recently about the same restrictions that were observed during the making of "M*A*S*H" — no laugh track in the operating room, no matter how many wisecracks Hawkeye and friends made, because blood and pain and death are not a laughing matter. Neither, she said, is psychological pain — even if a character is funny in expressing it.

Growing up in show business did not in any way deter her from wanting to follow in her parents' professional footsteps.

"I really like actors," she said, explaining part of her love for showbiz. "I think they feel things more deeply than most people — they have to be in touch with their own feelings to do their job."

"Anytime there's a good cause, it's always the actors who grab a plane or a taxi to help out — you if they can't afford the taxi, they'll cover you."

Allen And Rossi Comedy Team Scores

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — A year ago comedian Marty (Hello Dere) Allen and singer Steve Rossi reunited in hopes of making a comeback after going their separate ways for 14 years.

They had parted amicably in 1970 after 14 years of comedy partnership.

Their careers as singles did not set the world afire. So it was with some trepidation they elected to take another shot as a team. In the past 12 months they succeeded beyond their wildest dreams.

In addition to one-night stands and concerts, Allen and Rossi starred for six consecutive months at Las Vegas' Makim hotel, packing the show room twice a night.

When they complete their Vegas stand, the pair heads for New York, a national tour and the Catskills.

They say aside from the Smothers Brothers, there are no other prominent comedy teams in business. Almost all comedians are singles working TV, the small club circuit or movies.

"When we decided to join forces again we got a telegram," said Allen, running a hand through his bushy hair. "It read, 'You guys got to be kidding.' It was signed by Dean and Jerry

Moore Stars In A New Breed Of Middle Class Black Sitcom

NEW YORK (UPI) — Melba Moore is starring in the pilot for a new series that could be titled "Kate & Allie Meet Roots." CBS is thinking, more sensibly, of just calling it "Melba." "Melba" explores the friendship between the title character, a divorced working mother played by Moore, and her rich, mixed-up "white" sister. It was of a new breed of middle class black family sitcoms. "It's about me, my daughter, my mother and my white sister," Moore said. "We were brought up together. She's from a very wealthy family. Her mother died when she was a child and her father was away most of the time. "My mother was a domestic in her home and raised us both in her family's home. The show, if it goes to series, will be shot in New York City, where its title character is supposed to work for the Convention and Visitor's Bureau. That will give "Melba" a chance to get out of the house every so often and explore the city and Melba's workplace.

...Team

 and Nixon and Agnew."

Allen and Rossi work in the classical tradition of burlesque and vaudeville comics — blackouts, satire, sketches and some slapstick. Allen's funky wardrobe changes are a part of it all.

Their comedy can be traced to Weber and Fields, Burns and Allen, Abbott and Costello, Martin and Lewis and, more recently, Rowan and Martin.

Their act has been improved by the addition of Katie Blackwell, Allen's wife, who gives a fresh dimension to some of their sketches.

"Comedy teams are rare because of the difficulties in blending two personalities over long periods of time," Allen said. "It's not easy to spend every day together for months on end. Especially on the road where you hang out off-stage and on."

"There's a lot of give and take involved. It's like a husband and wife. You've got to have a high tolerance."

Rossi nodded his agreement and added, "The important thing to remember is the straight man can't get upset about the comedian getting all the laughs."

"Being a good straight man is an art. You've got to know the timing and routine perfectly so the comedian can hit his stride. But you also have to know when to throw him a curve and let him improvise."

"We ad lib about 10 minutes of every show," Allen put in. "It's a great way to work because we come up with fresh ideas and material that way. We purposely throw each other off stride once in a while and the audiences love it."

"It also keeps you from getting bored and stale. The audience knows when you're winging it and that creates a special excitement."

Allen said the team is attracting veteran nightclub devotees who were fans in the old days. But they are also drawing family audiences and young adults.

"We work clean," Allen said. "There may be a few double entendres, but we don't even say 'damn'."

...Tin

knows where else — to come up with tins to satisfy their nostalgic whim.

If you're into tins it pays to come from a family that isn't big on spring cleaning.

Winter Park antiques dealer Bob DeBree's display of items salvaged from ancient trash piles look kind of like a pantry from a bygone era, except tobacco tins and cans are mixed with the food containers and medical supply cans — and all have price tags attached that value the cans far beyond what both they and their contents were worth when they were new and shiny.

Some collectible cans aren't that old. If you have your pennies stashed in a Hershey's cocoa can that's no more than a decade old, but is about six inches tall, you have an item that may be worth a few bucks. In recent years Hershey's has packaged its cocoa in a tin two-thirds that height, making the other hard to find and much sought after, DeBree said.

DeBree said supplying can collectors pays very well and the supply of collectible containers is never ending, because any time a manufacturer makes a packaging change the discontinued container becomes valuable.

The desirability of a tin depends on the collector, DeBree said. Some look for tins from a specific product or company. Others may collect within a category such as medical supplies and others may be attracted to cans that carry their family name.

Folks named Morton might go for Morton Salt tins, and Hersheys might have a cocoa can collection, he said.

The condition of the tin is important to collectors as well. The more pristine the tin the more coveted it is, but rare items rate premium value no matter what their condition, DeBree said.

"You've got to remember these are things people threw away, so they're hard to find. Companies are getting back to looking for their old tins because they failed to hang on to any examples of what now represents a part of their history," he said.

Nabisco tins are in demand as well as potato chip cans which were replaced by bags. And some potato chip cans, which indicated on the label that they could be returned for a 5-cent deposit are more valuable than others, DeBree said.

Anything that sets a tin apart from its own line — a premium offer or a specialized series such as a set of old-time Log Cabin tins, which broke away from the traditional red-log design and was in the form of a log schoolhouse with squirrels frolicking on the chimney — is one of the most desirable, he said.

Now that you're intent on rummaging around old trash piles, granny's cupboard, or an antique shop, what do you do with a find you think may have some collectible value? DeBree advises you clean it with cold cream and then protect it from moisture with a coat of paste wax.

What you do with it after that is up to you, but DeBree said some owners of old tins get pretty creative. He has seen tins used as the final decorative touch in renovated old homes. Say you go into a 19th Century Victorian house and open the medicine cabinet, you may find it stocked with tooth powder tins and other old items that, though not functional, are compatible with the era of the home.

"You step back in time," DeBree said.

Elwood Burley, who works for a Sanford company that salvages items from demolished homes, said he turned over his two tin finds to his wife who uses them to add a quaint touch and serve as conversation pieces.

Burley said finding a Beechnut coffee tin in the basement of an 1890s DeLand home and a similar coffee can in another home has spurred his interest and he's now on the lookout for other old tins that others might pass over as trash.

But apparently others are as aware of the appeal of tins as he. When he came across a third coffee can treasure and set it aside at a jobsite recently, someone walked away with it.

If you want to bet on the future, DeBree said you won't be tossing anything on the trash heap. After all the peanut butter jar of today may eventually rival the $60 to $80 value of the peanut butter pail of several decades ago that lost its place to the glass jar following World War II.

Your fortune truly may be in your trash, if you can stand to live with it until it appreciates in value.

... 'Wildside'

Instead, there's a "Chamber of Commerce," a kind of Wild West "A-Team" made up of five leading citizens who are tough, fearless and personal friends of the governor.

Sparks is a member. He happens to be an expert with explosives.

The head guy is none other than grizzled Brodie Hollister (Smith), the greatest gunfighter alive. Brodie is a man immortalized in dime novels, a man with 29 notches on his belt, a man who never takes his hat off because he has funny-looking ears.

The only man who comes close to him with a gun is his own son, Sutton (J. Eddie Peck), who has come back out West after getting a Boston education. He's a member of the Chamber of Commerce now.

So is Vargas (John D'Aquino), who runs the town gun shop but has no use for them himself. He prefers knives.

So is Prometheus (Terry Funk), a gentle giant who is the town veterinarian and who can do anything with a rope.

Each week, our heroes take on those who would disrupt the civilized harmony of Wildside. The villains tend to be madmen, their designs grandiose.

One week, a renegade Confederate general is combing the countryside in search of secret Union gold caches, and wiping out anyone who gets in his way.

Another week, it's deserters from the Light Brigade, complete with bagpipes, who hope to earn their way back into the crown's good graces by seizing the oil-rich land under Wildside.

There's a modern twist to the plots that reminds me very much of "The Wild Wild West," a Robert Conrad show I enjoyed when I was much younger.

Always, our heroes restore order. Always, they settle up with the undertaker before they go into battle. Just in case. The undertaker, by the way, thinks Vargas is kind of cute.

Given a fair time slot — right now it's on opposite "Magnum, P.I." and "The Cosby Show" — "Wildside" just might catch on with teen-aged boys of all ages.
