Houses Of Pleasant Thoughts

It has been said that the story of the human rate can be traced in the development of its architecture, and, of all forms, the domestic, though not so lofty or imposing as the public, tells the most vivid story of the aspirations and ideas of a people. The instinct to furnish one's own dwelling with those things considered comfortable and lovely in the period of one's existence is evident from the time when the savages adorned the entrances of their caves with the bones of their enemies, artistically arranged, to the present day luxury and beauty of the homes in Palm Beach.

Men give generously of thought, time, and what money they can to build the houses of their dreams, from the la- is so little room borer, who has saved his meager wages for years in order national government to buy a tiny cottage to the millionaire who owns a dozen houses scattered over America and Europe. They take great care that the lumber and other building materials selected are sound and strong, that the store rooms and closets in policy you practice to heep which their treasures are to be kept are spacious and safe, of jail. But integrity is detathat the rooms in which they are to live are well ventilated fined as sprightness of character, and full of sunlight and, in short, that the whole building and he t have found it, such as both as beautiful and comfortable as possible.

All this men do to build a happy place in which their lacking in a large persistage of bodies may live, but what care do they take to make them-selves mansions of pleasant thoughts, "houses built without hands for our souls to live in?"
