County to help Sanford cops patrol Goldsboro

Four sheriff's deputies assigned to substation

By RUSS WHITE
Herald Staff Writer

By the end of 1997, four Seminole County Sheriff's Deputies are expected to be working out of a substation located in the west Sanford neighborhood of Goldsboro.

Sheriff Don Eslinger said today that his office has vowed its support to enter a partnership with the Sanford Police Department to help reduce crime and the fear of crime in Goldsboro.

In recent years, areas of Goldsboro have become a hotbed of drug activity. Large crowds gather on Friday and Saturday evenings along west 13th Street - most of those jamming the way being non residents.

It is nearly impossible - and unsafe - to drive down the main street of this Florida town settled in the 1890s by black laborers and incorporated by these citizens on Dec. 1, 1891. Goldsboro was in 1911 absorbed by Sanford.

"This area is very rich in history, and we want to assure the citizens of Goldsboro enjoy the quality of life they deserve," Eslinger said. "We're going to acquire space for a substation from which we would assist the Sanford Police Department. Our aim is to have the substation operating by the end of the year. ## Lake Mary to pick evaluation team, again

By SHARI BRODIE
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY - Lake Mary Thursday scrapped its first try at picking a firm to evaluate the city's comprehensive plan, opting to "go back to the place in the process where questions were raised."

The city had already entered into contract negotiations with Ivey, Harris & Walls, Inc., chosen to prepare the Evaluation and Appraisal Report (EAR) of the comprehensive plan. Based on information brought to the attention of

Forner

City Manager John Litton, in regard to the manner in which the EAR selection team was picked, Litton has recommended that the process be begun again.

Doug Forner, a member of the Local Planning Agency, a city appointed board, said that he and the other LPA board members received a letter from the city's senior planner, Susan Deines, asking for "a volunteer from the LPA to be on this committee (the EAR Selection Team)." Forner said that he responded immediately to Deines, who, he said, told him that he'd be the volunteer.

Forner later learned that Deines had taken a telephone poll of the other LPA board members, to determine the committee member, because another volunteer had come forward. That volunteer was the Rev. Paul Hoyer, who chairs the LPA.

Hoyer is the pastor of Holy Cross Lutheran Church in Lake Mary. Forner is a civic activist who made an unsuccessful bid for a city commission seat in last fall's election.

Forner said that Deines, in a chance meeting with him at City Hall, informed him that the board had chosen Hoyer and asked him to "accede" his position. He claims See Repeat, Page 3A

Seminole, Lake county schools may form joint food service

By MARIA OREM
Herald Staff Writer

The Seminole County school system proposed Wednesday, in a letter to the Lake County School Board, to form a joint food service.

The letter, from Seminole County School Superintendent Paul J. Hagerty, and approved by the school board Tuesday, was submitted along with a detailed proposal, in response to Lake County's request for bids to provide food service to about 27,000 students.

"The proposal was delivered as a sign of good faith as an example of what we can do by working together," said Dan Andrews, director of food services in Seminole County. Andrews said Seminole County would not be involved in the bidding process which includes two national food service companies, Aramark and Marriott.

"The letter states that should Lake County not choose a management company, Seminole County is prepared to form a consortium and manage food services for both districts," he said.

According to Andrews, Seminole's proposal came in $127,000 below the bids from Aramark and Marriott, because there is no general and administrative fee associated with Seminole. The only cost listed was $79,055.11 for management fees. The management charge for meals was two cents

The wording of the letter was explicit in asking for "a volunteer" and that the city staff acted in violation of the Government in the Sunshine Law, by making the decision on the committee member outside of a public forum.

Litton stated that City Attorney Donna McIntosh felt no such violation occurred. At the city commission meeting, the city manager said that his interpretation of the letter was not "first come, first served," in regard to the choosing of the volunteer.

McIntosh did advise the city to go back to that place in the process where there were questions raised," Litton said.

The staff will call a meeting of the LPA to select a committee to review the submittals.

get things done in short order.

Eslinger met Thursday with Sanford City Commissioner Yelma Williams, who initiated the effort to get block grant money to help fund the Goldshore project. On Tuesday, the Board of Seminole County Commissioners approved a grant of $400,000 as part of a five-year Consolidated Action Plan.

Crime prevention was her campaign promise to win a seat on the Sanford Commission and she immediately upon being elected Williams got the support she needed to make the commission a priority. Litton said she took grant money she urged the city commission to ask the county for help.

and make their own recommendation. Originally, the EAR Selection Committee was comprised of City Planner Matthew West, Detnes, and Hoyer West said that in the new process, the LPA will solely determine the members of the board, which may or may not include the original team, or any members of city staff.

Nine consulting firms responded to the city's Request For Proposal. After evaluation by the team, Ivey, Harris & Walls, Inc., Wade Trum Inc. and East Central Florida Regional Planning Council were short listed and ranked, respectively East Central Florida Regional Planning Council withdrew its name from consideration due to the current workload. The commissioners chose IHW at the July 10 meeting and asked the city manager to begin contract negotiations. The EAR is necessary because of a state mandate which requires the city to check on the effectiveness of its Comprehensive Plan, established in 1992. The EAR is a "report card" evaluating the goals, objectives and policies established in 1992, compared with what was actually accomplished.

Because the RFP was done correctly, the selection of the new steering committee will only delay the process by a month, Litton said. There should be no impact on the city budget.

"In an abundance of caution, the LPA probably should have selected its member in a public meeting with a maximum opportunity for public input and participation," Litton stated in the July 24 memorandum that was a late addition to the agenda package given to city commissioners.

"We could have done it better," Litton said after the commission meeting.

The food services is used supporting and taxes to local tax districts because it is better off funded, he said. Andrews said any revenue generated from his department goes right back into the school's central fund.

Andrews said the primary reasons for seeking the partnership with Lake County is to keep prices for students in Seminole the same, and to form a larger purchasing base which would benefit both school districts. He noted that meal prices in elementary and middle schools in Seminole have remained the same for the past nine years.

The Lake County School Board is expected to make a decision at its next meeting, in August.

Are citizens really first?

If "citizens are first," as Orange County Chairman Chapin says, then Knight's Crossing III would not be approved. At a June 24th Orange County Commissioner's hearing, more than 24 Orange and Seminole County residents, representing several hundred nearby residents, came to oppose Quadrangle's Knight's Crossing student housing project. The developer requested a land use change to swap previously zoned commercial land to allow 290 more student housing units, or 1000 plus students to the existing 1600 students.

In 1994, The Quadrangle, a business park adjacent to UCF had difficulty attracting businesses, so some of the land use was changed from commercial to residential. The problem was that hundreds of Seminole County residents just across the road were not notified about the land use change and therefore, didn't get to participate in the hearings.

To Orange County's credit, they did send out notices about Knight's Crossing, Phase III to abutting Orange and Seminole County residents. They also held a couple of meetings where homeowners could "air their concerns." However, these concerns were never heeded and the notice that was sent out was incorrect. It indicated the Phase III site as Phase II, which is already built, instead of the forested land on the corner of Alafaya and McCulloch Road. This is all the more confusing because originally Phase III was supposed to be built on Data Court. (That is now Phase IV.)

At the June 24th hearing, Orange County Staff recommended approval for Knight's Crossing, Phase III because of the increasing student enrollment and anticipated shortage of student housing. Why doesn't UCF build sufficient housing on campus? According to an inside source, besides cost, UCF doesn't want to deal with problems associated with student housing, such as drinking, drugs, and vandalism.

Many spoke in opposition to Knight's Crossing. One person presented a petition with several hundred signatures against the project. Another, concerned about periodic flooding, gave the commissioners a petition with more than 700 names, including Rep. Tom Feeney. The petition asked, "That All Storm Water Systems and Building Permits Along The Econlockhatchee Rivers Be Denied Until Data and Analysis Of A Basin Wide Study Is Performed And Implemented."

In Knight's Crossing Phase I, land was cleared without proper permits. Gopher tortoises, species of special concern, were seen on Knight's Crossing land after it was bulldozed. The environmental assessment for Phase I showed active gopher tortoise burrows.

Other voiced concerns were about crime, noise, and increased traffic. At a recent meeting the developer readily admitted that there is vandalism at Knight's Crossing. Noisy parties and drag racing in the Quadrangle have caused local homeowners, on several occasions, to call the police.

Also, the slashing and burning of trees created a smoke and ash nuisance for nearby residents. Unattended fires were seen burning after dark, a violation of Orange County Code.

The traffic survey which Knight's Crossing is using appears flawed. It contains traffic studies done on 5-28-92 and 11-5-93. It concludes that "swapping commercial for student housing actually decreases traffic." How can that be? Students go to class, to work, and run errands--they would generate more trips instead of fewer trips!

Letters from DCA (Department of Community Affairs) raised many questions about "listed species on the site, preservation and conservation areas, air quality, traffic issues."

Besides incompatibility with the nearby single family homes; the lack of a natural tree buffer is also a major problem. A 50-100 foot tree buffer should have been left to protect the integrity of abutting neighborhoods. The brick wall with a few trees is not adequate!

Lastly, violations of the Florida Public Records Law occurred last year and again on June 12th when I went to Orange County Zoning and requested Knight's Crossing files. Last year while looking at the files I asked an Orange County staff member several questions regarding a Knight's Crossing traffic study. Later on two separate occasions, I returned to the files and discovered that most of the papers were missing! I wrote a letter to Chairman Chapin and on the next visit the papers reappeared. On June 12th I asked for the files and was sent to the 4th floor clerk's office. After returning to zoning I had to ask 3 times for the complete files as I was told that what I was given, "was all they had." Only after I provided information about the file contents was the last file given to me! How many other have been denied complete files? What are they hiding from us! THE TRUTH!

If citizens are first, then government is open and honest. It is responsive, responsible, and accountable to its citizens. It will fix problems it creates!

If citizens are first we would have campaign finance reform!

If citizens are first, then Knight's Crossing III would be denied! And then the words on the new Orange County Courthouse would have meaning... "ALL VIRTUE IS SUMMED UP IN DEALING JUSTLY!"

Knight's Crossing III was unanimously approved by all of the Orange County Commissioners.

People who aren't what they seem

CHICAGO--In fiction and real life, Americans are fascinated by people who aren't what they seem.

In the summer hit film "Face/Off," a lawman (John Travolta) surgically adopts the face and identity of the criminal whom he has obsessively pursued--and then the criminal assumes his identity. Designer Gianni Versace's recent slaying has made the whole world fascinated with alleged killer Andrew Cunanan--a man who, in life, looked different in every photo, whose closest friends hardly knew him and who was an admitted homosexual who flashed photos of a woman and child he claimed to be his family.

Issues of identity--how we're perceived, who we are, who we wish we were--intrigue everybody.

They obsess black people. Nowhere is black folks' obsession with their multiple, sometimes conflicting identities more evident than at the 22nd National Association of Black Journalists annual convention, held last week here. At many conventions, participants look and dress similarly; those attending NABJ's national meeting sport punk-cuts, dreadlocks and Mary Tyler Moore flips with equal conviction. They don African-print jackets and head wraps for one function and sleek Italian suits for the next.

But it's deeper than coifs and clothes. Convention workshops and seminars often explore black journalists' ongoing issues with identity. In Friday's plenary session, "Shades of Black: One Community, Many Voices, Issues of identity intrigue everybody.

Conflicting Perceptions." panelists including Harvard scholar Henry Louis Gates and Rep. Jesse Jackson, D-Ill., wrestled with whether black journalists are obligated to other blacks, and whether they are sufficiently open to differing opinions.

During Wednesday's seminar, "The Black Press: Advocacy and Identity," historian Lerone Bennett reminded conventioners that 1997 is the 170th anniversary of the founding of "Freedom's Journal," the first newspaper published both by and for black Americans. The Journal's first editorial stated: "We wish to plead our own cause." Too long, it said, have others spoken for blacks.

Ebony magazine publisher John H. Johnson recalled the tale of the woman who, before leaving her children a sizable fortune, reminded them that she also was leaving them her values--and they shouldn't take one without the other. Johnson urged all NABJ members, most of whom work for white-owned media, to support the black press, which once was the only media that would hire black journalists. "I don't think we should take the good without taking the obligation," Johnson said.

Black journalists know plenty about perceived obligations. Depending on your perspective, being a black journalist--or being identified primarily as such by your employers and the public--can be a blessing or a curse, or both.

Detroit-area sportswriter and radio commentator Eric Pate has occasionally weathered criticism from blacks who've claimed his perspective isn't "authentic," such as the caller who blamed racism for the media's outrage at Mike Tyson for biting Evander Holyfield. "There was just no way to justify the fact that Tyson bit another man's ear off," Pate told him. "If a white boy had done that, I'm confident the Nevada State Athletic Commission would have taken the same steps."

Pate, 33, is just as sure that his blackness adds to his value as a journalist. Whereas a white sportswriter might accept that there are only three African-American head coaches in the NFL "just because there are," he explains, he's more likely to question the low number. "I can write a piece about which qualified people aren't getting interviewed and why. I'm not going to leave it at 'that's just the way it is.'"

But for some journalists, being identified primarily as black is a burden.

JACK ANDERSON

Time and again the Republican senators tried to bait Sullivan into incriminating President Clinton.

House campaign finance probe bogs down

As Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., assumes center stage in the campaign fund-raising hearings, the "other" investigation across the Capitol lies in shambles.

Thompson, the courtly Tennessean whom some people think will be our next president, got off to a slow start last week when former Democratic National Committee finance director Richard Sullivan failed to provide the fireworks that his depositions had indicated. Time and again the Republican senators tried to bait Sullivan into incriminating President Clinton. Sullivan never delivered.

On the other side of the Capitol, Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., probably wishes he had Thompson's problems. For Burton's parallel inquiry into Clinton's campaign finances has hit a brick wall. Incessant squabbling among aides has replaced any hint of a serious inquiry.

Sources inside Burton's House Government Reform and Oversight Committee tell us the worst predictions of Burton's critics are now coming true. These sources, who also worked for the committee during the tenure of previous chairman Rep. Bill Clinger, R-Pa., say the investigation has turned into a partisan witch-hunt.

House Republican leaders are concerned enough about Burton to keep him on a short leash. For the past two months, Burton and his top aides have been forced to provide weekly updates before a four-man advisory group appointed by House Speaker Newt Gingrich. The real purpose of the meetings is to make sure that Burton doesn't do anything that would embarrass the party hierarchy.

At the center of the controversy is David Bossie, a 32-year-old investigator who is derided by his critics as being a "loose canon." Before joining Burton's staff, Bossie cut his teeth as an investigator for Floyd Brown, the Republican hit-man who was responsible for the infamous Willie-Horton ads during the 1988 presidential campaign between George Bush and Michael Dukakis. Four years later, Brown again made news by advertising a 1-900 phone line on which listeners could hear the tape recordings of phone calls between then-governor Clinton and Jennifer Flowers.

Aides on the committee have complained privately for months about Bossie's inflated ego. Unlike other committee aides, for example, Bossie doesn't use voice-mail for his calls. He insists that receptionists take all his messages by hand, so other staffers can see how many calls he's getting. Unfortunately, one of the calls he failed to return last week was ours.

Over the normally quiet July 4 recess, the troubles that have been brewing for months on Burton's staff finally spilled over into public view. The committee's top investigator, John Rowley, quit the probe in disgust after Burton refused to fire Bossie. Two other top committee aides also resigned, leaving Bossie to conduct his inquiry with a thin group of like-minded aides.

"The career prosecutors (like Rowley) were brought in with the understanding that they had the authority to (overrule) Bossie," one committee source told us.

It's getting curiouslyer and curiouslyer

BOSTON--At the center of the Children's Room of the Boston Public Library there is a banner announcing "Welcome Curious George." It hangs appropriately enough over a display of the books that celebrate the famed monkey's high jinx.

This is how we think of libraries, of course. Safe havens for the curious. Places where kids do some literary exploration.

But nearby is a small bank of computers. There, a very curious George of the human variety surfing the Internet could find some very, very curious stuff.

There, George could go in search of Bambi and find an XXX-rated deer. There, George could type in "breast" and find everything from cancer to chicken recipes to swim strokes to "Horny Babes on Aphrodisiacs."

This is a dilemma of the information age. The Internet has been compared to a library where all the books are scattered across the floor. On this same littered floor are X-rated magazines and adult videos.

"All the good and bad you find in the world, you find on the Internet," says Bernard Margolis, the president of BPL. The questions is, he says, "How do you, in accommodating technology, cope with what it brings?"

As head of the oldest publicly supported library in the country--150 next year--he faces this new variation of familiar problem: "How to you protect the most impressionable among us from things that are bad?"

Margolis is a veteran of the wars between censorship and free speech. His first battle was waged as a child when he read the forbidden "The Catcher in the Eye" with a flashlight under the covers. As a librarian in Colorado Springs, he battled conservatives who wanted to ban "Father Christmas" because the Santa character preferred cognac to milk and cookies.

As the Internet "happened," he recognized that there are "folks who believe the prime reason the Internet exists is to distribute pornography." And yet he understands that "the library was seen as a safe place to send kids." And today, it seems a little less safe.

In many ways, parents today see the communications revolution as a coup d'etat. The power to guide children, to shape and screen the cultural messages, was taken from our hands by the television in our living room and now by the information superhighway running through home, school and library.

When Margolis arrived in Boston in March,

This is how we think of libraries, of course. Safe havens for the curious.

there were many who wanted to ban sexually explicit material from the Internet itself. The Communications Decency Act passed Congress with near unanimity. The mayor of Boston demanded that libraries censor the Net. The First Amendment defenders, including the American Library Association, rightly objected to electronic censorship.

So the first public library in America came up with what Margolis likes to call "The Boston Solution." They simply divided the Internet into two editions. One, an unfettered free-for-all for adults. The other, a filtered "children's room" with sites as edited as kiddie bookshelves.

Last month, the Supreme Court toppled the Communications Decency Act, ruling that the Internet was protected by the First Amendment. Last week in Washington the president came out in favor of a "virtual toolbox" of blocking technology to use at home.

The Boston Solution remained standing, indeed it's become a model of a way to protect children without shackling adults in the libraries we share.

There are, to be sure, flaws in the system. Margolis compares Net filters to coffee filters. "Inevitably there are still grounds in the bottom of the cup. If science can't filter coffee, how can they filter something as complex as the Internet?"

The library's Cyber Patrol software we use this morning has not yet caught up with "Horny Babes." Sometimes it mysteriously filters out a Web site on fighter planes or volcanoes. It doesn't do what the American Library Association can do: offer a list of preselected family-friendly Web sites.

But for the moment, we seem doomed to some technological arms race.

Retirement party for Welches

By SUSAN WENNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A retirement party and open house will be held tomorrow from 3 to 5 p.m. at the Church of God of Prophecy, 2509 S. Elm Ave. in honor of the Rev. Robert and Jean Welch. The social hall will be available for those wishing to see the couple and say final good-byes.

The Welch's have offered 48 years of service to fellow believers and communities where they have resided. A basket of cards with personal comments will be waiting for all desiring to offer notes of encouragement.

Born in Pineville, Kentucky, the Rev. Welch dedicated his life to Jesus at the age of 15. God then called him to ministry at this early age. He and his best friend, Bobby Brackett, began conducting revivals in the coal mining camps of the Kentucky mountains during the summer.

In January 1949 he came to Florida and preached revivals and in March of the same year he migrated to the Sanford area where he met his wife, Jean. Her father was pastoring a church in Sanford and she graduated from Semnole High School while also being active in numerous church related functions and assisting her mother in preparing meals for seven children.

The couple were married in August of 1949 and after a short honeymoon settled in Pineville, Kentucky where he pastored his first church. The Rev. Welch had later pastored in six states, conducted revivals for two years in 13 states throughout the northern United States.

While serving in Sanford the Rev. Welch was active in the Kiwanis Club, served as Chairman of Public Affairs and the Sunshine Club, the Sanford Ministerial Association as secretary and treasurer and a coach for the Little League and Pee-Wee League and built a small addition to the church.

The Rev. Welch was very active in hospital ministry and could be found day and night visiting those who were ill. He also conducted numerous counseling sessions at all hours for those in need.

Presently he serves as the District Overseer of the church for the Sanford area and is the chairman of finance and appropriation committee for the State of Florida. He will continue working in this capacity even after his retirement.

The Rev. Robert, Jean Welch

Eight year old singing sensation, Crystal Orhan, will perform at the "Grand Night of Faro de Luz, International Concert" on Saturday, August 28 at Iglesia Bautista Central, 5000 Silver Star Rd., in Orlando. She will participate with eight other singers yet she is the only child. Orhan will perform songs in English and Spanish. For more information or bookings call 323-3099.

Where do you put your trust

SANFORD — How does one explain the concept of trusting God to a child? How do you relay that when you have a burden God will carry it for you if you just ask and leave it to him?
"We, adults, sometimes take issue with this. And then...a sweet, innocent little boy says, "But mommy I've prayed and it doesn't seem like God is listening."
What a lesson to us all. Learning on a higher power than us, letting go of fear and giving our worries away.

Staff Writer
SUSAN WENNER

You see, one week after school was dismissed my son broke his arm. He couldn't just have a simple break. When he does something he really makes his mark.
He broke a perfectly straight bone into two. The firm structure laid side-by-side instead of in a line.
This mini-bike accident had nothing to do with speed, reckless driving or another ride. My son simply made a one m.p.h. turn, his foot slipped and he landed just right on his left elbow and broke the bone right above the growth plate area.
After being sent to the third emergency room because of lack of expertise from a pediatric orthopedic physician, he was finally admitted to Arnold Palmer Hospital.
It was determined that surgery would be necessary and two pins would be inserted, one above the elbow and one below.
Keep in mind, this child has zero tolerance for pain. The sight of blood causes instant nausea and screaming.
Needless to say, our two day hospital stay proved to be an adventure. Weeks of what I thought would be restful nights before the delivery of my baby have turned into pain medicine excursions for my biggest child.

Now, as time nears, for the pins and cast to be removed from his arm he is a little more than anxious. The day before the scheduled birth of my newborn on Aug. 1 my son will undergo his ordeal.
Anxiety doesn't tip the iceberg to explain his daily conversations about his fear of the pain. I've assured him that I'll give him Tylenol or Motrin before the procedure.
The doctors say it feels nothing more than a quick shot. They have recommended that pain medicine isn't necessary.
They obviously don't know my child. A pinch from a friend sends him into an hour bout of pain.

is a tool he uses with believers. We've prayed together, we've cried together, we've discussed the medical, spiritual and emotional factions of this whole broken arm ordeal.
Will it finally click? I hope so. Do I as an adult fall at times in this area of trust? Definitely.
Although it's frustrating to see someone go through all these emotions over a quick and simple procedure, it has been a testimony and lesson to me.
In a nutshell, practice what you preach. How can I convince a young, moldable mind that importance of giving our cares to God and leaving them there when he sees me anxious over my adult responsibilities, bills and cares of the world?

Lead by example is a befitting way to conclude.

Church Basketball League tournament tonight

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — First Baptist Church of Sanford will be the top seed when the Sanford Recreation Department Spring Church Basketball League holds its post-season tournament tonight in the Dan Pelham Gymnasium at Sanford Middle School.

In last Friday night's final night of the regular season, featuring games that were postponed back on June 20, Covenant Community Church built a 32-18 halftime lead behind the scoring of David Tindall, Chris Bird and Dan Strauss and went to clinch second place with a 55-30 triumph over All Souls Catholic Church of Sanford.

The other game was pretty much a carbon copy of the first as Scott Wade and John Oaka led the way as Sanford First Church of the Nazarene raced to a 34-13 first half lead and coasted to a 48-38 victory over Northland Community Church, earning First Church of the Nazarene a tie for third place with All Souls Catholic.

The final standings in the regular season was: First Baptist Church of Sanford, which had a bye last week (7-1), Sanford Covenant Community Church (5-3), All Souls Catholic Church of Sanford and Sanford First Church of the Nazarene (both 3-3) and Sanford Northland Community Church (2-6).

Tonight's tournament schedule has Sanford Northland Community Church battling either Sanford First Church of the Nazarene or All Souls Catholic Church of Sanford at 6:30 p.m. The winner of that game will then take on top-seeded First Baptist Church of Sanford at 7:30 p.m.

Supervising kids from a distance

Initially, parents set rules about staying in the house, locking doors, using electrical appliances, and handling emergencies. As the kids get older, the rules relax because the parents gain more confidence in their children's abilities to keep safe and act responsibly. How well the arrangement works depends on how responsible the child is and how many hours she is left unsupervised.

More time equals greater risk

Peter Scales, director of the Center for Early Adolescence at the University of North Carolina's School of Medicine, says research shows the chances of adolescents engaging in risky behavior goes up with the number of hours they are unguided.

"The cut-off point seems to be 10 to 11 hours a week" with no adult guidance. Left to their own devices for longer than that, children are more likely to experiment with alcohol, drugs, or sex. This is true no matter what the economic level of the family, he adds. "When kids are guided by adults in activities that are wholesome—to use an old-fashioned word—their risk of engaging in these behaviors goes down dramatically."

CONSUMER FOCUS

As children grow older, they need "successively fewer layers of supervision", says Scales, author of A Portrait of Young Adolescents in the 1990's: Implications for Promoting Healthy Growth and Development (The Center for Early Adolescence, 1991).

"But they do need adults to be around without hanging over them."

College student to help
Some parents of teenagers hire college students to be in their homes week-days after school, either to care for the teens' younger siblings or to do housecleaning. The students also are available to help with homework, to provide companionship, and to subtly supervise the teens. Many teenagers are comfortable with this arrangement; they don't perceive the college students as their baby-sitters, but they also aren't home alone.

After school activities

Other parents take the keep-'em-busy approach, using lots of extracurricular activities and sports to reduce or eliminate the time their children are at home alone. Unfortunately, school budget shortages and lack of adult volunteers have forced cutbacks of these programs in some communities, especially at the middle school level. Transportation also may be a problem.

Check in by phone

Many parents require their home-alone teens to keep one parent informed of their whereabouts at all times. If they don't have a scheduled activity and are expected to be home, they have to call to say that they're going to the library or to a friend's house. As adolescents grow older and demonstrate sound judgment, they deserve more freedom—but that doesn't mean parents should give up all supervision.

Setting rules

Teenagers need rules about their after-school hours, some of which are negotiable and a few that aren't. Kids who have no rules or structure may feel their parents don't care about them. Parental rules also can help teens get out of difficulties with their peers. For example, they can tell friends that "I'm not allowed to invite people over after school" or "I have to be home before dinner."

Kids react better to rules if they understand what's behind them, so you should explain why each particular rule is important. Some families hold periodic meetings to review rules and see if changes are in order. Adolescents should understand the consequences of breaking the rules, and parents should be consistent in enforcing them.

Will kids be better off without mom?

Dear Mary,

My wife and I have been married for 13 years and we have three kids, ages 5 to 12 years old. Last year my wife had an affair with a guy where she works, but when his wife and I found out, she said she broke it off. Now my wife goes out with her "friends" at least three nights a week after work, and doesn't get home until after I've got the kids in bed. She says they are just having some drinks and some fun when I ask where she's been. She says being married isn't any fun and she's entitled to a little relaxation and some good times. I've asked her if she wants to move out and get a divorce and she says she doesn't. But this arrangement seems like a poor excuse for a marriage to me, and I'm thinking about taking the kids and moving out myself.

FAMILY COUNSELOR

Do you think the kids are better off in a stupid situation like this or would they be better off in a stable home with only one parent?

Thinking About Single Parenthood

Before you do any more contemplating, you need to do some information-gathering. Ask your wife if she will go to marriage counseling with you. If she agrees, give it at least 6 months to one year before you make any decisions. Also, find a good family law attorney and ask him or her what your rights are in a situation like this. If your wife won't get counseling with you, and you are legally safe in taking the kids and leaving, you still need to determine whether the kids will be better off with or without their mom living with them. For a question this important, I again would get some outside advice, either from a counselor or clergy person. The counseling should involve the kids if it comes to that point. Good luck.

Morning routine gets full exposure on videotape

DEAR ABBY: I'm a single male in my late 20s. I live in a tree-lined subdivision that borders on a common grounds wooded area with a running path. My bathroom has two windows, each one foot wide and six feet high. Since the bathroom faces the wooded area, I never felt it was important to close the blinds while getting dressed in the morning.

The other day I found a videotape in my mailbox, along with a short, nonthreatening note, apparently from one of my neighbors. It read, "Thanks for the show ... and for giving me a reason to get up on time every morning to run. I'm not asking you to stop; I just thought you'd like to know how easy it is to see you in the morning when it's dark out. See you tomorrow? Ha ha."

Abby, my problem isn't the embarrassment of someone seeing me in the nude; it goes beyond that. The video was 27 minutes long. It started the moment I turned on my bathroom light, which means this neighbor sat outside waiting for me, and must have been just inches away from my window, as you rarely see the vertical blinds. The video covers my whole morning routine, from going to the bathroom, brushing my teeth, shaving and 15 minutes in the shower. This was far from a video that was shot from a distance. There were close-ups that filled the television screen.

I am very uncomfortable and worried about security, and what my neighbor could do with a copy of the tape. I'm a new homeowner here and don't want to get talked about around the neighborhood.

Abby, what should I do?

Is aspirin OK for asthmatics?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Do you advise your allergic patients who have had strokes or heart attacks to take aspirin? What if they have asthma? DEAR READER: Most neurologists and cardiologists recommend one-half to one regular aspirin a day for patients who have had mini-strokes or heart attacks, regardless of whether they also suffer from asthma. The aspirin helps prevent further strokes or heart damage by interfering with blood coagulation.

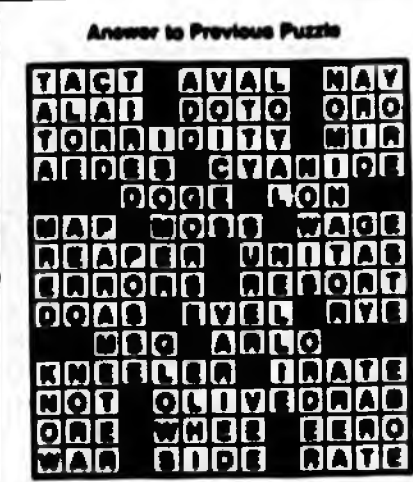

PETER GOTT, M.D.

The exception to this rule is, of course, people who have had an allergic reaction to aspirin. Although such a reaction can certainly trigger an asthma attack (as well as hives, a rash and other consequences), most asthmatics are not overly sensitive to the drug. Thus, I believe that the potential benefits of aspirin substantially outweigh the remote risk of an allergic reaction. Nonetheless, I am very cautious in administering aspirin to a highly allergic person and I monitor the patient's condition closely.

not been helped by over-the-counter preparations, ask your doctor to prescribe one of the new, non-sedating antihistamines that I mentioned above. Should you continue to experience intolerable symptoms of excess mucus discharge, see an allergist for further testing (to determine the pre-cause of your problem) and additional suggestions for therapy. DEAR DR. GOTT: I was born with a pilonidal cyst that my doctors have ignored because it doesn't bother me. Should I worry? DEAR READER: No, you can ignore it unless it becomes painful and inflamed. A pilonidal cyst is a tiny defect in the skin between the buttocks that is usually present from birth. Ordinarily, it causes no problems. Nonetheless, in some people, bacteria can enter the defect and cause infection, leading to a painful abscess that usually requires surgical drainage and/or removal. As long as you have no symptoms, you can leave well enough alone.

Cryptic crossword clues

By Phillip Alder I am still on the plane going to Cape Town for the Zone 4 Championships. Those of you who read yesterday's column will remember that I found the London Times of Saturday, March 2, 1996, in a pocket of my luggage. I had a losing battle with the cryptic crossword. Here is one clue: "Deeply impressed in reading novel 19." Can you deduce which nine-letter word belongs in the answer grid? In the clue, "novel" doesn't refer to a book; it means new, or in an alternative way. In this deal, South seemed to have an obvious play, but he took time to analyze the bidding and came up with an alternative - and successful - line. The declarer was Derek Young, a member of the St. James Bridge Club in London. He was playing for eight cents a point. In England, you may open one heart with only four cards in the suit, especially when 4-4 in the majors. After taking the first trick with the heart ace, East switched to the club 10. Declarer cashed the spade ace, getting the bad news. Now it looked obvious to enter dummy with a diamond. However, Young paused. Why had East doubled? Surely not because he had an ace and four paltry trumps. Presumably he had a void, which he was hoping partner would find at trick one. If so, the void had to be in diamonds. Therefore, Young theatrically cashed the club king, ruffed the club ace in the dummy, picked up East's spade jack, and claimed. The answer to the crossword clue is "ingrained": an anagram of "in reading."
