Mediation program 'extremely successful'

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Students in Seminole County have been learning about how to resolve their differences quietly and without the use of force for some time now.

The concept is beginning to catch on around the state. Recently, a group of middle-school students laughed at a videotape on conflict resolution that showed two youngsters patching things up after an argument in a school hallway.

The students, who were participating Wednesday with Gov. Lawton Chiles in a television show on school safety, said that was a real-life example of how youths usually handle volatile situations at school.

"We want to get to these youngsters as quickly as possible. We must educate them early as to how to resolve their disputes without resorting to aggression."

-Barbara Kuhn

Barbara Kuhn, chairman of the Seminole County school board, is a management consultant who has worked with teachers, counselors and students around the district at both the middle and elementary school levels on the concept of dispute mediation.

Three years ago, Kuhn worked with CableVision of Central Florida (now Time Warner Cable), to make a training film with students at Jackson Heights Middle School.

"We use the film to demonstrate the concepts," she explained. "This is something that can be done at any age."

While state efforts are concentrating on middle schoolers, Kuhn said Seminole County is putting more emphasis on elementary school age students. She said she had originally targeted the program at middle school students, but they are finding that the younger students respond well to the program and benefit from it.

"We want to get to these youngsters as quickly as possible," she said. "We must educate them early as to how to resolve their disputes without..."

Students display artistic talents in a grand way

SANFORD — Looks like everything's coming up roses.

And sunflowers and peonies and daisies... The fourth and fifth grade students at All Souls Catholic School in Sanford spent Tuesday basking in the sunshine and splashing paint on a wood wall at EPCOT Center to create a colorful mural.

"It was an exciting experience for the kids," said art teacher Linda Moore. "They had a ball out there."

According to Moore, a representative from EPCOT called about two weeks ago and invited the students to participate in a mural painting project in celebration of the Floral Festival at the theme park.

The students' painting experience, Moore said, had been limited to small scale renditions.

Homeless population growing

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Families, old men, jobless men, even teenagers who are having difficulty adjusting to other social programs but who can't go home, make up the homeless population who seek shelter at the Sanford Rescue Outreach Mission.

Mother Bell Blanche Weaver who operates the mission on 13th Street said about 400 people are served meals daily, up from 300 a short time ago.

On any given day last year, 46,000 people in Florida had no place to call home, a 15 percent increase over the previous year, the state reported Thursday.

Most of the new homeless were single men suffering from alcoholism, drug abuse and mental illness, according to the fifth annual study of homelessness by the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

Fewer of the homeless are families. A third of the homeless were in family groups in fiscal year 1992-93, down from 40 percent the year earlier.

"Many of these families contain at least one person who is working but they still can't afford the down payment and first month's rent it takes to get into a house," said Michael Poole, president of the Florida Coalition for the Homeless.

Only about 25 percent of the homeless who come to the Sanford mission are affected by problems such as drugs, alcohol or mental illness.

"I got families. I got old people, sick people, older men you know. It has increased because this is the only mission in the county so this is where they come to," Mother Weaver said. "They are jobless. I would say maybe 25 percent have problems but most of them are just lookin' for jobs."

The mission has operated since 1987. She said she has heard some of the local churches have...

Waterfront concepts on display

By NICK PFEIFAU

SANFORD — As of today, drawings of the way Sanford's lakefront area could look in the future are being displayed downtown. They will be placed in the front windows of Touchton Drugs, 121 E. First Street.

During its May meeting, the Lake Monroe Waterfront Master Plan Committee had the first opportunity to see drawings depicting what Sanford's waterfront area could become.

Approximately a dozen separate plans were submitted by students of the University of Florida College of Architecture Summer Studio Project. The Waterfront committee has entered into a contract with the university students to fine-tune plans and proposals which have been made as the result of past meetings and discussions.

Since that time, the drawings have been on public display in the second floor hallway at Sanford City Hall.

Yesterday, Kay Bartholomew of the Sanford Historic Downtown Waterfront Association received permission to remove the drawings and take them downtown.

"The members of SHDWA have been asking about having them more available," Bartholomew said. "So I got permission to move..."

Protest centers on alleged discrimination

By J. MARK BARFIELD
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Area blacks began a protest today of a Korean-run store, saying employees there discriminate against their clientele.

"They need us just as much as we need them," said Johnell Jackson, organizer of the protest. "We want to make the community aware that we are targeting these Koreans by letting them know 99.99 percent of their business comes from the black community."

Early this morning, only Jackson was in front of the store, setting up signs. Jackson said he anticipated more people would attend tomorrow morning.

Jackson said an April 16 incident at the store points to a greater problem between Korean store owners and the black customers they serve. Store owners treat the black customers with disdain, even when blacks represent their primary market, he said. Black residents have relayed similar experiences at other Korean-run stores in the community, Jackson said.

The protest stems from an April 16 incident involving a black Gee Zone customer, Rev. Willie Mae Lowery, pastor of First Independent Free Methodist Church in Midway. Lowery said she was denied use of the store restroom and assaulted by an employee. Further, when Lowery called the police, she was issued a trespassing warning. If she enters the store again, she faces arrest.

Lowery has filed a complaint against the officer and has hired an attorney to investigate the matter.

Math, reading tests scores decline

TALLAHASSEE — Math and reading test scores declined slightly among Florida's 10th graders taking a three-year-old national test boasting tougher academic standards.

The state results were a point below last year's tests in the 1994 Grade Ten Assessment Test (GTAT) but that didn't disappoint state education officials.

"This assessment is helping guide Florida's school improvement effort by developing higher expectations for Florida's students," Education Commissioner Doug Jamerson said in a statement Wednesday.

Florida's students were slightly below the national average in reading comprehension and were equal to the national average in advanced math skills, the state Department of Education said.

Almost 100,000 students took the test, which was introduced in 1992. The test includes two 40-minute multiple choice tests, 60 reading comprehension questions and 48 math questions.

Jamerson said the national test is designed to be more difficult than past assessment tests and he expected results to improve in the future.

Crenshaw takes aim at health care plan

TALLAHASSEE — A leading opponent of the governor's health care plan has started what is expected to be a bruising political fight when lawmakers meet in special session next month.

Sen. Ander Crenshaw, a Jacksonville Republican running for governor, said the governor "is going to be in for a big surprise when the Legislature hits town for the special session."

"The more that people understand his health care plan the less they like it," he told a news conference Thursday.

Gov. Lawton Chiles will call lawmakers back to the Capitol from June 7-13 to consider his health-care reform plan, which did not pass during the regular session.

Crenshaw, a leading Republican opponent, said he would like to see the governor's plan debated, but Chiles has not yet released any specific legislation.

The governor has been traveling the state to build support for his reforms.

Chiles has said the biggest obstacle to reaching agreement was the level of income eligibility for uninsured people who could qualify for government subsidies to buy private insurance.

Chiles vetoes comprehensive plan bill

TALLAHASSEE — A bill that was supposed to comply with a 1992 constitutional amendment on budgeting methods could have undermined regulation of growth and development in Florida, Gov. Lawton Chiles said.

Chiles said in a letter vetoing the bill Wednesday that it fundamentally altered and weakened the role of the state's comprehensive plan.

Linda Shelley, secretary of the Department of Community Affairs, which oversees growth management, asked Chiles to veto the bill.

It raised alarms by the League of Women Voters, environmental groups and former community affairs secretary Tom Pelham, who helped establish the state's growth-management program.

They objected to language that said the plan would provide "guidance" rather than "direction" for the regulation of development, mining and the like, and wouldn't supersede any other state statutes.

Chiles also objected to portions that would have deleted part of the law that makes the governor the state's chief planning and budget officer.

Severed body in New York identified

SOUTH DAYTONA — Half the body of a Florida woman was found two days before her husband reported her missing, New York authorities said.

The rest of Kimberly A. Guglielmo's body was found earlier this week at a separate location, police said Thursday.

Her husband, Mark Alexander Guglielmo, surrendered to South Daytona police Thursday on a charge of tampering with evidence, according to statements by local authorities and the District Attorney's Office of New York's Westchester County. He was released on $25,000 bond.

The 20-year-old woman's death was "homicide-related," authorities said.

Police said the woman left her apartment on May 10 and had not been seen since.

The lower portion of her body was found in Tarrytown, N.Y., four days later in a riverfront park next to a hammer, hatchet and knife. The upper half was discovered over the weekend in a Bedford, N.Y., reservoir about 10 miles northeast of Tarrytown, authorities said.

Detective Eugene Buonanno of the Tarrytown, N.Y., Police Department said Guglielmo, 24, is accused of illegally removing a mattress, linens and carpeting from the couple's South Daytona apartment.

Celebration of service

Junior Woman's Club salutes dedicated law enforcement officers

Officer Richard Poovey of the Sanford Police Department was chosen as the Officer of the Year at the Junior Woman's Club of Sanford's 7th Annual Officer of the Year Salute.

The event, which was held at the Juniors' general meeting on Thursday, May 19, honored law enforcement officers in Seminole County who were nominated by their supervisors as officers deserving of special recognition.

Cindy Guiles, public affairs chairman, awarded the officers with certificates in appreciation of their service as outstanding officers in the community.

The nominees were: Officer James A. Rick, Casselberry Police Department; Officer Stephen Shea, Lake Mary Police Department; Corporal Johnnie Gibson, Oviedo Police Department; Sergeant Billy R. Lee Jr., Seminole County Sheriff's Office.

A plaque for Officer of the Year was later presented to Officer Poovey who was unable to attend the ceremony.

Officer Poovey was nominated for being an all around "good police officer" because of his enthusiasm and good attitude, readiness to accept assignments and responsibilities, and his accomplishments in educating the city's youth through projects and programs, including D.A.R.E.

Cindy Guiles admitted that the committee had a difficult time making a decision. All candidates are to be commended for their community involvement and achievements.

Defendant becomes ill after hearing testimony

By Associated Press

TAVARES — A murder defendant got sick when prosecutors described the death of one of the two young girls he is accused of killing.

But Richard Henyard Jr. denies killing the girls, though he admits to raping and shooting the girls' mother after kidnapping the trio from a Winn-Dixie store parking lot, the defense said Thursday.

For the first time since his first-degree murder trial began Monday, the Eustis resident showed emotion Thursday. He is accused of killing Dorothy Reid Lewis, and her two daughters, Jamila, 7, and Jasmine, 3.

"He's real upset," said Henyard's court-appointed attorney, T. Michael Johnson. "He's showing a lot of remorse."

Assistant Public Defender William Stone hinted in opening arguments that the killer of the girls was co-defendant Alfonza "Junior" Smalls, then 14.

Smalls is to be tried separately on charges of first-degree murder, kidnapping and rape. A judge has ruled Smalls was too young at the time of the crime to be subjected to the death penalty.

Six weeks later, state budget still not on governor's desk

By ADAM YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — The state spent over $2,000 to express mail copies of the $38.6 billion 1994-95 budget to lawmakers this spring so they could pass the spending plan in time to finish their regular session.

Six weeks later, that state budget still hasn't gone to Gov. Lawton Chiles for his signature making it law.

Some Republican lawmakers and a government watchdog contend the delay is an attempt to give the governor more leverage to force the Legislature to pass his health care reforms during a special session set to begin June 7.

"We work as hard as we can to pass a budget as quickly as we can, and then the governor holds it hostage so he can pass other legislation," said Sen. Ander Crenshaw of Jacksonville, an opponent of the governor's health care plan — and a GOP gubernatorial candidate.

"It may be smart politics, but it's bad public policy," charged Crenshaw.

Others say that, at the very least, it's bad public policy to take so long to approve the only piece of legislation that lawmakers are required to pass each year.

"There seems to be some deliberate reason and deliberate action to delay transmission of the state budget," said Dominic Calabro, president of Florida TaxWatch, a government watchdog group. "It's a disservice to the citizens, to the voters and to the taxpayers."

Officials in the governor's office and the House denied the governor would delay the budget and threaten to veto certain projects in order to sway support for his health care reform plan.

"I think the days when you could threaten

Ruling: No sex with minors

By Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE — Adults in Florida still cannot have sex with minors — even if the minors consent to it, under a Florida Supreme Court ruling.

Justices on Thursday upheld an appeals court decision that Florida's statutory rape law is constitutional.

The state has "an obligation and compelling interest" to protect minors by outlawing consensual sex, justices wrote.

"Sexual activity with a child opens the door to sexual exploitation, physical harm, and sometimes psychological damage, regardless of the child's maturity or lack of chastity," the justices wrote.

The decision involved three central Florida cases in which teen-age girls — two 14-year-olds and a 15-year-old — said they willingly had sex with adult men. Prosecutors invoked the statutory rape law.

But State Circuit Judge Jerry Lockett of Tallahassee threw out rape law in July 1992, saying the state Supreme Court's 1989 ruling abolishing abortion restrictions for minors extend the right of privacy to minors having consensual sex.

The Supreme Court's landmark abortion ruling came in the case of a Lake County teen-ager who sought an abortion without parental consent. The court said teen-agers and adults enjoy the same privacy rights in Florida.

Lockett concluded that if privacy applied to the right to an abortion, it must apply to the right to have sex.

The 5th District Court of Appeal in Daytona Beach reversed Lockett last year, saying people under 18 aren't responsible enough to "cope with the consequences" of sex. The lower court then asked the Supreme Court to review the decision.

Thursday's Supreme Court ruling means statutory rape charges will be reinstated against Erik Rodriguez, a St. Cloud resident when charged, and Steven Williams, then of Eustis.

Also, the conviction of Quarry Jones, then of Orange County, will stand. Jones had received a 4½-year prison sentence.

State prosecutors hailed the ruling, but critics denounced it as an infringement of privacy rights of young people.

"The whole purpose of the statute is to protect young, impressionable people from older adults who could take advantage of their immaturity," 5th Judicial Circuit State Attorney Brad King said. "I think it's an appropriate role for the state to take."

But Nina Vink, legal director of the Florida chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, argued that consenting sex between two people of any age "should be none of the state's business."

Kudos to school board

The Seminole County school board has made a commitment to help those students who are at risk of dropping out of school before graduation.

There is a new commitment of energy and financial resources to students, especially those in the Sanford area, who might not be motivated or prepared to meet the challenges of school.

The district has adopted a mission statement that says they believe every student has the capacity to learn. From the handicapped student to the gifted student, everyone is able to learn something.

The renewed commitment to those students who are at-risk is a confirmation of that belief.

We believe the Seminole County school board is heading in the right direction by designating $1 million to those students who might need a little extra help in being all they can be.

Throwing money at a situation can never be the total solution to a problem. The commitment to a lower class size and to involve teachers, administrators and parents in the education of these students is the real answer.

At-risk students might be heading toward dropping out because of a lack of interest in school or because of disciplinary problems. There may be a lack of interest on the part of parents to encourage the student in educational pursuits.

While the school district can not change all things in the youngster's environment, it can make the schools the ideal place to learn.

The Seminole County school board has taken a strong first step in helping improve the future of those students at risk.

Chance to excel

What happens to high school students who have been expelled from school? Should they be readmitted to school, be turned away and on the streets, or be given alternative forms of education?

There is an educational alternative for students who have slipped through the cracks of traditional school systems: Project XL.

This alternative school is co-sponsored by the Seminole County School system and the Private Industry Council.

Imagine a school where at-risk students go to school, receive job opportunities, do their work on computers, receive individual counseling and mentoring, get rewarded for their achievements, and graduate. It's not a dream; it's happening at Project XL.

Unlike traditional schools, XL operates like a business. Responsibility is placed directly on the students. Failing or failing in the students' decision. They draft their own individual behavioral contracts. Failure to live up to the contract means students lose their last chance to be educated.

At XL, instead of hearing, "You won't succeed," students hear, "You will learn here." For every month students attend classes, PIC rewards achieving students. It's like going to a job and receiving a benefits package.

The school board and PIC share the philosophy that students need to learn a fourth R — responsibility. It is a better investment of taxpayers' money to fund short-term education rather than fund long-term incarceration.

Traditional education does not meet the needs and learning styles of all students. Schools of the future must adapt to meet individual needs and be willing to try alternative methods if students are to be given the chance to excel.

American politics sheds its shame

With apologies to "Guys and Dolls," politics has become "the oldest established, permanent, floating soap opera in the U.S."

It's not hard to appreciate why. The art of governance has replaced the pageantry of theater.

Who would believe that a television series would feature a woman accusing a Supreme Court nominee of sexual harassment; another woman accusing the president of the United States of inviting her to perform oral sex; a U.S. senatorial candidate and former Marine colonel convicted of three felony charges after confessing that he lied to Congress; and an ex-convict, cocaine-using former mayor of the nation's capital announcing he will run again for that office?

Obviously not. National shame evaporated in the canonization of a president who singlehandedly tried to destroy the Constitution. Richard Milhous Nixon left office in disgrace and was resurrected with amazing grace.

The controversies swirling around Anita Hill, Paula Jones, Oliver North and Marion Barry all prove that shame is a function of ideology, political party, ethnicity and gender.

Republicans and their allies have never wavered from their conviction that Anita Hill lied about Clarence Thomas. And now they're reeling from the ecstasy of their redemption by Paula Jones.

Barry's announcement of his mayoral candidacy will shock many political purists who aren't shocked by the besmirched Republican senatorial candidate Oliver North's lead among Republican delegates in Virginia.

Despite denunciations of North by former President Reagan, former Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Colin Powell and Virginia Sen. John W. Warner — as well as polls predicting that North will lose — Virginia's Republican faithful are hanging tough with North. He's going to be nominated, and he just may beat Virginia's hot-to-trot Democratic incumbent, Charles Robb.

Does Barry's candidacy occasion surprise? Probably no more than the recent nationwide poll of 1,200 blacks, which found a majority of blacks — 55 percent — now favor the establishment of a black political party.

The poll is a political electric shock, coming at a time when black electoral officials have never been more incorporated into America's political mainstream.

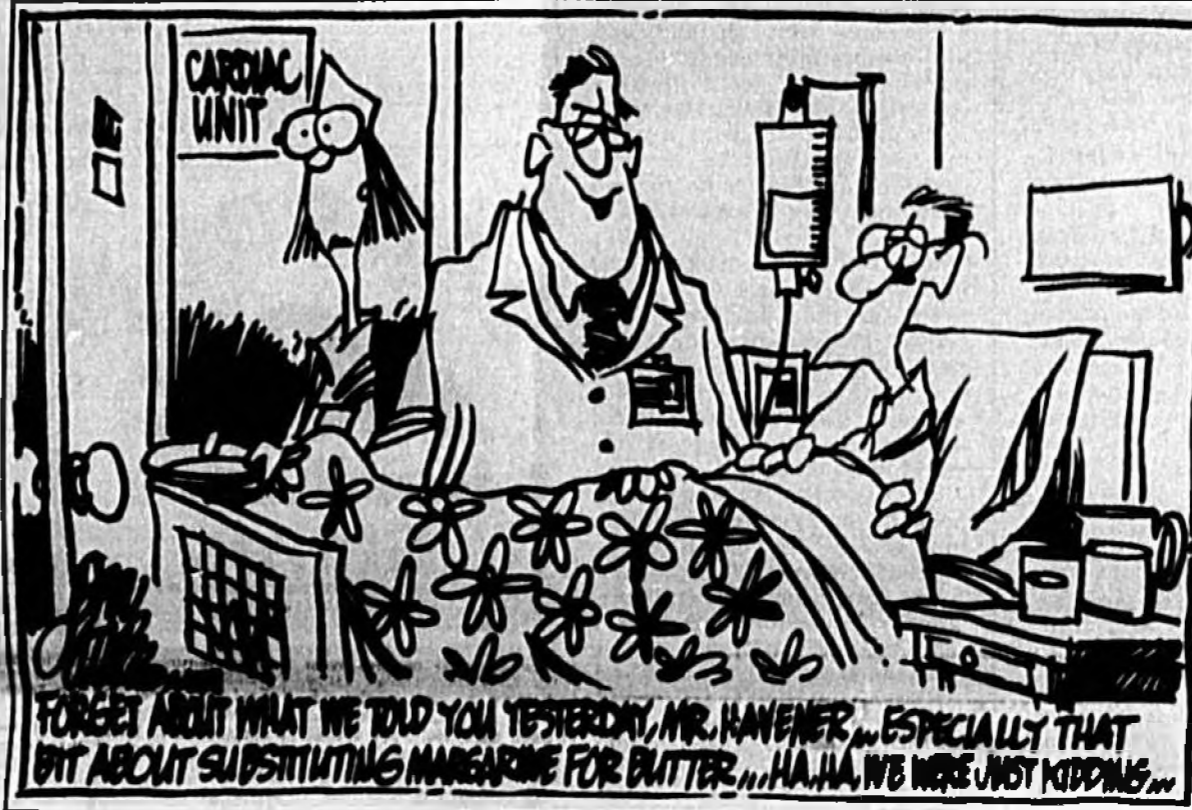

Even with blacks as mayors of major cities, chief justices of state Supreme Courts (Pennsylvania, South Carolina), speakers of statehouses (North Carolina, California) and members of Congress — 39 in total, the largest number ever — black voters still feel alienated.

Barry, a shrewd street politician, is tapping into this discontent. The odds are still prohibitively against him. D.C.'s white minority, paradoxically, like the South African white minority's estranged relationship with the African National Congress, demands a more rigorous standard than ethnic affection.

But D.C. black voters are feeling more than estrangement. They are disgusted with their incumbent mayor, Sharon Dixon.

The art of governance has replaced the pageantry of theater.

Patient wasn't told of experiment's risk

WASHINGTON — When Greg Aller tried to hitch a ride to Washington in 1990, he planned to assassinate the president with a canister of poison gas. This week he arrives in Washington as an expert witness.

Aller is scheduled to testify in congressional hearings that will examine the risks incurred by sometimes unsuspecting patients who participate in medical experiments. Aller sees himself as a volunteer-turned-victim.

Diagnosed as a schizophrenic, Aller had kept his symptoms in remission with the drug prolixin. Six years ago, he agreed to become a subject in a University of California at Los Angeles research project in which doctors tried to slowly wean him from prolixin. Aller, who was being treated as an outpatient, suffered a severe relapse.

Aller claims that he was following the orders of alien voices only he could hear when he tried to kill his parents and embarked on a trip to Washington to assassinate then-President George Bush. Aller was stopped before he reached Washington and resumed taking prolixin. Earlier this year, a report by the Office for Protection From Research Risks at the National Institutes of Health criticized the UCLA experiment on the grounds that it "failed to comply with the requirements of Health and Human Services regulations" by not informing patients about the level of risk they were running.

UCLA officials claim that the report merely criticizes the university for not putting more patient information in writing rather than providing it verbally.

Aller's experience will be featured this week before a House subcommittee chaired by Ron Wyden, D-Ore. Although he signed a consent form, which stated "my condition may improve, worsen or remain unchanged," Aller will testify that he did not realize all the risks of the study.

An advanced copy of Aller's testimony reads: "I would never have consented to participate if the researchers had presented the real facts about what happened over the previous 10 years to those participating in this experiment." He quotes UCLA doctors who said that most patients withdrawn from medication had to go back on medication. "That means that everyone got worse," Aller added.

Aller, who has a lawsuit pending against UCLA, declined to be interviewed. A UCLA spokesman declined to comment on Aller's case specifically, citing patient confidentiality.

The Office of Protection From Research Risks, which is within the Department of Health and Human Services, is designed to safeguard patients. It oversees HHS-funded or sponsored clinical research projects involving human subjects. Such research is taking place at more than 1,000 medical institutions performing 15,000 to 20,000 studies a year, costing approximately $5 billion.

To deal with the workload, the Food and Drug Administration and the Office of Protection From Research Risks delegate most regulatory oversight to each medical center's Institutional Review Board. Critics charge that this patchwork policing requires reform. The mentally ill, the poor and the disabled are often preyed upon by these programs, according to experts.

"It's just not right for some of the most vulnerable Americans to be put at risk," Wyden told our associate Andrew Conie, while not specifically commenting on the UCLA study. "These are really sad, tragic examples of people being exploited — Americans without political clout."

When Greg Aller tried to hitch a ride to Washington in 1990, he planned to assassinate the president with a canister of poison gas.

Understand, it's a black hair thing

WASHINGTON — It's a black hair thing — you wouldn't understand.

At least I didn't when the calls started. One woman was in tears, crushed by the "terrible insult to black women" described by the newspaper article. Others angrily suggested that the piece's subject had "sold out."

Then again, some callers were miffed only that the article hadn't told them exactly how to reach the so-called "sellout" so they could do business with him.

The powerful reaction was "a shock and a surprise" to Barry Fletcher, the subject of an April 8 Washington Post story. Fletcher thought he knew how serious black folks are about hair — he has a national reputation for styling African American heads, including those of Tina Turner, Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun and, most recently, Halle Berry, who appears on the cover of the June Essence.

Still Fletcher, 38, owner of the Avant Garde salon in Seat Pleasant, Md., for 12 years, practiced his craft in relative obscurity — until the "Hair Olympics," a biennial world hairstyling competition that concluded in London last month.

When Fletcher won a coveted spot on the U.S. team in March, he was thrilled to be the first stylist to win the competition — and the right to represent his country in London — using a black model. He celebrated when the team's coach, Randy Rick, approved another black model, stunning Kember Kane, for the finals.

Then Rick, after visiting Europe to discern international judges' taste, nixed Kane. The coach, whom contest rules state has the final say, told Fletcher to use a model he'd chosen — a white one. Why the change?

"My understanding from working with African American hair is if you bleach it out, you get a lot of damage," Rick, who is white, said at the time. Because one contest phase required bleaching, the hair "has to have the right density. The model Barry showed me is just not going to work."

Despite Fletcher's insistence that Kane's healthy hair could withstand bleaching, Rick was adamant. That left Fletcher with a choice — use the white model or withdraw from the contest, on which he says he'd spent $12,000. After much angst, Fletcher opted to compete.

The resulting controversy, he says, forced the hair industry to confront for the first time its assumption "that (white people's) hair is superior" — an assumption bolstered, he admits, by so many black women, and some men "relaxing our hair, bleaching it, dyeing it light colors."

And it forced Fletcher, whose own hair is often relaxed, to confront certain issues. A non-political guy, he once produced a fashion publication on "African American Images" featuring models in Kente print clothes — not one of whom had natural hair. The mag's sponsor had no interest in such styles, he says. "I don't make my living doing natural hair, so it's not something I'm going to fight for."

This time, he paid a price. Though most people he knew applauded his going to London, one longtime customer dropped him; another rushed to the salon to confront him.

"She said she worked with youths who thought of me as a role model. ... And this role model just goes on and uses a white model — giving kids the message a white model is better."

"That's when it really hit me," he says. "Whether I liked it or not, I was either going to be seen as too black or not black enough. Because I really want to be accepted on an international level, I couldn't let my personal beliefs stop me from entering the mainstream."

So he worked his best magic with the white model — and saw his team finish 22nd, among 34 nations. "I would have been a better competitor if I had stayed with the texture I was familiar with," he says.

But today Fletcher sees the whole flap as valuable experience. "What happened in London (could) help me win in 1996 — with a black model."

So Fletcher's happy, I'm not, because I do get this black hair thing and the racism that fuels it, and see so much that's irksome:

That in 1994, an educated hair "expert" like Rick would still think all African American hair is the same — actually, it ranges from kinky to curly to straight. That though I too feel frustrated about being judged "too black" or "not black enough," I wish Fletcher had stood on principle — perhaps forcing Rick to do the right thing.

Some black women — and the men who influence them — have a ways to go, self-love-wise. While many straighten their hair as a fashion option, others are still ashamed of the lively texture of their natural locks — a shame that must be overcome if we are to be whole.

It's enough to make a sister tear out her (permed, braided, dreadlocked, natural, never simple) hair.

One woman was in tears, crushed by the "terrible insult to black women" described by the newspaper article.

Her attorney, Julius Williams, said he is looking in to the matter but declined further comment.

Police Chief Ralph Russell confirmed a complaint was filed against the policeman who investigated the incident. Officer Ronald Satallante, Russell declined to comment further until the complaint was resolved. Russell did comment he believed Jackson was urging Lowery to pursue the matter.

The accounts of the April 16 incident differ, although all agreed it occurred. Lowery said she was shopping in the store and setting aside items for purchase when she developed a need to use the restroom. Lowery said she approached a female clerk near the front of the store, told her she needed to use the restroom, then walked towards the rear of the store where the toilets were located.

Lowery said the clerk followed her to the rear of the shop and into the storeroom where the restrooms are located. As she reached the restroom door, Lowery said the woman told her she could not enter because the facility was for the sole use of employees.

"I told her please, I really need to go, if I don't, I'll go right here on the floor," said Lowery. "She said if I do, I'll clean it up."

Lowery said she continued towards the restroom and as she entered, a man pulled the door open and pulled her out by the arm and ordered her to leave. Lowery said she went next door to use the public restroom. Afterwards, she called the Sanford Police Department. When police arrived, Lowery said the officer wouldn't talk to her and instead, listened only to the story of the store employees.

Lowery said the police officer asked the employees if they wanted her arrested and they said "No, fix it so she can't come in here." She was issued a no trespass warning.

"I was very embarrassed by the whole thing," said Lowery. "At first, I was very upset, very upset. I left and I just started crying. I didn't think there was anything I could do, but then I decided, yes there is, so I called an attorney."

Lowery said the male employee injured her arm. "By night, I started having pains in my shoulder. I went to South Seminole (Community) Hospital and they said I had a sprain. They gave me an injection. It's still giving me some problems."

Kim Bongsun, a store clerk present that day, said Lowery was unreasonable.

"The restroom, it's only for employees," said Bongsun. "It's in the stockroom. We cannot let people use it because we have let people use it before and we had things missing from the stockroom. There is a door to the outside."

Bongsun said she pointed to an "employees ONLY" sign on the door to the storeroom and told her she couldn't use the facility. Bongsun said the woman became angry when told she couldn't use the restroom and threw a store wig she was wearing to the ground. "She was so upset."

"I tell her calm down. Winn-Dixie has bathrooms. We couldn't talk to her. She had her hands up like she was going to hit me. She was terrifying us. I tell her to calm down. I didn't even call the police, she did."

Bongsun said there were two female clerks on duty that day and she did not recall a male there.

Bongsun, who said she is of Korean descent, said she treats all customers with respect, white or black.

"Ninety percent are black customers," said Bongsun. "We cannot treat black customers any differently. We have to treat them the same. We treat the customers the way we have to do. She didn't want to understand. What she is trying to do, doesn't make sense to me."

The Rev. Willie Mae Lowery

This store is for them."

Store owner Oroge B. Dolsenhe of Jacksonville said he was disappointed to hear of the protest, but defended his employee's actions. Dolsenhe said any claim of racism was "absurd and crazy."

"If you go into a 7-Eleven or Circle K, which don't have public bathrooms, chances are, they'll deny you. Why should we be different? We can lose piece by piece in the display area, but in the stockroom, we lose case by case. We've had whole cases go out of the back. A lot of people use this race thing for anything that happens. That's simply not true. If anyone should be upset, it should be us."

them, and Glenn McCall said we could put them up in the front windows of Touchton's."

Bartholomew, who is also a member of the Lake Monroe Waterfront Master Plan Committee, said they will remain on display at that location for possibly several weeks.

"The students in this program are due back around the second of June," she commented, "and at this time we don't know if they will want these back, or will be adding more to them at that time."

Most of the drawings are in full color, and descriptions of special concepts are generally included, depending on the extent to which the architecture student made the presentation.

Some drawings show another street going out onto the water from the area of the Civic Center, and circling the present marina area to Memorial Park.

Others show where such items as waterfront shops or public facilities may be installed. Some propose the possibility of a bandshell to be returned to the waterfront area, as had existed in the 1950's.

Some plans have suggested the development of pedestrian-oriented amenities including a waterfront sidewalk or bike trail, additional overnight boat docks, and food, beverage or fishing supply shops.

Eventually, once additional input is made on the various drawing concepts, more drawings will be compiled depicting more advanced plans for development along the waterfront, and in the area between the waterfront and downtown historic district.

"They'd never done anything this big before," she said. "I had to keep reminding them to do everything big."

For their efforts, the students were rewarded with a day off from school and an EPCOT T-shirt.

Moore said that was more than adequate recompense for the budding artists.

"They had so much fun," she said. "They're still talking about it."

The 57 students were guided through the project by a Disney animator. The students learned about using bright colors and painting on a grand scale. Schools from across Central Florida were invited to paint pictures with a floral theme for the celebration.

"We didn't tell them what to draw or how to do it," Moore said. "We just let them go out there and be creative. It turned out beautifully."

The mural was painted on a wall surrounding a construction area at EPCOT. While the surface is merely temporary, it will remain in place for several months at least and will be seen by hundreds of thousands of visitors to the Disney park.

"I think the students learned so much from this and had such a good time that it was a great thing," she said.

Roinco manages to stay perfect

In other action, Manny Silvia's bases-loaded single in the bottom of the seventh scored Dave Daugherty with the game winning run, giving The Touchdown Pub a 5-4 decision over M.A. Erectors 5-4. Ken Rummel Chevrolet picked up a forfeit win over Desk-Mate.

Roinco/Florida Sportswear (5-0) now has a two-game edge over both The Touchdown Pub and Ken Rummel Chevrolet (tied for second at 3-2). They're followed by M.A. Erectors (2-3), Desk-Mate (1-3), and Stiffey's Affordables (0-4).

Eliminating alcohol is not the solution

DEAR MARY: We're finally getting smart about smoking and its effects on health. I think it's great and personally I hope that in my lifetime all tobacco products will be illegal in the United States. Now, why aren't we doing the same thing with alcohol? Everyone knows how much damage it does to society and how many lives are lost because of it, but there just doesn't seem to be the push to get rid of it that there is for tobacco. If alcoholism and its consequences as well as smoke-related illnesses were wiped out, I'll bet everybody could afford medical insurance again.

LET'S CLEAN UP OUR COUNTRY

DEAR LET'S CLEAN: Sorry, I'm not with you on this one. It's certainly true that tobacco causes smoking-related illnesses, but alcohol is no more the cause of alcoholism than sugar is the cause of diabetes. If it were true that alcohol causes alcoholism, nearly 100 million people in the U.S. would be alcoholics — the same number who drink at least occasionally. The fact is that there are probably about 10 million Americans who are addicted to alcohol to some degree. Most experts agree that the addiction is caused by a combination of mental, physical and environmental factors. People most often use alcohol as an escape from problems or an attempt to relieve intolerable tensions, as well as a way to feel less inhibited and more "social." Since we will never eradicate stress from our lives, people will certainly find ways to attempt to medicate the associated uncomfortable feelings. Add to this the fact that problems with addictions seem to "run in families," either through genetic predisposition and/or family patterning, and we come to the reluctant conclusion that while getting rid of tobacco will eliminate smoking-related illnesses, getting rid of alcohol would not have similar benefits.

Used car inspection suggested Lemon Law does not apply for all purchases

The following information I think will be of interest to many of you. Cars seem to be so expensive that many are deciding to buy used cars. As is the case with any product, the more you know, the smarter decision you can make which can save you money and heartaches. Thanks to the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services for sharing this information with me which in turn I am able to share with you.

Americans spend billions each year buying used cars. Only about half of all used cars sold by dealers come with a written warranty. The rest are sold "as is" — which means there is no warranty and if any mechanical problems turn up after the car is sold, the purchaser is responsible for the cost of repairs.

The Federal Trade Commission Used Car Rule can help consumers who are considering the purchase of a used vehicle, whether car, light-duty van or light-duty truck.

This rule requires all used car dealers to place a large sticker called a Buyers Guide in the window of each used vehicle offered for sale. The Buyers Guide should state: • Whether the vehicle comes with a warranty and, if so, what specific warranty protection the dealer will provide. • Whether the vehicle comes with no warranty — "as is."

CONSUMER FOCUS

The Buyers Guide must reflect any changes in warranty coverage that the consumer negotiated with the dealer. It also becomes part of the sales contract. If "As is — No Warranty" is checked on the Buyers Guide but the dealer has made oral promises to repair the vehicle under certain circumstances, the consumer should get those promises in writing. Be wary if a dealer won't write down promises. While oral contracts are supposed to be binding, they usually are very hard to enforce.

Some people mistakenly believe that Florida law gives them three days to change their mind after buying a vehicle. The so-called "cooling-off" period of 72 hours they probably are thinking of applies to other types of sales and solicitations. It does not apply to the purchase of motor vehicles.

Some people also mistakenly think Florida's Lemon Law applies to used motor vehicles. However, the Motor Vehicle Warranty Enforcement Act — the Lemon Law — applies only to new or "demo" cars, vans or trucks purchased or leased in Florida.

Before buying a used car, consumers should have the vehicle inspected by a reputable mechanic or one personally known to them. The following are some areas that should be checked: • Engine. Is there excessive oil leakage? Are the belts in good shape? Is the block or head cracked? Is the oil clean? • Transmission. Is the transmission fluid level where it should be? Is the drive shaft in good shape? • Electrical system. Does the battery leak? Do the alternator, generator, battery and starter work properly? • Brake system. Do the warning lights work? Check the hoses, drum and lining for soundness. • Steering system. Is there too much free play in the steering? Are the front wheels aligned properly? • Tires. Check the tread for wear. Be sure sizes match.

When buying a car take the time to read the entire contract, ask questions and get the answers in writing!

Rooster still crowded while in tight quarters

DEAR ABBY: While rummaging through some old papers, I found a Dear Abby column about crowing roosters that I clipped, intending to respond. Here it is, finally.

The writer claimed that if a rooster can't raise his head and stretch his neck, he cannot crow. On our small island, we kept roosters and chickens in the back yard of our parsonage. Because of other fowl in the neighborhood, crowing was no problem.

After my husband died, my son and I moved to an apartment with two chickens and a rooster. In our more closed environment, the rooster became a problem so at dusk, we put the rooster in a box and placed it in the closet. Promptly at 3 a.m., the rooster crowed! Naively thinking, as your reader did, that a rooster needs to raise his head and stretch his neck in order to crow, we modified the box so the rooster could not stretch his neck.

You guessed it! The next morning, the rooster crowed at 3 a.m. in the very low cardboard box in a dark closet.

We finally gave the rooster away, and we still do not know what can keep a rooster from crowing. Abby, does anybody really know?

AUWINA S. WEED, KEY WEST, FLA.

DEAR AUWINA: I am sure among my readers is an expert on fowl behavior (no pun intended), and when I hear from him or her, I'll let you know.

DEAR ABBY: My sister and I are very close. Recently I invited her to accompany me on a shopping trip to purchase a new desk.

After browsing in a few furniture stores, I saw a beautiful rolltop desk that I really liked and decided to purchase it.

My sister, who wasn't even in the market for a desk, suddenly decided that she wanted one too, so she ordered the identical desk.

ADVICE

ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

I was quite annoyed, but I didn't say anything. A few days later, the subject of the desk came up, and I calmly told her I was rather upset because she had ordered a desk exactly like mine! She became defensive and told me that I was being childish, since we live in different towns and have a different circle of friends.

Abby, please don't tell me that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.

MIFFED IN YPSILANTI, MICH.

DEAR MIFFED: Why are you "miffed"? Your sister lives in a different town — and even if she lived in the same town, why should her having a desk like yours minimize your pleasure in owning a handsome desk?

I am reminded of a letter I received from a woman who came to church on Easter Sunday and encountered not one, but two women wearing hats exactly like hers! One woman's nose was completely out of joint; she gasped and marched out of the church without looking left or right. The other women broke up laughing.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My son sent me literature on hydrogen peroxide. At first I began taking five drops, three times a day and I'm now up to 100 drops daily. A friend said she read one of your articles indicating that too much hydrogen in the body is hard on the kidneys. Am I exceeding the intake limit?

DEAR READER: No valid studies have shown that "hyperoxygenation therapy" (the use of oral hydrogen peroxide) is effective in treating or curing any serious disease. Hydrogen peroxide is a great antiseptic when applied to cuts and scrapes, but it should not be consumed by mouth. I don't believe that I ever wrote a column indicating that hydrogen is "hard on the kidneys." Hydrogen is one of the most ubiquitous elements in our environment. Sometimes it is associated with an acid condition in the body, but this is ordinarily neutralized by normal chemical reactions stemming from metabolism. I advise against taking hydrogen peroxide because, with all due respect to your son, it is a useless waste of time and money.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've suffered from varicose veins for years. About four years ago they began to hurt extensively. My doctor seems to ignore my vein problem. Hormone therapy has caused additional pain. What can I do?

DEAR READER: You may be a candidate for surgical removal of the varicose veins that are painful. Or you may choose to be treated with laser therapy or sclerotherapy, to shrink the veins.

Over time, varicose veins tend to enlarge. This may cause inflammation or pain. In addition, blood clots can form in the veins, causing further swelling and discomfort. When blood clots form in the deep veins, pieces can break off and be carried to the lungs, causing chest pain, shortness of breath and the risk of death.

Most people with varicose veins can successfully be treated with elevation and elastic support stockings. In my experience, the use of hormones does not affect this condition. However, er, when the varicose veins progress and cause symptoms, more aggressive therapy is warranted.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

We all know the story of David and Goliath, when little David used a stone thrown from a sling to down the giant Goliath. Today's deal reminds me of this. It is one of my favorite teaching deals, because inexperienced players have trouble believing that length before strength is valid. They would much prefer to bid an A-K-Q suit than a 6-5-4-3-2 suit.

After a predictable first round to the auction, many Souths would pass, refusing to bid a suit as weak as 5-4-3-2. But this South knew that any four-card suit is biddable, especially on the second round of the auction. West applied the pressure with a pre-emptive raise to three hearts. However, North had sufficient distribution to justify his three-spade bid. Now South showed true courage, raising himself to game. Note that four spades is the only game contract with any chance of success.

South won the heart lead with his ace and immediately played a trump. East won and led a top heart, forcing the dummy to ruff. But declarer happily played another round of spades. When they broke 3-2, the hand was under control. Declarer played on diamonds until an opponent ruffed in, losing only three trump tricks.

True, it is easier on the nerves to have longer and stronger trumps than these. But if you enjoy a three-card majority and the opponents trumps are dividing 3-2, which they will more than two-thirds of the time, the contract will usually be playable. The many dwarfs will overpower the few giants.

YOUR BIRTHDAY
May 28, 1994

In the year ahead you might place greater emphasis than ever before on your abilities to originate and lead. Instead of taking a back seat, you'll now feel impelled to direct events.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you're required to make a decision in a joint endeavor today which could affect others, be sure to consult with your counterparts. Chances for success are magnified when all are in accord. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Today it might be necessary to take a calculated risk in order to advance an endeavor that has been a bit sluggish lately. If you've studied the matter thoroughly, go for it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Something about which you've been ready to give up on can be concluded to your satisfaction in this cycle and produce the types of benefits you initially anticipated. Work on it today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) An assignment you've always found distasteful may reveal its real inner self to you today and you could discover it's not as bad as it originally seemed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Bargains for which you've been looking could be out there today. Yet it might take considerable investigating to uncover them, but if you'll persist, you'll be pleased.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) An appropriate opening might present itself today that'll enable you to get something serious off your mind you've been reluctant to broach, but anxious to discuss with a valued friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) This could be a profitable day for you, but it might require expert financial gymnastics to make it happen. If you use your ingenuity and resourcefulness, desirable results are indicated.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Someone you helped previously might request a loan from you again today. In this person's case, it may be better to say "no", because this individual needs to learn to be independent.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your innate kindness won't let you exclude a hard to get along with individual from an event today. His/her gratitude may undergo a surprising twist.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You can accomplish your purpose today by not retaliating in a similar fashion to harsh individuals. This might cause them to soften to a point where they are actually amenable.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You're the one who can get things back on track again in situations where good ideas have been mired down. Take it upon yourself to show others how to refine their raw concepts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Because you won't give up on individuals with whom you're closely associated, they, in turn, won't give up either. It's your persistency that inspires the transformations today. Copyright 1994 NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
