LATEST WAR BULLETINS

The Herald Will Have Them Every Hour in Front of Office

The people of Sanford will have the hourly happenings of the great European war by wire and the wires will be read in front of the Herald office as soon as received. We wish to make arrangements some weeks ago for this service but were unable to do so and now that this great news gathering force is able to send the news The Herald will be filled with all the latest dispatches and for the benefit of the readers the latest bulletins will be placed on the bulletin board on the days when the papers are not published.

On Tuesdays and Fridays the news fresh from the wires will be given in The Herald and afterward to the bulletin board. On other days the news will be placed on the bulletin board from the wires so that the people of Sanford can learn all that is transpiring in the great war drama in Europe almost as soon as it happens.

All we ask in return is that you will patronize your home paper more freely and if you are not already a subscriber this feature alone should make you one. The Herald is here to give you the news and there is no twice a week paper in the country that gives the readers the news fresh from the wires in the style of The Herald.

Also if the people of Sanford want a daily paper this fall and will so state their desire in a substantial manner the management will give them the best and most complete small daily in the state. All we ask is the support and patronage that should be accorded to every live newspaper. No more and no less.

Meantime come over to Herald Square and read the bulletins and save the money that you are now spending for the big dailies that are giving you the news five hours behind our bulletin.

The Florida Potato Patch

Washington, D. C., Aug. 25.—The Florida Irish potato patch contains 13,000 acres this year and the total production will be approximately 4,149,000 bushels, according to estimates made today by the United States Crop Reporting Board. The condition of the crop is 85 per cent of normal and the price at the present time is averaging around $1.23 per bushel.

In Continental United States there are 3,708,000 acres planted to this product and this year's production is estimated at 360,614,000 bushels by the Federal Department of Agriculture. This year's crop will exceed the average crop of the past five years by approximately 4,000,000 bushels. The nation's production last year was 331,525,000 bushels, was produced on 3,668,000 acres of land and sold for $227,903,000, or an average of 90 cents per bushel.

Big Sweet Potatoes

Sanford lands raise anything and everything and just at this time of the year sweet potatoes run to big sizes. D. H. C. Rabun, who owns a fine place on the west side of town and believes in raising a general crop of food stuffs to offset the high cost of living brought in two sweet potatoes to The Herald office last Saturday that weighed 12½ pounds and they were fine specimens. Two prominent Kentucky gentlemen visiting the city happened to see them and would not believe that they were sweet potatoes. The editor gave them one and told them how to slice the big potato and have it fried for their breakfast at the Sanford House. We have not heard how they enjoyed it but if it was anything like as good as the one we had it certainly made the Kentuckians wish they lived in Florida where they could eat big sweet potatoes in spite of the fact that war is going on in Europe. Just now sweet potatoes are bringing 60 cents per peck at the grocery stores.

In a Russian invasion of Austria territory the Jews will be the special sufferers, because of the Jewish communities that are huddled on both sides of the frontier. Many of the finest farms in Austria are owned by Jews.

FINE PRIZES FOR RACES

Automobile and Motor Boat Races Will Be Big Event

Those will be handsome prizes the auto racers will contend for at the big meet scheduled for Labor Day at Daytona Beach, and they will be on exhibition in Orlando the latter part of next week, to remain until the races, unless sent to other points for exhibition by the Orlando Automobile Association, under whose auspices the races will be run.

Messrs. Chas. F. Burgman, acting president of the Seabreeze Chamber of Commerce, and J. J. Bishop of Seabreeze spent last night in the city, arriving about 8:30, and will leave at 5 o'clock this morning. They brought with them from Seabreeze three of the handsome silver cups that will be awarded to winners of the auto races, and also the first prize in the motor boat regatta which will be held in the Halifax river on Labor Day.

A total of 100 silver cups will be offered in the automobile races, and either three here last night or well on their way. They are all much larger than the prizes offered in the Fourth of July races and are beautifully engraved. They will be taken back to Seabreeze this morning and photographed so that cuts may be made for publication in the pages of the state after which they will be placed on exhibition in DeLand Monday and Tuesday, Sanford Wednesday and Thursday, and then brought to Orlando to be at the disposal of the Orlando Automobile Association until the races are run.

Already at least a dozen cars have been entered in the Labor Day races, and the entries will not stop until Sept. 1st, with the probability that a number of other cars will be entered.

About 15 entries are expected in the motor boat races, and while it is not expected that any speed records will be broken this will, nevertheless prove one of the most thrilling and interesting events of an exciting day.

The motor cycle prizes will be cash and a large number of entries are expected.

Every preparation is being made at the beach to accommodate the thousands of tourists expected on that famous day, Labor Day, and nothing is being done to add to the comfort and enjoyment of the visitors expected from all parts of Florida.

The Orlando Band has been engaged to furnish music for the day and there will not be a dull moment during the day or until a late hour at night, the entertainment closing with a big ball. Orlando continues to be the center of the state.

PLENTY OF TOURISTS

Jacksonville, Aug. 21.—"Indications are that the forthcoming tourist season will be Florida's greatest," said the manager of one of the large hotels here today.

"We are receiving more inquiries than usual," he continued, "and our hotel is making preparations for a big season. While the opening of the season, or the time when the tourists begin arriving, usually depends upon the condition of the weather in the North, we have every reason to believe that the visitors will arrive earlier the coming season than ever before. The European fields are closed to the tourists, and as Florida is the next most inviting field, they are going to come here. Florida being stimulating to all channels of business. In order to entertain the visitors, thousands of additional pounds of meats, more groceries, and, in fact, all of the necessaries of life will be needed. Florida is going to reap a rich harvest this winter, and we all want to be prepared to create our best impression when the visitors arrive."

Tough on Newspapers

During the past few days this office has received letters from all the wholesale paper houses with which we do business, withdrawing prices on all paper stock. Raises have been made in the prices of everything, but no figures are given. Every order sent in is now subject to the prices in force on the day the order is received and it will be impossible for the newspapers of this country to hold out much longer at the present current prices for paper and job work.—Polk County Record.

The Armored Cruiser Achilles

The armored cruiser Achilles has a displacement of 13,000 tons and is a swift oil burning vessel. She is a sister ship of the Cochrane, Natal and Warrior. She carries six 9.2-inch and four 7.5-inch guns and twenty-four three-pounders.

Contest Over Senatorship

Atlanta, Aug. 25.—Next in interest to the race between Senator Hoke Smith and ex-Gov. Joe Brown, which resulted in the defeat of the latter by an overwhelming majority, was the race for the short term senatorship to fill out the unexpired term of the late Senator A. Q. Bacon.

It seemed at first that Governor John M. Slaton would be third in the race but with 146 out of the 148 counties in the state heard from Governor Slaton carried fifty-two counties with 137 convention votes; Congressman Thomas W. Hardwick, forty-eight counties with 126 votes, and Thomas S. Felder, thirty-six counties with eighty-five votes. The candidate receiving the nomination must secure 187 votes in the convention. G. P. Hutchens carried nine counties with twenty votes. J. R. Cooper failed to receive plurality in any county.

In the Congressional contest returns indicate the re-nomination of 10 of the 12 representatives. C. L. Bartlett, who did not seek re-nomination in the Sixth District, will be succeeded by Walter Wise, who was unopposed. Carl Vinsen is leading a field of four in the Tenth District to succeed Hardwick.

It remains for the convention to decide the senatorial contest, and this will revive memories of old times in Georgia when politics was more lurid than in recent years. Governor Slaton charged repeatedly during the primary campaign that Hardwick and Felder were combined against him, and if this charge proves correct Felder's votes will likely go to Hardwick, and he will be the winner over the Governor's lead in the convention to start with.

It may be, however, that the Felder delegates will resent the insinuation that they are in any way party to the deal which has been charged and will refuse to support Hardwick. The uncertainty causes the situation to be decidedly tense.

Entombment of the Pope

Rome, Aug. 25.—The entombment of the late Pope Pius X took place Saturday at sunset.

Witnesses to the ceremony were present by invitation, and included diplomatic representatives accorded to the holy see, prelates and members of the Roman aristocracy.

The body was placed in a crypt near several others of the popes. The body was placed in a crypt near several others of the popes. It lies in a wood cross on which rests a gold cross. This is encased in zinc and finally in an oak casket.

On the casket is the inscription: "Here lies the body of Pope Pius X, born June 2, 1835; died August 20, 1914."

Rousing Meeting of K. of P's.

Members of Phoenix Lodge No. 5, K. of P., who were not present at the last meeting, held Aug. 11th, missed one of the greatest meetings ever held in the Castle Hall. A large number of Knights were present, including several visiting Knights and many matters of importance were passed upon, while many others had to lay over for consideration at the next meeting. Great interest is being taken in these meetings, and the lively and animated discussions indulged in have developed abounding enthusiasm.

The deep rooted principles of Pythianism are manifested on every hand, and the future unlimited success of Phoenix Lodge, No. 5 is unquestioned.

Another rousing meeting is anticipated tonight. Every member should be present. Visiting Knights are cordially welcome.

Marcebes Will Entertain

The Daytona Lodge of Marcebes has sent out invitations to New Smyrna, DeLand and Sanford lodges to join them in the big event at Daytona Beach on Labor Day. There will be races, games and other forms of amusement.

The Apple crop will probably be the largest in the history of the industry in the United States with the possible exception of the crop gathered in 1898. In lieu of exporting the 8,000,000 barrels which under natural conditions would be sent to Great Britain and Europe not more than 10 per cent of that amount can be shipped.

GOV. REDUCES MILLAGE

Believes in Lower Taxes and No Surplus in the Treasury

Tallahassee, Fla., Aug. 25.—For some weeks Governor Park Trammell has been gathering information that he may determine what reduction if any he could make in the state tax millage for the 1914 assessment. The Governor about the first of August was satisfied he could make a reduction of one and a half mills in the pension tax and so ordered, but to determine whether or not still further reduction of the state millage could be made it was necessary for the Governor to take further time to gather more definite data from a large number of the tax assessors. He asked the assessors for this information and now since receiving accurate information from practically all of the counties, the Governor has reached the conclusion that acting within his discretion to lower the state millage, he will reduce the said state millage of seven and one-half mills as fixed by law to five and one-half mills for the assessment of 1914, and has made proper orders covering said two mills reduction.

The effect of the order of Governor Trammell in reducing the millage is that the amount of taxes which will be paid for 1914 will be nearly six hundred thousand dollars less than would have been collected had the Governor allowed the millage to remain at seven and a half mills. Governor Trammell believes in keeping taxes as low as reasonably permissible considering the necessary expenses of the state government and also thinks the taxpayers should not be required to pay such high taxes as to create a large surplus in any fund upon which the state would only get a small rate of interest.

Floridians are Farmers

C., Aug. 25.—There are 323,087 persons in Florida that work for a living and 139,782 of them are employed upon the farm, according to a report which has just been issued by the United States Census Bureau. There are 78,784 farm laborers in the state and 56,237 are males and 22,547 females.

There are 166 dairy farmers in the state and they employ 243 laborers and 4 foremen. There are also 237 persons in the state whose principal source of income is from stock raising. The number of cow boys and sheep herders in this state is 109.

In the entire United States there are 71,580,270 persons over 10 years of age and 38,167,336, or 53 per cent of this number are engaged in gainful occupations. Of the gainfully occupied, 12,659,203, or 33 per cent are engaged in agriculture. There are 5,865,000 farm operators in the nation and they employ 5,975,000 laborers.

EARLY CHURCH HISTORY

SANFORD'S FIRST METHODIST CHURCH AND EARLY STRUGGLES OF THE PIONEERS

BY A. E. PHILIPS

From Paper Read at the Methodist Corner Stone Laying

Do you know the meaning of E. & O. E.? That's an accountant's phrase and means "errors and omissions excepted."

Do you know what "variations" mean? Well, I'll give you an example; I approached my house one evening and heard music; it was the piano; I paused on the porch and listened; there were sweet, plaintive sounds; then there were louder strains; then wails as if moans of distress; then mutterings as if the distant rumblings of an earthquake; then loud burst after burst following in quick succession until the air was rent, and, with Mrs. Hemans, I seemed to hear "The crashing of the thunders and the groans of the spherals."

"My dear," I said, "what in the thum-ah, on earth was that you were playing?" "That," she said, "Why, that was 'Home, Sweet Home.'"

"Home, Sweet Home," I murmured, trying to recover from my mystification. "Well, do tell me what was all that I heard?" "Oh!" she answered, "those were variations!" "And what are variations?" I asked, still in confusion. "They," she replied, "as used by musicians, are digressions, deviations, wanderings, away and back again, to keep the real tune from becoming monotonous; understand?"

"Yes," I answered, dryly; but I didn't understand. Bless my poor unmusical soul, I thought John Howard Payne had wandered far enough away from home when he wrote the old song—I couldn't see why musicians should wander away from the melody, and I could have listened to it to the end of time without reaching the monotony.

"But," you ask, "What has all this to do with the history of the Methodist Church in Sanford?" That, allow me to explain, was, as promised, a "variation." But now comes the history, though other variations may follow.

In May, 1881, just 33 years ago last month, a man from Tallahassee came down to Sanford prospecting. "If you move to Sanford," said a lady of Judge J. Wofford Tucker's family, "We shall have you to organize a Sunday school in Sanford." "No Sunday school in Sanford!" the Tallahassee man asked.

"No," the lady replied, "We have a population of 400 and several denominations represented, but no Sunday school."

The stranger was a Methodist. He came to Sanford the same month and invested in a commercial pursuit. Promptly on a Sunday afternoon, a mass meeting gathered in an unfinished hall over the new Lefler block, a wooden building, standing where the present brick block now is at the foot of Sanford Avenue. Anything new attracted attention in the settlement in those days, and all sorts of people turned out. So the hall was filled and seats were found on rough lumber, goods boxes and nail kegs. The meeting was called to order and Judge Tucker, who was called to the chair, stated the object. The Judge was among his neighbors and having them as well in hand as a politician has his henchmen they quickly organized the pioneer Sunday school with A. E. Philips, superintendent; Ellison White, secretary; and Mrs. C. H. Lefler and Mrs. Chas. Bent teachers. And perhaps 30 Sunday school scholars, composed of big, little, old, young, male and female and of any or no religious denomination, were enrolled. A collection followed, and Sunday school literature was ordered. By the time this arrived a more suitable place of meeting had been secured, which was the town hall; a long, crude room over John Dodd's store, which is one of the old buildings now occupied by the Wight Greasey Company, at the foot of Palmetto avenue. This hall was supplied with common benches, and kerosene lamps were attached to the walls for night service. The free use of the hall for religious purposes was granted by Mr. J. E. Ingraham, who was the agent of General Sanford, the owner of all unsold property in the tract surveyed for the town of Sanford, west of Sanford Avenue.

Rev. A. A. Presbey, formerly of the M. E. Church, then a member of the Florida Conference, was serving Earnest Chapel at Fort Reed, and some other appointments, and consented to preach in the town hall once a month. The Methodist church at Sanford was then organized, and a board of stewards was elected, consisting of J. W. Tucker, chairman; A. C. Martin, O. G. Evans and A. E. Philips, the three first named being already stewards of the Earnest Chapel church. The business of the two appointments was thereafter conducted in Sanford, under the name of the Sanford and Earnest Chapel Church.

Plans for building a church in Sanford were now laid. General Sanford had previously donated a lot for the Methodist church, and left the church to the official board of the Earnest Chapel Church. The corner of Sixth street and Sanford Avenue, west side, had been selected. On this lot the main body of the church building, which has given way for the new, was erected during the years of 1881 and 1882.

In the meantime the mixed Sunday school was continuing in the old town hall, the teachers laboring with their different elements, some quite crude. In the Bible class of grown people, taught by the superintendent, a few were found whose under jaw would drop, while they looked at the teacher with a blank stare when asked questions about Abraham, Isaac or Jacob, or Moses and Aaron, or Enoch or Elijah, or other old Bible characters, seeming to indicate that the Sanford mixed Sunday school had brought to their ears the first mention of these distinguished ancient gentlemen!

The Sunday school secretary, Brother Ellison White, was a Baptist, and, as characteristic of the good people of that church, devoted himself faithfully to religious work. He sometimes taught the primary class in his efforts to help the work along, and also had some odd experiences. Teaching the old Elementary Catechism one day he had arrived at the question, "What did God do with Adam and Eve when He turned them out of the Garden of Eden?" Now, you more accomplished catechism scholars know the answer is, "He sentenced them to sorrow, pain and death." Bro. White's class could not answer. Up and down the row the question went, and finally landed at George, an urchin of probably ten years of age. "What did He do with them, George?" asked the teacher. "Sir!" answered George, who had not paid any attention until that moment. "What did God do with Adam and Eve when He turned them out of the Garden of Eden?" repeated the teacher. George's bare legs and feet were dirty as a pig from the mire, and were in perpetual motion below his bench. He looked down on these swinging, muddied members as if to draw an inspiration. Suddenly he looked up. "Well," said the waiting teacher, "what else, George, did God do with Adam and Eve?" George answered now promptly: "He sent 'em to Flurridy!"

"We laugh; but poor George! 'Flurridy' must have been hard on him to make him think that a sentence to such a country was equal to capital punishment for that guilty pair." Ellison White's name brings to mind an interesting item of history connected with those pioneer days. What think you, with all our great, gushing artesian fountains, and the forceful flow through our city from the great water tower, when I tell you that in those early days there was no source of drinking water in the town of Sanford! There were perhaps two or three moderate size private cisterns, but apart from these and a few rain barrels, empty half the time, and the other half, full of wigglitails and breeding mosquitoes, there was no drinking water in Sanford, except as supplied from Ellison White's deep well on the elevation which we now call the Sanford Heights. And think you, this was a dripen well, or bored well, an artesian well? Nay, verily, it was an old fashioned dug out, a curbed well, yielding pure, cool water from considerable depth; with no pump attached, but drawn to the surface in a bucket!

THE AMERICAN SENTIMENT

THE ENGLISH SPEAKING PEOPLE SEEM INCLINED TO FAVOR GREAT BRITAIN

(TAMPA TIMES)

Those who compose the large element of our citizenship that derives its blood from Germany, directly or through parents who were born there, feel greatly aggrieved that the preponderating public sentiment of the American people seems to be against their Fatherland and in favor of its foes in the tremendous struggle that is now being waged in Europe.

This feeling on their part is very natural under the circumstances and entirely justifiable. It is a matter of patriotism for them to feel that their country is right, whatever may be the facts, and instead of condemning them for feeling as they do we ought to admire and respect them for it.

There is no race upon the face of the earth the members of which are more warmly and enthusiastically attached in sentiment to the country from which they sprang than Germans. They emigrate to other lands and spend there the remainder of their lives, and may rear there their children, never seeing again, with physical eyes the Fatherland; but there is always an indissoluble chain invisible though it may be, that binds them to the land that they left.

Do they deserve adverse criticism for this? Far from it; they merit ever the highest admiration and the warmest praise. The Germans are a sturdy, thorough, steadfast people, hard to be turned from a purpose once formed and almost unconquerable. In the many years of constant wars in which that country has participated fortune has sometimes been adverse; but the indomitable spirit of the race has never permitted them to rest supinely under the burden of defeat. Always they have bided their time with fires of patriotism glowing and resolution undaunted to convert defeat into victory. This spirit has placed the nation in the premier position in the array of powers, and it is this that renders the outcome of the gigantic struggle now in progress, notwithstanding the disparity of force against them, doubtful in its issue.

While the Germans feel aggrieved at the manifestations of sentiment on the part of the American people, and naturally and justifiably so, as we have admitted, they should not permit themselves to feel resentment. The condition of feeling on the part of the majority of the people of the United States is quite as natural, and for the same reasons, as is the attachment of the Germans to the country of their old home. Though many extraneous elements have been grafted upon the original stock since the old days of the Pilgrims and the Cavaliers and the settlements at Plymouth and Jamestown, it should be remembered that the parent stem of the American race grew in British soil; that while the German says the "Fatherland," we with equal affection, speak of the "Mother Country."

There is also a traditional bond that binds us to France. We cannot forget that the original struggle for the right to govern ourselves the soldiers of France fought by the sides of our forefathers and aided them materially in achieving the final victory that made us a nation.

But aside from these sentimental considerations, the sense of justice of the American people is deeply involved and has much to do with the formation of our judgement of the place of the right in this contest and the location of the wrong.

Whether justly or not, the impression exists in this country that if the German Emperor did not actually bring on the war of his volition and intent, he allowed it to pass through the stages in which a word from him would have prevented or stopped it—and he did not speak that word; but by the arrogance of his conduct forced war upon other nations that desired earnestly to avoid it. So believing the direction of the sympathies of the American people is natural and not to be wondered at.

It may be that the national mind has been made up upon false information emanating from prejudiced sources; if so, upon the erroneous character of the foundation of the judgement they have formed being demonstrated there will be justice rendered quite as promptly and as fully as the adverse impression has been formed.

ASPARAGUS IN FLORIDA

Quincy Growers Making Success of This Great Crop

Asparagus appears to be one of the products of the soil that can be profitably cultivated in Florida, especially in northern and western sections of the state. Believing it possible to produce the highest grade of asparagus for the markets of the United States at a time when no other section could make shipments, the Vall-Sylvester stock farm near Quincy three years ago planted asparagus to develop this industry and now have fifteen acres which will be ready for shipment in the winter.

This acreage will not be sufficient to supply the demand by any means, but with the successful returns from the crop this winter it is certain to stimulate an interest among the truckers of northern and western Florida, where the lands are said to be superior to any in the world for this particular crop.

To those who do not know of the possibilities of this industry, it will be information to them to learn that an acre will produce more than a thousand dollars worth of this rare vegetable.

The scarcity of asparagus in certain seasons has made it necessary for the canned article to be called into use, for there is an ever increasing demand for this vegetable, which the appetite of the rich man calls for.

After the land is thoroughly planted and the roots are matted in the rows or beds, the land does not have to be replanted for a score of years and the planter has merely to attend to the gathering of the tender sprouts which come up over night.

News of the large profits derived from the cultivation of celery and lettuce and tomatoes and tobacco on Florida lands are nothing compared with the profits which will come to the Quincy firm which is the pioneer in the asparagus field.

INCREASE IN INSURANCE RATES

The high cost of living is confined not only to the grub we eat, clothes we wear, the tools we use, the labor one employs, lumber, paints, oils, medicines and embalming charges. The insurance companies are getting theirs. This is especially true in the South, where for some reason best known (and known alone to the insurance trust, the rates are much higher than in the North. The universal rate on dwellings and farmland in the South is $1.00 per year.

In the North the rate is 50 to 60 cents per year. Where it is necessary to have fires from eight to ten months in the year, the rate is only about one-half that of the South, where fires are used occasionally only for two or three months. Considering this, the rates would figure three or four times as high in the South as in the North.

And now there is a new scheme. At the meeting of the rate-makers to be held at Niagara in September, a new increase scheme is to be worked. Instead of writing a three-year policy for twice the price of a one-year policy, as heretofore, the new rate is to be two and one-half.

Three years ago the basic rate of dwelling insurance in DeLand was $1.00 per hundred with a three-year policy for $2.00 per hundred. But since then, the insurance trust has grown real generous, and in consideration of our paid fire department and better water service, cut the rate to 90 cents per hundred. At the same time, however, the trust put on 15 cents per hundred for tenant, and also 15 cents per hundred for furniture, making the present rate (after the "reduction") $1.20 per hundred. This is where DeLand "gets it in the neck." If a DeLand man insures his home and rents the house three months in the winter, his rate of insurance is jumped to $1.05 per hundred, with an additional 15 cents per hundred for his furniture. This is the big increase the good trust has given us for our $4,000 fire truck.

Senator Conrad is one of the influential business men in the Florida Legislature. An investigation into the comparative insurance rates started by him, would possibly mean thousands of dollars in savings to the State. Mr. Conrad is a large property owner; he is recognized as a safe and sane business man; an investigation started by him would be recognized, not as an effort to hold up the lobbyists of the insurance trust, but as a legitimate effort to benefit the State and to obtain for his people the same rates as are granted other people in other sections of this country. - DeLand News.

Peculiar Furnishing of Bird's Nest.

A golfer who was playing over the St. Neots (Huntingdonshire, England) links the other day hit his ball into a hedge, and after searching for it some time without success, observed a bird's nest. From curiosity more than with any expectation of finding his ball there he looked into the nest and found not only his own ball, but three others as well.

Neglected wounds produce old sores and these in time develop ulcers which eat away the vitality.

Ballard's Snow Liniment

Is a Healing Remedy for All Ailments of the Flesh of Man and Beast.

The speed with which this splendid liniment heals up a bad wound or sore has surprised and pleased those who were accustomed to the slower and uncertain effect of less powerful remedies. It mends the lacerated flesh so quickly that there is but little time lost from work. In relieving rheumatic pains, neuralgia, sciatica, it has done and is doing a wonderful work. Many chronic victims of these diseases have found to their great satisfaction that it cures an attack in a fraction of the time required by the ordinary treatment.

It is equally effective in the flesh ailments of animals. Owners of blooded stock value it highly for two reasons: it heals sores and wounds quickly, and leaves no disagreeable scars.

This remedy is needed in every home. Its great power and efficacy was generally known, no family would be without it.

Price 25c, 50c and $1.00 per Bottle.

We export $18,000,000 of lumber and timber, and American tourists spend a similar amount in motoring over Europe and sightseeing in foreign lands.

WHY SOME FAIL

Here are some words of wisdom from the Zolfo Springs Truth: "Nine failures out of ten among northern people who settle in Florida can be traced to mismanagement."

SALVAGE FROM LOST SHIPS

Specie in Quantity Has on Occasions Been Recovered From the Victims of the Ocean's Fury.

Although the chances of being able to do so are considered doubtful, since the lies in 17 fathoms of water, the Canadian Pacific railway has not abandoned all hope of refloating the Empress of Ireland.

The most notable salvage of silver during recent years was made after the Oceana sank in the channel in March, 1912, through collision with the Pisagua.

The banks, it might be mentioned, are the gainers in such cases. The usual procedure when bank notes are lost is to at once inform the bank of England, giving the numbers.

If the numbers on the bank notes are unknown, and the notes are never found, the money goes to the unclaimed bank balances, in which there are always huge amounts of other people's money.

Light Humor. In the latter half of the eighteenth century one of the members of a little scientific society in Liverpool, England, laid a curious wager.

The layer merely coated the inside of a shallow wooden box with sloping pieces of looking glass, so as to form a concave lens, placed it behind his farthing dip, and readily deciphered the small print at the stipulated distance.

The experiment was witnessed by a Liverpool dock-master. He was a thinking man, and saw great possibilities in this learned jest.

Doll Too Much Like Baby. This is a true story: There is a little girl on the East side of New York to whom a beautiful woman wanted to give a doll.

It was not until some time afterward the little girl explained. She'd always had babies to take care of, she said. She'd had them to lug around with her almost as soon as she was able to walk.

The beet sugar industry of Southern California is of large proportions and much larger than the public comprehends, experts claim. Both in 1913 and in the growing crop of 1914 the beet sugar acreage in Southern California was about 90,000. Last year from this acreage 766,110 of beets were aliced, and the refined sugar made from these beets was 2,000,000 pounds or 2,300,000 100-pound bags. Beet sugar companies have about $15,000,000 invested in factories and lands in Southern California.

Gordon Craig

Soldier of Fortune—By Randall Parrish

Copyright, 1912, by A. C. McClurg & Co.

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Craig is hired by two men, Vall and Neale, for $10,000 to go south and impersonate Philip Henley, ostensibly to save an estate for Henley, who, they say, is in prison. Craig is to take with him a woman to impersonate Mrs. Henley.

Suspected of burglary, Craig is cleared by a young woman wandering in the street. She is out of work and hungry. They talk in a restaurant.

She is an actress, deserted by her wealthy, drunken husband. She consents to go south with Craig.

Mrs. Bernard is a good woman and will play the part of Mrs. Henley to help Craig. They arrive at the rundown Henley plantation and are greeted by a rough looking overseer.

Coombs, the overseer, and a mysterious negro, Sallie, seem to be the only persons on the plantation. Craig is awakened by a shot and finds a man murdered.

Requiescent, a close friend of Coombs, is found dead. Mrs. Bernard finds the corpse missing. Mrs. Bernard is really Mrs. Henley. She and Craig determine to fight for her missing husband's estate. She believes Henley dead.

Coombs denies Henley is dead and denies Craig, although the latter reveals Mrs. Henley's identity to the overseer. The latter says Henley himself put him in charge of the plantation.

Mrs. Henley and Craig find Philip Henley's seal ring in the garden. Exploring the house alone, Craig finds a secret basement room.

He is trapped and discovers two dead bodies. One is the missing corpse, and the other is Coombs. Craig is struck down and is made prisoner by a dark young man, another named Herman and Broussard. Mrs. Henley is also caught.

Craig and the woman are taken aboard a yacht, which sails. The owner and master, the dark young man, calls himself Philip Henley. He tries to win Craig, and the latter feigns friendship for him in order to help the woman.

Mrs. Henley denies the man is her husband. She is locked up in a stateroom, and "Henley" produces papers which seemingly support his claim. Craig pretends to join in his filibustering expedition.

CHAPTER XII.

Join the Sea Gull.

YOU chance to be the very sort of man I need. The devil could not have sent me a better," he said, with some enthusiasm. "You are an American soldier, the best drilled men in the world for irregular service. You can understand that the longer I can keep those fellows down there fighting, the more I will sell. Good! that is part of my business. And the better they are drilled, the longer they will keep it up. That is what I want you for—to help make that mob of rifs into an army. You can do it, and I am willing to pay the price."

"I perceive your point," I said at last, facing him. "But what is there in it for me?"

"A good round sum," he replied. "More than you ever made before, I warrant, not excepting the promises made you in this Henley will case. We'll talk the details over later."

"Who is responsible for my pay?"

"See here, Craig, the case stands like this. The revolutionists down there asked me to find them a competent drill master, and they will pay royally. They've got the money, too, scads of it. There will be no trouble on that score. Besides, I need a reliable man ashore to look after shipments. We have to land our goods in a hurry, you understand, at night, without checking up. I can afford to hand you something pretty nice on the side to assure myself a square deal."

"It looks good," I confessed, but still hesitating. "Only I shall have to have it in writing and more in detail."

"We'll talk that over in the morn-

"I perceive your point," I said at last, facing him. "But what is there in it for me?"

"Then I am no longer to consider myself a prisoner on board?"

"Certainly not. Practically, you are one of us."

"And I have the freedom of the deck?"

going forward at present, not until the men understand the situation. They're a hard lot."

"Revolutionists?"

"No; plain New Orleans wharf rats, the scouring of the seven seas."

"Who is first mate—the German?"

"Yes; Herman; a fine sailor. Was with the Hamburg people until he had a wreck. The creole Broussard is second, and two of them together could tame a cargo of wildcats."

I took his hand, feeling the stony grip of his lean, brown fingers, and turned to the door. The single lamp in the main cabin was turned low, only faintly illuminating the interior. In the quiet I could feel the movement of the vessel and realized there was some sea on, although the engines were being operated only at half speed.

What Henley meant to do with the girl was problematical—I had not thought to ask—but he either intended putting her ashore in Honduras or else holding her prisoner on board until the Sea Gull returned north. Either contingency was bad enough, and the suspicion flashed suddenly across me that the final decision would depend on how kindly she might receive the attentions of the captain. Nor did I question the result. I had not known the lady long, but in that brief time our relations had been sufficiently intimate to yield me a good insight into her womanly character. There would be no yielding, no compromise.

I felt my teeth lock, my hands clench in sudden anger.

I may have remained there for a quarter of an hour, motionless, thinking over every incident. No one disturbed me. The captain was still in his stateroom, where once or twice I imagined I heard him pacing the floor. The steward had apparently retired for the night, although it was not late, as a glance at my watch proved. My eyes traced the doors on either side, ten altogether, each plainly numbered, and I opened the one assigned to me and glanced within. Except that it was more commodious and contained a washstand at one corner, it did not differ greatly from the other forward where I had been held prisoner.

I wondered which of these others might be hers and passed silently from door to door, vaguely hoping for some sign of guidance. They were all tightly closed, and I dare not try the locks, as I was certain one, at least, of the under officers would be sleeping below. My round had brought me to the second door on the port side when in the dim light I perceived something lying at my feet and stooped down to better determine its character. It was the end of a very narrow light blue ribbon, apparently caught beneath the door. The door was numbered "5."

Whether by accident or design, she had left the one clue I most needed. I thrust it into my pocket, but the soft touch of the silk seemed to bring back to me a sense of caution. I knew the door was locked and assured myself there was no space beneath. If I was to communicate with her other means must be employed. What? This was the second stateroom on the port side. Judging from my own, the width of each room would be about six feet. There ought to be no difficulty in locating her porthole from the deck above nor in attracting her attention.

The one thing I desired now was to re-establish myself fully in her confidence, assure her I was at liberty on board, able and willing to be of service. This necessity overshadowed everything else, if I could discover means of communication we could plan hopefully, assured of co-operation. This seemed possible, the way to its accomplishment open. Shadowed from observation by the thick butt of the after mast, I wrote a few lines hastily on the back of an envelope, thrust it into my pocket and ventured up the companion stairs.

A glance sufficed to convince that I was alone and unobserved. The deck was unobstructed aft, except for a small boat swung to davits astern and the cabin transoms. These last were elevated some three feet, but considerable space separated from the rail. I slipped into this opening on the port side, crouching in the dense shadow until again assured I was alone. My position afforded as good a view forward as the darkness would permit and likewise enabled me to see into the dimly lit cabin below. I was not watched or spied upon. For the first time I began to feel free.

With a glance below at the unoccupied cabin I stepped back and paced off the distance until convinced that I had safely located where the porthole of No. 5 should be. I leaned over, seeking to trace its outline by some reflection of light from within, but the receding side of the vessel baffled me. Yet, assured that I must be correct in my measurements, I marked the spot on the rail and began search for some means by which I could open communication with the girl below.

The flag locker was astern, and standing on it I could feel inside the boat swung to the davits. It was a small, light boat, fashioned like a cutter, a good seagoing craft for its size. Two oars and a short mast, together with a roll of canvas, were stowed on top of the thwarts and secured by lashings. I cut one of these and drew forth about three fathoms of line, sufficiently pliable for my purpose. The boat hung ready for launching, the falls easily unhooked, and two pair of hands would be sufficient to lower it into the water. There was a locker forward I was unable to reach, but two water kegs, filled, were strapped under the stern sheets, lending me to believe the craft was fully equipped for immediate service. My mind filled with a daring hope by this discovery. I fastened the note to the end of the cord, weighted it with a bunch of keys and crept back to where I had marked the rail. Inch by inch I paid out the line, leaning well over. At last my ears detected the dangling of the metallic keys against the glass, and by manipulating the rope managed to make them sound with clear insistence. I repeated the effort several times before there was any response. Then the port seemed to be opened cautiously, although no gleam of light shot forth. She had evidently extinguished her lamp before venturing to answer the signal, but I felt her grasp on the cord. Then it was left dangling against the closed port, leaving me to infer that she was reading the hasty note.

My line was again hauled taut, but as I straightened up, prepared to haul up the returning message, I saw the shadow of a man passing across the cabin below. He was already at the foot of the companion stairs; in another minute he would be on deck. There was no time to do otherwise, and I released my grasp of the rope, letting it drop silently into the water. I had barely turned my back to the rail when Henley emerged within six feet of me.

"Who is this? Oh, you, Craig?" he questioned sharply. "Not asleep yet?"

"Not even drowsy," I said, pretending an ease I was far from feeling. "You think favorably of my plan, I hope?"

"I see no reason to refuse, if the pay is all right."

"It will be, trust me for that. A beautiful night this—the air as soft as June. I was about to turn in, but decided to take a whiff on-deck first."

"Rather a captain's duty, is it not?"

"I believe so, in regular service, but this is decidedly irregular. The fact is, that while I am the owner of this vessel and technically in command, I am no navigator. I merely give my general orders and trust the seamanship to Herman. He is perfectly trustworthy and capable, and I never interfere. The last voyage I doubt if I was on deck twice, although, of course," he added soberly, "my word goes if I should care to exercise authority."

"What are those lights off yonder?" I asked, pointing.

"Shore lights."

"Then we are steering east?"

"A bit south of east, yes; odd course for Honduras, you think?"

I nodded, willing enough to let him talk.

"We are playing the game safe, Craig; that's all," he explained, both hands gripping the rail. "You see, we cleared for Sanlago and are not anxious to be seen and reported by any westbound ships. To-morrow we will be hidden among the islands off the west Florida coast. Then, as soon as it is dark we will shoot out under full steam into the gulf. The chances are we'll cross the lane unobserved. If we should intercept a liner, she won't identify us in the dark as we burn no lights. By daylight we'll be well beyond their lookouts and can steer a straight course."

The proximity of the man irritated me. I wanted to be alone, where I could think out some feasible scheme of escape.

"I have had enough for tonight," I said finally, "and am going to turn in."

"Best thing you can do," he coincided, but without looking toward me. "Will follow suit as soon as I smoke a cigarette. I awoke the sun was shining through the glass of my porthole, and glancing forth, I caught the dazzle of the water. The vessel was motionless, apparently riding at anchor, the sea barely rippled by a gentle breeze. The breakfast table was set for one, and the black steward was loitering lazily in a chair. At sight of me he got to his feet.

"Ah snah thought you wasn't neber golu'ter wake up, sah," he said genially, showing his teeth. "Ah bin waitin' fer yer more'n two hours, Ah reckon."

"For me? Have the others eaten then?"

"Mostly, sah, mostly. De captain he neber eat no breakfast. He say et ain't good fer his libber. Yaw, yaw! But de mates dey both bin down."

"What time is it?"

"Most 10, sah."

"Has Mrs. Henley breakfasted yet?" I asked.

"Who, sah?"

"The lady you have on board?"

He scratched the wool on his head vigorously, glancing behind the mast as though uncertain what he had best answer.

"Ah snah neber know'd dat was her name, sah. No, sah, Ah neber done suspected it. Yes, sah, she had breakfast, but Ah reckon she didn't eat much."

"You served her here at the table?"

"No, sah; in her room, sah," his voice low. "De captain he unlock de doah an' then lock it agin. You like sugar in your coffee, sah?"

I found the after deck entirely deserted, and there was no one visible on the bridge. Two or three sailors, the anchor watch, were forward engaged in some service about the captain, and a fellow was swabbing the deck amidship. I heard Broussard's voice at a distance, but could not locate him. However, no one paid the slightest attention to me as I stood smoking and gazing enviously around. Everything appeared peaceful enough. We were lying in a small harbor with-

In a hundred feet of the shore, I sauntered forward toward the bridge, aiming to exchange greetings with the croole mate. Broussard was not a man to expect favors from, and I had hated him with the first glimpse of his face, yet he possessed his racial characteristic of impulsive speech and was thus far more approachable than the gruff German first officer. Perhaps if he believed me an accomplice he might be led to talk.

"How you com' on ze deck, m'sieur?" he asked, his eyes threatening. "I thought you down below, locked in all night," and he waved an expressive hand off.

CHAPTER XIII.

Tables Turned.

I LAUGHED, but without paying him the compliment of looking at him.

"I've changed allegiance, that's all, Broussard. The captain turned me loose last night."

"You wif us? You go volunteer?"

"Well, something like that. I'm to be drillmaster or general for those tattered battalions down in the jungles. What do you think of the job?"

He shrugged his shoulders and then grinned.

"What ze diff?" and he swept his hands about in expressive gesture.

"See-land, if only one gets the price, m'sieur. But, for me, I like to go, to move--not lie still an' rot."

"Of course," falling into his mood, "that's in your blood, I reckon. But the captain said we were only to hide here for a day."

"Maybe day, maybe week. No one knows how long. We wait till the sea is clear. Bah! The man 'frail of shadow. He give no sleep, an' I show-been. He no sailor, m'sieur. I know heem long while."

"How long?"

"Oh, seck, eight year."

"Then you can tell me if he is really Judge Henley's son?"

"Oul, m'sieur; 'tis sure I can. I have been with him there, his brown hand outstretched landward, where we got you, hey, many the time; besides, the judge he been on zis sheep. Of course he was son; why you think not?"

"I am beginning to believe I do not know very much about it, Broussard. I explained briefly, moving aside to the rail. "I came down south with another story pumped into me, that's all."

"And ze young woman," he persisted, following me closely, "why she come?"

"For the same reason I did."

"More like 'cause she love you, hey! Sacre! She was the lookin' girl, but--struggling his shoulders--'tis the captaine, not ze mate, who may admire. He is ze captaine, nobody tell him not on ze sea Gull."

I left him and walked aft, aware as I turned of the sneer on his face. Yet even then, although burning with anger, I knew better than to remain. I dare not speak the bitter words on my tongue, feeling certain that whatever I said would be repeated to Henley. I knew men well enough to understand the character of the sea Gull's captain. With unlimited power in his hands he was not an antagonist to be despised. Nor did I doubt his purpose. Now that he had seemingly won me over to his scheme he would turn his attention to her, feeling secure from interference. And he was Judge Henley's son, or at least, so these men believed who had been associated with him for years. The situation grew more and more complicated; it was no longer merely her word against his, and yet I could not doubt the truth of any statement she had made to me.

Broussard stared in my direction for a moment, but made no effort to follow, and finally disappeared forward. There was nothing on sea or land to attract my attention, and I felt that I would be nearer to her below in the cabin than on deck. The skylight was closed, although a gap then it gave me a partial view, and, as I gazed through the clouded glass I perceived a shadow pass. The next instant the negro steward emerged from the companion. Some swift impulse led me to crouch instantly out of sight, until the sound of his feet on the deck convinced me the fellow was going forward. I watched him cautiously. He stopped twice to glance back, but, perceiving nothing, finally vanished into the fore-castle.

The negro's going forward left the captain, and Viola Henley alone below. I crept to the door of the companion and then down the stairs.

The main cabin was vacant, but the door of No. 5 stateroom stood slightly ajar. Assured I should find it empty, my heart already beating furiously, I took a swift glance within. It in no way differed from the room which had been assigned me opposite, and everything was in perfect order. Evidently the girl had departed without a struggle, and with full expectation of an early return. Her small handbag lay on the berth unfastened, and a handkerchief, together with a pair of gloves, were upon the chair. That she had not gone on deck was a certainty.

while the deserted cabin led me irresistibly to suspect the captain's quarters. He had dismissed the steward on some excuse, opened her door, and I could do to help her, to overcome him, was not evident. I was alone, unarmed, surrounded by men under his command.

Possibly even now I was under surveillance. The negro had left the cabin, I knew, but where was Herman? Broussard was in charge of the deck, and hence this would be the first mate's watch below. Impressed with this disconcerting thought, I emerged again into the main cabin. The stateroom doors were all closed, and I had to guess which was the German's. I was sure, however, that Broussard occupied the first on the port side. I had heard him open that door while talking to the steward, and it was highly probable the first mate had the apartment opposite. Judging from the position of the doors, these would be larger than the other staterooms, and if Herman was the real navigator of the boat he would require good quarters. I listened at the door, but heard nothing, then, rendered desperate by the delay, I tried the knob cautiously. The door was unlocked, opening suddenly. A glance convinced me the room was unoccupied, and I stepped inside.

Instantly my mind leaped to a conclusion--the first mate was not on board; he was ashore with the boat party, and Henley was entirely alone. He had taken advantage of the opportunity. But what could I do? If I broke down the door into his cabin the noise would be heard on deck, and, besides, the fellow was armed. The only result of such an effort would be my own imprisonment, leaving her in more helpless stress than before. Without knowing why I peered into the bathroom connected with Herman's stateroom. It was small, but perfect in arrangement and, to my surprise, revealed a second door. In an instant I understood--this was not Herman's private bath, but was also used by the captain. That second door led to the after-cabin. I was there in two strides, my ear at the crack listening. Nothing reached me but the murmur of a voice, the words indistinguishable, yet this was sufficient to convince me that I was on the right trail. The two were together, and here was an opportunity for me to reach them unobserved. Slowly, using every precaution to avoid noise, I turned the knob and opened the intervening door a scant inch. I caught a glimpse of the interior.

"You have trapped me here, you--you brute!" I heard her say.

"Well, what of it?" instinctively. "Why shouldn't it be me, my dear, as well as the other?"

"What do you mean? Do you can get me with Gordon Craig?"

"Of course," and he laughed. "Why shouldn't I please? You came with him from the north, did you not--traveling as his wife? I happen to know your history."

She took a deep breath, standing straight before him, her cheeks burning.

"Perhaps you think you do," she said, now in full control of herself. "But you are going to learn your mistake. I am here under unpleasant circumstances, yet I am not subject to your insult. I refuse to answer you or remain in your presence." She stepped aside, leaving free passage. "You will unlock that door."

"Hardly that, and I could see his fingers shut down on the top of the desk. "It takes more than a few words to change me. Really, I like you better than I did. You are decidedly pretty now you are angry. Besides, what have I to be afraid of? There is no one but us in this part of the ship. I fixed that up before I went after you, even your friend Craig is mooning around somewhere on deck. I'm captain of the sea Gull and there's not a rapscallion on board who would risk his skill to help you. Even Craig wouldn't; he even told me himself you were nothing to him."

"He--he told you that?"

"He certainly did--in this room. Come, now, what is the use of being such a cat?" He took a step forward, but she never moved.

"Don't touch me," she said in a tone that stopped him. "I am a woman, but I can defend myself."

"That is the way things can do--threaten me," he said sharply. "I never take that from man or woman. See here! Do you realize where you are--how completely you are in my power? The door is locked, and you haven't any weapon. Don't try to fool me!"

"I have told you once," she said earnestly, "not to touch me."

"I'll take a chance. You're worth it!" I saw her struggle to break free, and then out of the shadow I leaped at him, both hands seeking his throat. There was to be no alarm, no shouting, if it could be avoided. The very impetus of my rush sent him staggering and left her helpless on the deck, yet I got grip on his collar, choking back the fury and struck him once, a half arm jolt, which would have sent him sprawling but for the cabin wall. Yet he rallied so quickly as to overcome this advantage. Judging him from his size, I had underrated his fighting ability, for he was all muscle, swift in movement as a cat, squirming out of my grasp before I could close firmly. My fingers were wrenched from his throat, yet the fellow made no outcry, realising, doubtless, it would not be heard. His eyes blazed with hate, merciless, vindictive, and he struggled like a fiend to break free. I saw the girl, still dazed from her fall, struggling to her feet, with face uplifted, then my every consideration was riveted on my antagonist. This was to be no boy's play, no easy victory. His muscles were like iron, his movements so quick and unexpected as to put me on the defensive. I could only hold tight, braced for the strain.

He Squirmed Under Me Like an Eel.

yet forced back. In spite of every effort, inch by inch across the door, my feet tangled in the rug. Neither could strike nor kick. I was powerless, and I dare not release his arms for fear he might possess a gun. But I managed to swing him sideways, the two of us tripping over the chair and coming down heavily on the deck. By some luck I landed on top and before he recovered from the shock had wrenched one arm free, locking my fingers in his throat.

He squirmed under me like an eel, but could not break the grip, his face purpling, until he lost all power. Fierce as the battle had been, I retained sufficient sense to loosen my death grip while the man still breathed, lifting my head sufficiently to glance about. My own breath came in sobs, and the perspiration almost blinded me.

"Bring me something to tie him with," I said brooklessly. "Anything; yes, that belt will do."

She tore it from the hook on the wall and thrust it into my hands. With a single movement I had it buckled securely about his arms, and was free to sit up and stare about. A cord from the portiere curtain draping the bathroom entrance completed his fastenings.

"By -- Craig," he snarled, "you'll both wish you'd killed me before you're done with this job. What chance have you got to get away?"

"That is for me to decide," I answered. "But if you open your mouth again I'll gag you. Now, stop it. The first word you utter will mean a handkerchief in your mouth."

I stooped down and dragged him to one side. As I straightened up again she was facing me.

"How did you get here?"

"I found my way through the connecting bathroom yonder."

"T--on--then, we can escape in the same manner."

"I hardly think that will be necessary. I'll go through our friend's pockets for his keys." I turned him over and began the search. "Ah, a revolver! I thought probably--in protest against a woman, you cur! Here are keys; now let's see what they fit."

The third one tried unlocked the door, but even as I tried them in the lock my mind swiftly reviewed the situation. It must be open war from now on. Henceforward we could expect no mercy on board. Yet how was it possible to escape, or avoid discovery? To attempt leaving the sea Gull before dark would be suicidal. Yet there was a chance that what had occurred in this cabin could be kept concealed for a few hours, until darkness gave us better opportunity for successful action. The memory of what Henley had said to me the evening before--that he was only technically in command; that for days at a time he never appeared on deck in person, gave me the clue. If he could be kept absolutely secure in his cabin, unable to create any alarm, we would be free to plan our escape. There were but two points of danger to be guarded against--Herman and the steward. The former, when he returned from shore, might seek him for final orders, and the latter, if he failed to appear in the cabin for the regular meal, would endeavor to learn his desires. I would have to guard against these contingencies, and, with the first in mind, I stepped across to the bathroom, and was gratified to learn that the door, leading into the mate's stateroom, could be locked on the inside. With this private approach barred, I felt confident of being able to guard the single entrance remaining.

"Well, what can we do?" she asked when I returned.

"Keep the fellow tied and wait for daylight," I answered soberly. "That is our only chance. The mate is ashore. We are lying in the cove of a small island off the Florida coast waiting for darkness and a chance to slip through into southern waters."

"Do you know where this boat is bound?"

"Yes; Spanish Honduras. We are loaded with munitions of war," I laughed. "I was to be a general down there. I had to play a part. But you received my note?"

"Yes, and it helped me wonderfully, although even then I scarcely comprehended why all this pretense was necessary. Surely you do not believe this man is Phillip Henley, that--that I have told you a lie?"

"No, I do not," I answered earnestly. "But he has shown me evidence of his identity which would have convinced me under other circumstances--letters and pictures. I will show them to you,

"Out Nets!" Against Torpedoes; Broadside of a British Dreadnought

OUT NETS!" is the order on a battleship when danger from these submersed ferocious of sea warfare is apprehended. The nets, such as are shown in the picture, are retied upon to entangle attacking torpedoes or cause them to explode harmlessly instead of against the sides of vessels. The lower picture shows the great broadside guns of one side of a big British Dreadnought.

for I know where they are kept in the desk. No evidence would shake my faith in you, and I am certain now there is fraud here, some devilish plot concocted to steal Judge Henley's fortune.

"What letters? What pictures were they?"

"Letters from the judge to his son, intimate family letters, and a photograph of the father and this man taken together."

"And were the letters addressed to Phillip?"

"The envelopes had been destroyed, and no name was mentioned, but the photograph was indorsed in the judge's handwriting."

ALLIES MAKING FIRM STAND

ABLE MEN WANTED

Sanford Men Are Needed To Join This Great Army Of Fighters

100 men are wanted in Sanford to attend the meeting of the Commercial Club tonight when the campaign for the great fight to be waged this winter will be mapped out by Commander Lake and his many assistants in the field. This will be a fight to the finish and will be waged against the knockers who insist that Sanford is not going to be the greatest city in South Florida in the next ten years. There will be reports from the various committees and plenty of "heap big talk" about what is best for the city in the fall and winter campaign. It is hoped that some of our good friends from out of town who are now engaged in the laudable enterprise of building the new hotel will be present and give the club ideas of other cities and the cause of their growth. Every man in Sanford who thinks enough of his city to boost it should be present at this meeting. It has become a well recognized fact that some business men of Sanford never attend the meetings of the Commercial Club or the meetings of any trade body designed to accomplish something for Sanford and their number is being taken for future reference. They are no good to the city and the sooner they drop completely out of Sanford's life the better the active citizens will like it and the city will begin to move forward. These citizens are not expected at the meeting and the committee on membership will not be disappointed, but the real live and energetic people of Sanford are expected to be present, just as they always are and with the help of these real citizens the work of placing Sanford before the people will be undertaken.

Uncle Sam May Own Ships

Washington, D. C., August 27.—Utter demoralization prevails among the shipping interests of the United States and large business houses who were contemplating the purchase of ships for the Panama Canal trade because of the probability of the United States government going into the business of owning and operating ships.

President Wilson was so informed today by members of the Senate and by letters and telegrams from firms engaged in the mercantile marine trade. He discussed the matter with Senators Benjamin F. Shively, of Indiana; Willard Salisburry, of Delaware; and Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio.

President Wilson made it clear to callers that he is intensely interested in his desire to see regular lines of ships established from the United States to South American ports to take advantage of the present exceptional opportunity furnished by the European war to capture the trade of the countries south of the canal.

Believing that a government-owned line would be the most practical means of insuring an adequate service and of obtaining this trade, he is urging upon members of Congress a direct government appropriation for the purpose.

The administration bill will provide for an appropriation of $25,000,000 to be invested in the majority stock of a mercantile marine corporation which will engage in foreign trade, particularly trade with South America. The company so formed would be in all respects similar to the Panama Railroad and Steamship Company, which the government owns and which has been engaged in transporting passengers and freight from New York to Colon, in the Canal Zone.

Bryan for Judge

Washington, D. C., Aug. 28.—Senator Nathan P. Bryan of Florida for judge of the circuit court of appeals, Fifth circuit, New Orleans, to succeed the late Judge Shelby.

That is the program of the Florida delegation in both houses of congress, and this morning they held a meeting presided over by Senator Fletcher and decided to endorse the Junior Florida senator to President Wilson for the bench appointment. All members of the Florida delegation were present with the exception of Congressman L'Engle.

To Ask For Indictment

Washington, D. C., Aug. 27.—The Department of Justice is receiving reports every day from its special agents throughout the country, who are engaged in the investigation into the recent sharp advances in prices of food staples, and the department's evidence in many places indicates that there has been a well organized conspiracy among retailers to hold up prices and make all they can out of the war period.

It is expected that indictments will be asked for in Washington, Brooklyn, Chicago, and three other cities. The others have gone out to prosecute all persons who have clearly violated the law by conspiring to make prices on account of the war. The investigation is not confined to retailers, but also includes jobbers and wholesalers.

Many retailers have followed the prices set by others, without being involved directly in an agreement. The reports indicate, however, that there has been little difficulty in finding the originators of the movement, and it has been possible to make out strong cases in some instances. The investigation will be pushed all over the country and the alleged violators of the law punished if it is possible to get proof of their complicity.

FROM FLORIDA CLAY

Vitrified Bricks May Be Made In Later Years.

Orlando, Aug. 28. An idea advanced some time ago that the Geological Department go into the matter of testing the clay of Florida for making paving brick has been adopted and the business of collecting samples is now being performed by Mr. C. F. Gunter, assistant to the State Geologist.

Mr. Gunter was in Orlando today and visited the city clay pit east of town, in company with Mr. R. M. Bennett, the street superintendent and took a sample. The state bureau is working in conjunction with the U. S. Bureau of Standards at Pittsburg, where all the samples will be sent to be properly tested. The Bureau of Standards is simply that division of the United States Geological Survey in which such tests are made.

Under the arrangements between that bureau and the state bureau only twenty-five samples of clay are to be taken from Florida, and for this reason considerable discrimination is being used in drawing the samples.

Mr. Gunter started on his present tour of the state of Pensacola, and took a number of samples from the counties of West Florida. He left this afternoon for Kissimmee, Sebring, Tampa and other points.

While Mr. Gunter was not in position to state how long it would be before a decision could be had it is reasonable to infer that a report will be had in the course of a few weeks.

War Revenue Tax

Washington, D. C., Aug. 28.—War revenue legislation to add $100,000,000 to the government's annual income was considered today at a conference between Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Democratic Leader Underwood of the house, and Chairman Simmons of the senate finance committee. Mr. Underwood declined to say how it was expected to raise the additional income but it is understood a tax on tobacco, beer and liquors and possibly a stamp tax will be carried out.

The bill can be drawn quickly, in the opinion of administration leaders, and its introduction is expected to follow immediately a message from President Wilson asking for such legislation.

The Evening Worship

The friends of Dr. A. E. Housholder are glad to see him in the city this week. Dr. Housholder will be remembered as a beloved pastor of the Methodist church several years ago. He has been invited to preach at the Star in the evening. He has consented to do so, if he remains over Sunday.

If the pastor should preach his subject will be "The Value of the Soul."

BOILER BURSTED

And Saw Mill Men Suffer Series of Accidents that May Be Fatal.

Wednesday afternoon as the force at Zachary's mill were preparing to close down for the day the immense boiler at the plant near Markham bursted without a moment's warning and the boiler and brick foundation and various parts of the engine were blown a number of feet through the air. The sawyer, W. D. Smith and the lumber inspector, Mr. Kraeble and the negro fireman McGriff suffered serious injuries and Mr. Smith is not expected to survive his injuries.

The accident occurred just after Engineer Al Liglia had pulled in with the A. C. L. train and the boiler was thrown over one of the freight cars parts of the debris striking one car and almost demolishing it. The flying bricks struck Mr. Liglia and he thought a cyclone had struck his engine, but fortunately he had just pulled far away enough to escape the brunt of the falling shower from the boiler.

No reason can be assigned for the accident which will cause the mill to close down several weeks for repairs.

The explosion threw the village of Markham into a fever of excitement and physicians were rushed to the scene of the accident at once, giving the injured attention, while others dug into the ruins looking for more victims.

Two Big Men of the War

Here are shown the Kaiser of Germany and the czar of Russia with their personal staffs. The Kaiser is on the left. When this picture was taken it was little thought that in a few months' time these rulers would give the world that meant a conflict that filled the entire world with dread.
