Nothing is more spectacular than fireworks seen flashing over water, night lights in flight. Regardless of what has been reported by several broadcast media, the fireworks at Fort Mellon Park in Sanford will be tonight — Wednesday — July 3, beginning at 9:20 p.m., and not on July 4th.

Holiday begins with a bang tonight

Officials stress safe celebrations

SANFORD — Tonight will be a star-studded evening in Sanford as the Independence Day celebrations get under way. In addition to the fireworks display beginning at approximately 9:20 at Fort Mellon Park along Sanford's lakefront, a boat parade is also scheduled.

The boat parade, featuring the "Blessing of the Fleet" will be held on the lakefront in the area of Veterans Memorial Park at the northern end of Park Avenue. Organizers say the boat parade is expected to get under way sometime between 7 and 7:30 p.m. this evening, with an undetermined number of boats expected to be involved.

Sanford police will be in the downtown area and at the parks this evening. "We'll have a considerable number of officers available tonight at the fireworks event," said Chief Ralph Russell.

Russell urged all citizens and visitors to exercise extreme caution over the weekend. "It's important people are concerned over such problems as heavy traffic, alcohol and other hazards which might be evident," he said.

In Lake Mary, police Chief Richard Heary said there won't be any holiday off for uniformed patrolmen. "With this holiday in the summer heat," he said, "comes the heavier than usual use of."

Sanford commission race heats up

SANFORD — Without an incumbent in the soon-to-be-vacated District 2 City Commission seat, the line to fill the seat has begun.

The Sanford City Clerk's office confirmed that Velma Williams and Virdell Pugh, both long-time Sanford residents, have officially filed to open campaign accounts and establish a campaign treasurer in their respective bids to fill the seat.

Qualifying season is not yet officially under way but candidates can begin the process of qualifying which runs from Sept. 4 through Oct. 29. The elections will be held December 3 with a runoff to be held Dec. 17 if none of the registered candidates garners at least 50 percent of the vote. There is no primary election.

Pugh and Williams are battling for the spot to be vacated by incumbent Bob Thomas who is planning to run for mayor. A spot on the Sanford City Commission is worth a $3,000 annual salary for a four-year term.

"I am running because I care about the community," Pugh said. "I can be a fair, consistent commissioner."

Lawyers' fees

Spaziano defense may settle for less than $100,000-plus for expenses

By The Associated Press

ORLANDO — Lawyers for Joseph "Crazy Joe" Spaziano wanted more than $100,000 for expenses and witness fees in their successful effort to win a new murder trial for their client.

After months of negotiations and hearings, the state is offering $62,345. And a lawyer for the firm Holland & Knight indicated Monday that further hearings may be unnecessary.

Among the contentious items were expenses for lodging, meals and transportation for two hypnosis experts.

In addition to professional fees, Richard Ofahe billed $121 for a night at Orlando Marriott World Center, $240 for car rental and parking and $97 for food. Dr. Barbara Stein billed for preparation time — including $300 an hour to photocopy materials — and $3,500, including expenses, for one day in court.

Both experts charged too much, Circuit Judge O.H. Eaton Jr. ruled.

Seminole County prosecutors offered the standard $21 per day for food, $49 per night for hotel rooms and $45 for transportation each way from the airport.

"Something tells me that this matter is going to settle," said defense attorney Stephen Hanlon, adding that he was confident another hearing will be unnecessary.

The judge granted Spaziano a new trial — which wiped out his death sentence — because the key witness in the 1976 proceedings said he lied. Spaziano had been convicted in the slaying of 18-year-old hospital clerk Laura Harberts.

Cops investigate second late-night restaurant robbery

By NICK PFEIFAU

Seminole County sheriff's deputies are investigating whether the armed robbery of the Steak and Shake Restaurant early Sunday may be related to a second armed robbery Monday at Kathy's Wings and Subs Shop, 2690 W. SR-434, in Longwood.

According to sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough, in both cases, two black men were involved, each wearing dark colored clothing, and one, in each robbery, was said to be armed with a handgun.

In Longwood, the robbery occurred shortly before 11:50 p.m. Monday. McDonough said the two suspects walked through an unlocked rear door, and forced two female employees to the floor.

He said one then held the employees at gunpoint while the other suspect took the money from the cash register.

The employees were not injured.

Bombing Survivor's Dad Dies

ORLANDO — Lt. Sean Cantrell returned home safely, unhurt in the Saudi terrorist bombing that took a dozen lives among his fellow airmen of the 33rd Fighter Wing at Eglin Air Force Base.

Cantrell's father, William L. Cantrell, 55, was among the relatives who greeted him with tears of happiness when Lt. Cantrell and other survivors flew into the Panhandle base last Friday. After spending the day with his son, the elder Cantrell suffered a heart attack and died in his sleep.

Cantrell was retired and living in Orlando but was visiting another son, Randy, at Mexico Beach when they were notified by the Air Force that Lt. Cantrell had survived the explosion at the base in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia.

"We were uncommonly close as a family," said a third brother, Rick Cantrell, who was in Orlando on Tuesday from his home in Tallahassee helping his mother and grandmother complete funeral arrangements.

"My father was greatly relieved that Sean was uninjured," said Rick, 34. "His kids were his life."

Brother Randy, 32, recalled that his father had told him on the trip to Eglin. "I'm glad we're going up here, because if we had to go over to Dover, it would just kill me."

Dover Air Force Base in Maryland is where the bodies of the 19 victims were shipped.

"It's just really a bittersweet kind of thing," added Rick. The elder Cantrell, who was medically discharged from the Air Force in the 1960s after an accident that injured his back, had coronary artery disease, an autopsy discovered. He was born in Monroe, Mich., near Detroit.

Besides the three sons, survivors include his wife, Sandra, and his 75-year-old mother, Orpha Kidd. He is to be buried with military honors at the National Cemetery in Buahnell.

Harden says he won't run again

CINCO BAYOU, Fla. — State Sen. Robert Harden, who has made headlines with personal problems ranging from bounced checks to a bout with depression, has decided not to seek re-election this fall.

"I leave and retire from the Florida Senate with my head held high," Harden, R-Port Walton Beach, said Monday. "I am proud of my service in the Florida Legislature over the last 10 years."

He said it was unfortunate his personal problems overshadowed his record as a lawmaker.

Harden, 35, was elected to the Senate in 1982 and represents parts of Bay, Escambia, Okaloosa, Santa Rosa and Walton counties. He served in the state House from 1980-82.

During the 1986 legislative session, Harden had his car repossessed from the Senate parking garage. His driver's license was suspended for failing to maintain auto insurance. He bounced three checks at a supermarket in Tallahassee.

At a news conference last August, he apologized for his erratic behavior and said he was being treated for depression.

Ex-captain on trial

ORLANDO — A former police captain charged with running a gambling ring in Brevard County was only taking and making bets for thrills, his attorney says.

"It's shameful, it's dishonest, but it's not a federal crime," said lawyer Donald West about Mike Blubaugh, 38, a 17-year veteran fired from the Cocoa Police Department after his indictment last fall.

But prosecutor Cynthia Colase said the case in U.S. District Court in Orlando is "about greed and power. Instead of protecting and serving, he was engaging in a business that broke the laws he was sworn to uphold."

Blubaugh was the alleged leader of a gambling enterprise that resulted in 30 arrests, including five members of the Cocoa Police Department.

Flame passes through capital Olympic torch to reach Sanford Monday

By JACKIE HALLIFAX
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — The last thing the capital needed Tuesday was anything that generated heat. But the arrival of the Olympic Torch lured thousands of people out of air conditioned homes and offices.

"I'll probably never be able to see it again," said Michelle McKnight, a 27-year-old office worker. "It's a part of history. It's been everywhere and you get to see it yourself."

Emmett Waltz, 68, said he guessed patriotic feelings prompted him to brave the heat. "This doesn't happen too often in a lifetime," he said.

Janelle Vinson, a bookkeeper, said she just wanted "to be part of it" in spite of the "unbearable" heat.

"This has to be something in order for me to give up my air-conditioned office," she said as she stood waiting with about 1,500 others for the torch to arrive at the Old Capitol.

The temperature was 95 degrees but humidity pushed the heat index to 102 degrees.

And it felt even hotter to Judy Bond, with the American Red Cross.

"135! That is a direct quote from the American Red Cross," Ms. Bond said from her station a few blocks away. "135!"

About a dozen people came to the Red Cross station to cool off, Ms. Bond said.

The torch, which entered Florida near the Panhandle hamlet of Campellton Monday, will leave the state next Tuesday.

After leaving Tallahassee, the torch caravan was scheduled to travel to Gainesville and then trek down down the west coast through St. Petersburg and Sarasota. It will then travel to Miami and then up the east coast, including a jog through Orlando and Sanford. The torch will leave Florida, sailing from downtown Jacksonville to Savannah.

In all, nearly 1,000 Floridians will carry the torch.

"It was beyond belief," a sweaty Charles Guyton said as he delivered the torch to the steps of the Old Capitol where Walter McCoy was waiting.

At a glance

The Olympic Torch crossed into Florida on Monday near the Florida Panhandle community of Campellton, then traveled to Panama City where it spent the first night. On Tuesday, the torch went through Tallahassee on its way to Gainesville.

- The rest of the Florida itinerary:
- July 3, Gainesville to Tampa and St. Petersburg.
 - July 4, St. Petersburg to Bradenton, Sarasota and Miami.
 - July 5, Miami to Miami Beach, Fort Lauderdale, Deerfield Beach, Dairay Beach, Boynton Beach and West Palm Beach.
 - July 6, West Palm Beach to North Palm Beach, Jupiter, Fort St. Lucie, Fort Pierce, Vero Beach and Melbourne.
 - July 7, Melbourne to Cape Canaveral and Orlando.
 - July 8, Orlando through Sanford to Daytona Beach and St. Augustine.
 - July 9, St. Augustine to Jacksonville and Savannah, Ga.

Guyton, a 43-year-old attorney, was nominated to be a torch-carrier because of the time he volunteers to United Way. McCoy, 36, won a gold medal in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles as a part of the 4 by 400 meter relay.

"Butterflies," McCoy told reporters as he waited for his turn. "I feel just like I did when I was competing."

McCoy had been training to go the Atlanta games but a car accident last summer put an end to his comeback dream. But he said carrying the torch was a great thrill.

"I plan to enjoy it," he said.

McCoy carried the torch a few blocks to a stage where music and videos provided a short break. An estimated 5,000 people watched as the torch was handed on to Marcie Davis, who carried it in her wheelchair with her dog, Ramona, at her side.

Ms. Davis, 30, runs the victim advocacy program in the attorney general's office and volunteers with the city, Canine Companions for Independence and Telephone Counseling and Referral Service.

"This is very exciting," Ms. Davis said. "This is like being a movie star."

Leaders rally over late-term abortions

By PAY LINDNER
Associated Press Writer

TAMPA, Fla. — Roman Catholic leaders rallied support across Florida and the nation this weekend in a campaign to convince Congress to override President Clinton's veto of a bill to outlaw partial-birth abortions.

They handed out postcards to mail out to senators and representatives calling for abolition of the controversial practice.

At Our Lady of the Rosary in Land O'Lakes, volunteers distributed 1,200 cards Sunday and ran out.

"We could have used more cards," said Judy McCray, an organizer of the campaign.

"People were ready and wanted to sign up. There was no pressure put on them. We just ran out of cards."

In West Palm Beach, organizer Don Kasimir said the feedback surprised him.

"The enthusiasm was gratifying," he said. "And the best part was that the priests were promoting this from the pulpit."

In Miami, the archbishop took out ads in local Sunday newspapers saying a lone letter won't budge a legislator, but 5 million should.

The archdiocese also flooded South Florida with cable TV spots and took to area radio shows promoting the same message.

In West Palm Beach, five Protestant churches joined the grassroots "Project Life Postcard Campaign 1998," and handed out cards for people to sign, urging their two U.S. senators and U.S. representative to override the president's veto of legislation to ban late-term abortions.

In Denver, the movement was boosted by an all-night "Celebration of Life" prayer vigil on Friday and Saturday. In Portland, Ore., a meeting of 250 bishops called for legislators to reverse the president.

Clinton's April 10 veto of a measure to make the practice illegal drew sharp criticism from

Mexican vegetables not hurting U.S. farmers, trade panel says

By MARTIN CRUTCHER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — In a setback for American farmers, the U.S. International Trade Commission ruled that a surge in Mexican imports was not causing undue harm to producers of tomatoes and bell peppers.

U.S. Trade Representative Charlene Barshefsky and Commerce Secretary Mickey Kantor said in a joint statement they were "very disappointed" with the decision.

The 4-1 vote Tuesday by the commission ends the possibility of relief on the basis that the American industry is being hurt by the increased imports. However, a separate case involving allegations that Mexican tomatoes are being "dumped" in the United States at unfairly low prices is still being reviewed by the U.S. government.

"We have serious concerns," Barshefsky and Kantor said of the decision. "We recognize the continuing problems faced by U.S. tomato and bell pepper growers. We have worked closely with the agricultural industry on market-opening initiatives and other actions and will continue to pursue solutions."

They said they have pushed to increase domestic and foreign sales, including in Japan, for Florida tomatoes and other winter produce. They also said they supported Senate legislation that would provide safeguard mechanisms for producers of perishable agricultural goods.

Mexico's Agriculture Secretariat issued a statement praising the U.S. ruling as an economic victory for both countries, in part because it upheld the principles of the North American Free Trade Agreement, that is, phasing out trade barriers among the United States, Mexico and Canada.

The Mexican government said that had the ruling gone against Mexican growers, they "would have felt grave losses, both economically and in the generation of jobs in vegetable farming."

The import surge case was filed earlier this year by the Florida Department of Agriculture and groups representing Florida vegetable growers.

U.S. farmers were seeking relief from a surge in imports of winter tomatoes and bell peppers, which they say threatened the survival of the Florida vegetable industry.

"The State of Florida and our growers of tomatoes and bell peppers are shocked and cannot understand how the overwhelming evidence of serious injury they have felt and the dramatic import increases from Mexico and other countries were not clearly recognized by the Commission," said Florida Agriculture Commissioner Bob Crawford.

California big winner in race to build futuristic spaceship

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Business Writer

LOS ANGELES — NASA's next generation of spaceship looks like a futuristic flying arrowhead and is designed to be a cheaper, more reliable craft that could turn more people into astronauts and bring big bucks to Southern California.

Lockheed Martin Corp.'s $600 million X-33 project means 2,000 new jobs to a region hit hard by defense cuts earlier in the decade. And if it leads to a fleet of spacehips, it could create tens of thousands of new jobs.

"That's the real hope and there's big dollars for Lockheed Martin if they're successful," said Jon Kutler, an aerospace analyst for Quarterdeck Investment Partners. "But like everything else, technological hurdles get in the way, so don't start counting the money yet."

Indeed, the design for the spaceship called VentureStar was only unveiled Tuesday. It's still a decade away from fulfilling its full promise of hauling government and private payloads into space at a tenth of the cost of space shuttle.

By 2006 or 2007, NASA hopes to phase out its fleet of shuttles and eventually have three of the sleek, new triangular ships.

Like the shuttle, the new ship will take off vertically and land horizontally like an airplane.

Unlike the shuttle, it flies without dropping off disposable parts such as the fuel tanks or booster rockets. It also would feature new and more efficient engines, lighter fuel tanks and a more durable thermal insulation.

And instead of seven or eight shuttle flights a year, the new craft is capable of flying every few days if necessary, 40 to 50 times a year.

The objective, NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin said, is to open the space frontier "not just to special NASA astronauts."

"Now we fly dozens of astronauts a year," he said. "This vehicle should allow hundreds a year to fly, and vehicles that come beyond it to allow thousands of people to fly."

NASA plans to be a major user of this rocket ship, but the design is also being marketed to potential users would be the Defense Department and commercial satellite makers.

By flying at $1,000 per pound of payload instead of $10,000 per pound, NASA hopes to increase its current 30 percent share of the world launch market.

The new craft is being built under a program intended to move much of the initiative for developing high-risk technologies out of NASA's hands and into those of private industry.

Bethesda, Md.-based Lockheed Martin, which won out over competing proposals from McDonnell Douglas and Rockwell International, will conduct a dozen or so unmanned, suborbital test flights in Southern California in 1999, with its single X-33 vehicle, which at 67 feet long and 66 feet wide at the tail will be half the size of the eventual spaceship.

Then it will be up to Lockheed Martin and investors to determine whether it's economically feasible to proceed with the larger operational RLV, or reusable launch vehicle. In addition to NASA's $600 million, the company is investing $220 million of its own money in the X-33.

Most of the work will be performed at Lockheed Martin's legendary "Skunk Works" plant, where the stealth fighter and U-2 spy plane were developed. Testing probably will be performed at Edwards Air Force Base, near Palmdale, Calif.

Lockheed Martin officials attributed their success to the merger last year of Lockheed Corp. and Martin Marietta. The union gave Martin Marietta's space systems experts access to the ingenuity of "Skunk Works" engineers.

"We set sail for the future," Vice President Al Gore said at Tuesday's unveiling outside NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena.

Yeltsin's election eve actions raise questions

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — Just when Americans thought Boris Yeltsin looked like a sure winner in the Russian presidential runoff, he pulled a disappearing act. His brief reappearance on television did little to restore confidence.

Then on Tuesday, the day before the voting, came word from Moscow that Yeltsin was giving unprecedented power to his former rival and new security chief, Alexander Lebed. One might even say presidential power over a broad range of security and domestic concerns.

Thus does Russia's experiment in democracy grow curiously and curiously.

The Russian president has a documented fondness for vodka and a history of heart trouble. In the past he has periodically dropped out of sight. He did it again over the weekend during the days before voters were to choose between him and Genady Zyuganov, leader of the Communist Party.

"This disappearance is a very strange thing," said Robert Gates, who was CIA director when Yeltsin came to power during the Bush administration. "Either he's not in good health or he's been on a binge."

Yeltsin aides have insisted he had laryngitis.

When he reappeared Monday on television, Yeltsin looked uncomfortable and tired as he asked for support for "the new Russia."

Win or lose, Yeltsin's immediate past prompted speculation about his future.

"It's crucial to start looking beyond Yeltsin," said Dmitri Simes, president of the Nixon Center for Peace and Freedom. "Yeltsin is much weaker both physically and politically, particularly physically."

"Yeltsin clearly is not in good health, I think it would be very surprising if he were to survive a second term," said Gates.

Lebed, who received 11 million votes in the first round for a strong third-place finish, surprised many people when he declared the day before the runoff that he needs more power.

The 46-year-old former general issued a 22-page policy program which he said would boost the state's role in the economy and reshape reform policies to benefit the defense and agriculture industries.

"The main threat to national security is the lack of an economic strategy and rational state regulation of the economy," he said. Lebed said Yeltsin had agreed to give him the authority he needs.

If true, that would be bad news for Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin, who would be a prime contender for power if Yeltsin is re-elected but can't complete his four-year term.

"It is quite clear there is considerable disarray in the Kremlin, a lot of powerful players and basically Russia is not a country which is ruled by laws," said Simes.

Assessing the relationship between Yeltsin and Lebed, Simes said, "I don't think these two personalities can exist very happily together over a long period of time."

Leon Aron, a Russian emigre who has written extensively about political developments in his former country, pointed out that under the Russian constitution, if the presidency becomes vacant, the prime minister would become acting president with new elections held within three months.

In that case, he said, "Lebed will be a strong contender, but don't exclude Chernomyrdin. Generally, the pro democracy, pro reform supporters view Lebed with considerable suspicion."

"I think, Lebed looms large in the equation," said Edward Djerejian, director of the James A. Baker III Institute for Public Policy at Rice University. "He is positioning himself as a presidential successor candidate and I think he's a man to watch."

Of course, a tidy transition during a second Yeltsin term presumed there would be a second term.

Simes was the most bullish on the Russian president's prospects, but only because he views the system as heavily weighted in Yeltsin's favor. He pointed out that the Russian television networks rarely ran stories critical of the president or favorable to his opponent.

"If the standards of this election were applied in the United States, George Bush would still be president," said Simes.

Testing the political waters

There's nothing wrong with feeling the temperature of the water before you jump into the lake. In fact, it's a smart approach.

The same holds true in our local election situation. People are announcing or indicating their candidacy for a number of positions at this time, even though the first county primary isn't until September, and the Sanford city election isn't until December.

Some people tell us they want to run for office. Others are quick to say that friends, neighbors or organizations are urging them to run. Again, either way, we believe this is good for our governments.

Certainly, a person who cannot obtain support cannot hope to become elected. In fact, even with the filing of petitions which exempts some candidates from paying qualifying fees, a political campaign is costly. There is printing, sign making, sign placement, and many other expenses a person must finance.

We will admit, there have been cases in the past when people have paid qualifying fees and spent tens of thousands of dollars on a campaign for which the office they seek pays only a few thousand dollars. It makes us wonder if there are ulterior motives. But so far, we don't have reason to believe this is the case in any of our local elections this year.

What we suggest, for people considering a run for political office, is to begin putting their toes in the water as soon as possible. Let the Sanford Herald know of your intentions, and we will, in turn, let our readers know that you have this intention.

From that point, you may (or may not) hear of growing support in your drive. Then you will be able to make a logical decision on whether or not to actually become a qualified candidate when qualification time begins.

We have a large number of people who would do us all well serving in a political position. Many could do a wonderful job of leading our city and county toward continued progress for the next two to four years, or longer.

What we, the people must do, is support those we feel would be our best choice. We will be helping ourselves, our businesses, our homes and neighborhoods, and our entire community.

Good folks, step forward and be counted. Citizens are looking for that "Mister (or Miss or Mrs.) Right" to lead us forward as a part of our government structure.

At least give it a try. You can always drop out if you find the water is too cold or too hot to jump in.

Cheers for separation of powers

Don Edwards, D-Calif., now retired, was for many years the congressman from the Constitution. He guarded the Bill of Rights as if he had been given a direct commission from James Madison. In 1980, the House overwhelmingly passed an initial version of the Agents Identification Act - criminalizing the identification of any covert CIA agents even if they had already been unmistakably identified in the press. The printing - in a newspaper or book - of a name previously published in, say, the New York Times, would be prosecuted.

Edwards opposed the measure as a violation of the First Amendment. He told me that after the vote, he looked around the House and wondered at all the lawyers there who had voted for the legislation: "Some were graduates of Harvard and Yale law schools, and several had law degrees from Stanford, where I had gone. It was dismaying to see these lawyers vote against the Constitution."

Lawyers also abounded in the majority that passed the Communications Decency Act - setting up censors in cyberspace - which a three-judge Federal District Court panel in Philadelphia recently declared unconstitutional.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., one of only 16 senators who opposed limiting the Internet to communications suitable only for children, told the Washington Post that his colleagues had "trampled the Constitution just to make political points at home." He added that although some knew the act was unconstitutional, they had voted for it anyway, and "a couple already have told me they were relieved that the courts [did the right thing]."

The most insistent and articulate senator arguing against the Communications Decency Act was Russ Feingold, D-Wis. Now that it has been found unconstitutional, he is urging the Senate Judiciary Committee to move toward its repeal.

Edwards opposed the measure as a violation of the First Amendment.

"Every member of Congress," Feingold told the committee, "makes a fundamental pledge to uphold the Constitution." That includes, he said, the First Amendment, and "in passing the Communications Decency Act, Congress clearly violated that pledge to the American people."

The president, of course, took the same oath. Can you imagine Bill Clinton - during a campaign speech - urging that Congress repeal this attack on the people's First Amendment rights?

At first, there were two lawsuits, eventually combined, aimed at the Communications Decency Act. The American Civil Liberties Union headed one coalition and the other was put together by the Center for Democracy and Technology and the American Library Association.

It was the center - whose executive director is Jerry Berman, a veteran free-speech commando - that wired the federal courtroom in Philadelphia, with the judges' permission.

The First Amendment lawyers knew it was crucial that the panel understand there are fundamental differences between the Internet and television. Most members of Congress didn't know that because most members of Congress - unlike Leahy and Feingold - had little or no hands-on knowledge of cyberspace.

BEN WATTENBERG

No heroes in Aldrich yarn

I've got problems with most everyone involved in the summertime flap about "Unlimited Access," the book by former FBI agent Gary Aldrich that trashes and laashes the Clinton White House from top to bottom.

One obvious problem with Aldrich is that he doesn't have proper sources for his most startling passages. Consider the charge that President Clinton regularly snuck out of the White House to go trying. Unless Aldrich comes up with something more, he has only put wheels on rumors. That's a no-no, even though it would fit a pattern of earlier behavior by Clinton described by five sworn law enforcement officials in Arkansas and denied by Clinton.

Moreover, Aldrich has an addled view regarding the function of FBI investigations of potential White House staff members. Aldrich doesn't like the idea that former drug users were on the Clinton staff, or that they dressed sloppily, or paid no respect to FBI investigators, or that they were rude to the solid men and women who made up the permanent career staff of the White House. He wants the incoming political staff to have "character" - that is, as he and/or the FBI discern character.

Too bad, Aldrich knows the rules. He writes: "... The image that the FBI 'passed' or 'cleared' anybody at the White House was an illusion, a neat trick created by President Johnson and his lawyers.... The FBI just gathered the facts.... If the White House Counsel's office wanted to ignore problems of character, they could, and the FBI couldn't do a thing about it.... It just took people like the Clintons to exploit it (the clearance procedure)."

But that's no "neat trick." It's not the FBI's job to tell the president of the United States who he can hire. Aldrich was not elected by anyone, Clinton was.

Which leads us to the White House and Clinton. An axiom of Washington life is that "personnel is policy." It is just because the hiring responsibility rests with the president that he can be held accountable for whom he hires. If a Clinton-appointed White House staffer speaks to a U.S. Army general that "I don't speak to people in uniform" - a documented incident - then the accountability for such an attitude goes straight to the man who was elected by the voters - Clinton.

If the staff stifled the FBI, possibly because they didn't want to talk about their earlier drug use, or because they hadn't paid their bills, or avoided taxes, or dressed like slobs, or held off-the-wall left-wing views - blame Clinton, that is, if you think such behavior is blame-worthy. And if the next Republican president hires young skinheads wearing jackboots - blame that Republican president.

You may also blame the combat-crazed, take-no-prisoners Clinton, staff (and their boss) for the nature of their rebuttal of Aldrich. Trying to push television talk shows not to interview Aldrich? Really? That's the arrogant mentality that could square with a White House staff that would request 770 separate FBI files, most of them about previous White House staffers. (Did they perhaps do that to get so-a-your-old-man evidence in the event that their own people were attacked for drug use?) Charging that Aldrich is part of a Dole-driven conspiracy is laughable, and typically Clintonian.

About the press, I can do without some of the sanctimony. Tak-tak, tut-tut, Aldrich used anonymous sources. It's what newspapers do all the time. And whatever happened to media canonization of "whistle-blowers"? Aldrich calls himself one, and he is. Most of his book is based on things he saw and heard at an important place at an important time. Accordingly, it is in the realm of the publishable, particularly when one understands that book publishers distribute the irregular idiosyncratic works of autonomous authors, and are not like newspapers, which regularly publish a collection of material by staff writers. (Disclosure: Aldrich's publisher - Regnery - will soon be publishing the paperback version of my idiosyncratic book.)

And the FBI? Why did they allow the White House to dally so long before checking out personnel? Were they "victimized" in this matter just as they claim they were in the matter of the 770 confidential personnel files? By whom?

It's a good story, with no heroes.

One obvious problem with Aldrich is that he doesn't have proper sources for his most startling passages.

SF takes bad ideas with good

In keeping with the tenor of the times, the Spear Foundation is undergoing a painful downsizing.

This is not an easy task, given the size of our little think tank to begin with. But, in the interest of maintaining product quality, we will do what we must.

For example, we used to have a GIT (Good Ideas Team) and a DINGBAT (Dumb Ideas and Notions and Grievous Bunkum Auditing Team). Now we will try to combine them into a single idea-assessment group. We're not sure what to call it yet, but we're using the temporary designation SFIAT (Spear Foundation Idea Assessment Team). I guess it would be pronounced like what you say when you see an Italian car: "It's a Fiat... S'Fiat... SFIAT... Oh, well, suggestions are welcomed.

Anyway, as sort of a trial run, here is an interim SFIAT report on some current concepts, notions and trends:

1. The printed page is a dinosaur. A lot of people have been saying this for a while now. A recent example from fellow columnist Charles Krauthammer: "The Gutenberg age is going to end with the 20th century. First to go will be the newspaper. Then the magazine. Then the book.... They will all find a new life on the screen, on disk and online."

BAD IDEA. I cannot be persuaded that text is real if it is not printed on some tactile surface. Words cannot exist in the form of magnetic particles. Things that are just out there, floating in the ether somewhere, cannot possibly be words. When there are no newspapers, magazines and books that can be held and felt, this world will be a dreary place indeed.

2. Jet-Bikes should be banned. A citizen's group on San Juan Island, Washington, recently managed to pull this off. The so-called "wet-bikes" were zipping around the islands of San Juan County in increasing numbers, chasing away birds and seals and disturbing the peace of the general population.

AN ABSOLUTELY DYNAMITE IDEA. The Personal Watercraft Industry Association is livid, but I say ban these noisy, smelly, hateful contraptions for now and for always and forevermore. What in the name of Neptune gives spoiled brats the notion that they have the right to destroy the peace of everyone? And while we're at it, let's ban those stupid cigarette boats that sound like ascending rockets. And unmuffled motorcycles. And leaf blowers. Damn them all and ban them all.

3. Beach volleyball is worthy of Olympic status. Yes, they are going to be competing in this event this summer in Atlanta. The fact that the city is 250 miles from the nearest beach is irrelevant. They will dump some sand on the ground and put up a net, and four-person teams of surfer boys and girls with epidemics the color of toast will put on their little spandex bathing suits, and they will swat a ball back and forth.

A SO-WHAT IDEA. If they can sled down synthetic chutes in Lillehammer, who cares if they roll-in man-made sand pits in Atlanta? I do think it is way past time, however, that the Olympic authorities consider pinball an official sport. And Cosmic Bowling, with its telegenic strobe lights and phosphorescent balls. And certainly wakeboarding. I mean, there really is nothing in the Olympics for green-haired dudes with rings in every visible appendage, you know?

The Spear Foundation is undergoing a painful downsizing.

leaders of two of the country's largest religions — the Catholics and the Southern Baptists. From the Vatican, the Pope called the veto shameful and threw his support to override efforts.

"It is a barbaric procedure," said Dr. Denis Cavanagh, professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of South Florida at Tampa and senior examiner for the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

In partial-birth abortions, a doctor uses forceps to pull both legs of an intact fetus down into the birth canal. The body is delivered, except for the skull, which is opened and collapsed so the fetus can be taken out of the womb.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington, D.C., provided parishes with leaflets to explain the procedure. Bishops sent letters to congregations and pastors took to pulpits.

The movement grew out of unparalleled action by all eight U.S. cardinals — the highest ranking leaders of the Catholic church in America — and the president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in defense of human life.

The presidential veto was "beyond comprehension," the cardinals wrote in a sternly worded letter April 16 to Clinton. They called the procedure a "heinous act to kill a tiny infant just seconds from taking his or her first breath outside the womb."

They rejected the president's statement that he had no choice but to veto the bill, insisting the choice was his and his alone. Congress had made its choice and said no to partial-birth abortions.

Many pro-life advocates condemned the practice as infanticide.

While a majority of abortions are done in the early weeks of a woman's pregnancy, birth defects, pregnancy complications or other reasons can lead a woman to seek an abortion in later months.

The size of the fetus at that time makes abortion more difficult.

Pro-choice advocates argue the controversy over late-term abortions is political and aimed at throwing the issue of women's choice off track.

"They're going to try to keep the issue of the right to choose confined to issues like late-term abortions rather than on the central question: Who should make the decisions at any stage of pregnancy?" Kate Michelman, director of the National Abortion Rights Action League has said.

Actually, late-term abortion poses dangers to women from a possible ruptured uterus or separated placenta, both of which could trigger bleeding, said Cavanagh who treated women following complications from abortions while he was at the University of Miami 30 years ago.

The 1,400-member American Association of Pro Life Obstetricians and Gynecologists recently issued a policy statement saying partial-birth abortion could never be justified for a mother's welfare "any more than plunging a knife through the fetal heart could ever be justified for her well being."

In the Southern Baptist Convention, the current and all past presidents denounced Clinton's action in a letter earlier this month, saying the procedure "cannot be morally justified."

Poland museum has emotional moments for Hillary R. Clinton

By ROSE FOUNNER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — Standing in a red-bricked barracks at Auschwitz, Hillary Rodham Clinton stared grim-faced at mounds and mounds of human hair. "What did they use it for?" she asked.

The tour guide, museum curator Teresa Swiebocka, pointed across the room to a second exhibit, where several dark scraps of cloth were displayed. A look of horror flashed across the first lady's face; she suddenly understood.

"This material is made of hair?" Mrs. Clinton asked, her voice rising with every word.

The curator slowly nodded. It was perhaps the most emotional moment of a gut-wrenching tour Tuesday of Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camps, which today are stark monuments to the World War II Holocaust.

Mrs. Clinton called the Holocaust "cold, rational evil" and denounced people who doubt that Adolf Hitler's Nazi regime slaughtered 6 million Jews.

For two hours, the first lady walked past mounds of artificial limbs, suitcases and clothing, past picture after picture of naked, dying children and terror-stricken women.

At Room No. 20 of the "Block of Death," down a dim, damp basement hallway filled with cells, Mrs. Clinton peered into a tiny room that Nazis once used to suffocate 19 Jews. She looked silently at a large gouge in the wooden door, a remnant of the prisoners' frantic final search for air.

She saw the firing squad wall, the incinerator, the gas chamber where Nazi doctors once stood, waving prisoners one way to the deadly work camp, the other way to the gas chamber.

Though visibly shaken by the tour, Mrs. Clinton said she couldn't express her feelings. "I just can't," she said. "It's overwhelming."

Mrs. Clinton began her day at Wawel Cathedral in Krakow.

Poland, the home parish of Pope John Paul II. After a long tour, she spoke to a group of intellectuals that included writer Czeslaw Milosz, a Nobel Prize winner and University of California professor who said he had recently become a U.S. citizen.

"Now I have to be really nice," she joked.

A crowd of several hundred welcomed her to an outdoor market, where she praised Poland's democratic government. Though a huge majority of the audience was supportive, a group of Catholic college students from the United States yelled, "Dole, '98! Dole '98! Dole '98!" as she shook hands along the storefronts.

Mrs. Clinton made a beeline for the group's instigator and reached for his hand. The young man put out his hand, then pulled it back before the first lady could grab it. He smiled as the first lady smoothly turned to an elderly Polish woman and shook her hand.

The first lady was meeting with Polish leaders today before heading to the Czech Republic.

At the Longwood restaurant Monday, McDonough said the robbers were both black males, wearing dark clothing, and one reportedly had a chrome, semi-automatic handgun.

In the Lake Mary restaurant robbery Sunday, McDonough said both were black males, approximately 25 years of age, with one about five feet, eight inches tall and weighing approximately 155 pounds. The other was about six feet tall and weighed approximately 175 pounds.

She came to Sanford 14 years ago and quickly claimed it as her home.

"When I came to Sanford I observed it was a family city," Pugh said. "It has lived up to that reputation. The highest tribute you can give to a city is when someone comes there and stays."

Florida state laws require each candidate to open a campaign account and designate a depository as part of the qualifying process. surges, a second complaint involving allegations that Mexican tomatoes are being sold in the United States at below-market prices, or dumped, is still under way.

In that case, the International Trade Commission issued a preliminary ruling on May 16 that the U.S. industry was being materially harmed by the Mexican imports. The criteria for judging harm in an unfair dumping case are lower than in a case involving import surges.

The dumping case is now before the Commerce Department, which must make a preliminary ruling by Sept. 9. If it judges that Mexican tomatoes are being sold at unfair prices, the agency has the power to set dumping duties — border taxes on tomatoes and bell peppers that would raise the U.S. price to a level considered fair to American farmers.

The Mexican government announced on Monday that it had petitioned the World Trade Organization in Geneva to review the allegations raised in the dumping case, which was filed April 1 by Crawford and groups representing tomato growers in Florida, California, Georgia, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

The Fresh Produce Association of the Americas, a group representing importers of Mexican crops, hailed Tuesday's ruling in the surge case.

"We are gratified that common sense, solid economics and good judgment prevailed," said James Cathey, the group's chairman. "The ... remedy proposed by the Florida growers for their specific benefit was much too sweeping, broad and expensive."

WASHINGTON — Before Craig Livingstone got tangled in the FBI background files affair, he wanted to direct the office that protects the presidential briefcase containing the nation's missile launch codes, documents show.

Livingstone wrote a letter in May 1994 to senior presidential adviser George Stephanopoulos trumpeting his qualifications for the job of director of the White House military office.

"The job, by nature, should have someone with sound political skills — particularly as we approach N.H.," Livingstone wrote, referring to the 1996 New Hampshire primary. The handwritten letter was obtained by The Associated Press.

The White House military office is staffed by senior military officers, and its responsibilities include protecting the president known as the "bullet," which contains the codes the president must use to launch the nation's nuclear arsenal.

Stephanopoulos apparently didn't take the request seriously. When his secretary asked what should be done about Livingstone's letter, Stephanopoulos wrote back: "Nothing."

Other documents shed light on how Livingstone came to head the White House personnel security office, which oversees the gathering of background materials for granting White House employees security clearances.

Livingstone resigned from the job last week after revelations that his office improperly gathered FBI background files on hundreds of Reagan and Bush administration employees, including several prominent Republicans.

In his resume, Livingstone boasted that his qualifications for the job included helping to arrange the costumed chickens and Pinocchio that taunted President Bush in the 1992 campaign.

Rep. William Clinger, R-Pa., chairman of the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee, divulged in a letter to President Clinton on Tuesday that Livingstone cited as a qualification in his resume that he was a "senior consultant to counter-event operations" for the 1992 Clinton campaign.

"Not only do I question the need for such a dirty trick operation in a presidential campaign, I question what in Mr. Livingstone's background qualified him for the highly sensitive position of director of White House security," Clinger wrote.

Republicans suggested Livingstone's background left open the possibility that the FBI files could have been misused. There has been no evidence of misuse so far, and Livingstone insisted there was none.

Livingstone did not return a telephone call to his home

Tuesday. His lawyer also did not respond to a call to his office.

Among the other revelations Tuesday was that Livingstone was first recommended for a job inside the Clinton White House by former Clinton campaign chief of staff Eli J. Segal.

Segal said that in December 1992 he "agreed to sponsor" Livingstone, but only for a White House advance job.

Presidential aides have been vague about who ultimately hired Livingstone, suggesting in congressional testimony that the late deputy White House counsel Vincent Foster may have suggested it and another presidential lawyer, William Kennedy, approved it.

Republicans also questioned when Livingstone got his top secret security clearance, suggesting it may have been as late as December 1994.

alcohol, which leads to an increase in domestic disputes and alcohol-related traffic injuries.

As with other area law enforcement officers, Beary said his officers will be working very hard this weekend to keep the public and the highways as safe as possible.

Countywide, Sheriff Don Ealinger said he will be increasing patrols, especially in the area of traffic enforcement. "This is one of the most deadly weekends of the year," he said, "and it's going to take an all out effort to keep accidents and traffic problems to a minimum."

With the possible exception of backyard barbecues, fireworks and boating are expected to be the focal point of this four-day Independence Day holiday period. Considering that, officials are issuing words of caution regarding the need for extra safety.

Regarding fireworks, State Treasurer, Insurance Commissioner and Fire Marshal Bill Nelson said, on the average, firecrackers, sparklers and other fireworks cause 12,000 injuries nationwide each year.

"As state fire marshal," he said, "I'm worried that random fireworks displays and other antics this Fourth of July will bring with them another series of accidents, injuries and even deaths."

He added that over one-third of the fireworks-related injuries in 1994 were suffered by children. There were two deaths attributed to fireworks that year as well. One man died in Polk County when a backyard rocket exploded and the other, a Broward County man, was killed when a mortar at a public fireworks display blew up. Nelson stressed that under the

Pain may be eliminated for millions

(SPECIAL) — A drug that is exciting researchers in the treatment of pain has been formulated into a new product known as "Arthur M..." and is being called a "Medical Miracle" by some, in the treatment of debilitating conditions such as arthritis, bursitis, rheumatism, painful muscle aches, joint aches, simple backache, bruises, and more. Although the mechanism of action is unclear, experiments indicate that Arthur M... relieves pain by first selectively attracting, and then destroying the messenger chemical which carries pain sensations to the brain, thus eliminating pain in the affected area. Arthur M... is odorless, greaseless, non-staining cream and is available immediately without a prescription and is guaranteed to work. Use only as directed. © 1995, Beller Advertising Group, Inc.

Shave gel recall

WASHINGTON — The government has announced a voluntary recall of more than 500,000 cans of Pfizer's PureSilk Shave Gel for women because the can's interior liner may corrode and rupture.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission said Tuesday that consumers could be injured by a plastic component that may be sent flying from the can, or by the sharp edges of the ruptured canister itself.

Pfizer said it knows of 10 incidents of ruptured cans. None involved injuries.

Drug, grocery and cosmetic stores sold the 7-ounce cans of shaving gel between October 1995 and June 1996 for between $2 and $2.50.

The recall does not affect Pfizer's PureSilk Shave Cream. The commission said consumers should discharge the gel to reduce pressure inside the can and contact Pfizer at 1-800-723-7529 for information on obtaining refunds or replacements.

Nuclear detectors at some ports

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Customs Service says radiation detection devices have been placed at some airports and other ports of entry in an attempt to thwart possible smuggling of nuclear material into the United States.

The agency would not identify the locations that have the equipment, except to say the devices were installed in January at a number of ports of entry, including one major international airport, as part of a pilot project.

There has never been a nuclear material smuggling incident uncovered in the United States, although several of them have been thwarted in Europe.

Connie Fenichel, director of strategic investigations at the Customs Service, said Tuesday in an interview that the devices are an added "ounce of prevention" to keep nuclear materials out of the hands of terrorists.

The equipment, designed to scan individuals, baggage and cargo for radioactivity, is being tested on a limited basis and no decision has been made whether to expand the program, she said.

AIDS impact on African population

WASHINGTON — The AIDS epidemic raging in parts of Africa will depress population growth on the continent much more severely than previously predicted, according to a demographic analysis.

Even AIDS, however, will not significantly dent world population growth, said the report released Tuesday by the private Population Reference Bureau. If birth rates in some developing nations continue at present levels, it said, world population theoretically could reach 100 billion by the end of the next century.

Carl Haub, a demographer with the research group, said that despite AIDS and some slowdown of population growth in parts of the world, birth rates in developing countries are still at twice the level needed to stabilize world population size.

Africa remains the continent with the fastest-expanding population in the world. Without more effective measures, its population will shoot up by 300 million over the next 15 years, said the group's World Population Data Sheet. The Washington-based group, which researches population trends and their implications, is funded by government contracts and foundation grants.

Red tide blamed for manatee die-off

By LISA MOLEWA
Associated Press Writer

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — A mystery epidemic that killed a record number of manatees earlier this year wasn't so sinister after all — the gentle sea cows fell victim to an unusual, but natural, outbreak of red tide, scientists announced Tuesday.

Red tide is a toxic microorganism that accumulates in shellfish and can kill fish. When the deaths began in March, the red tide bloom counts were at their highest for that time of year since 1982, when a similar manatee die-off took place.

"It's a very unique event and it doesn't happen every year," said Dr. Scott Wright, chief scientist for the Department of Environmental Protection.

Between March 5 and April 27, 158 manatees in southwest Florida died because of the outbreak.

The outbreak helped push the number of manatee deaths to a grim record — so far in 1996, 304 of the whiskered walrus-like animals have died. The previous number of annual deaths was set in 1990, when 208 manatees died.

The quick pace of the deaths led scientists on a race to pinpoint the cause. The federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta and the National Marine Fisheries Service sent scientists to test the water and blood samples for unnatural toxins.

Tuesday's announcement was good news because it means the deaths weren't caused by an infectious disease and the manatees aren't in danger of spreading it among themselves or carrying it to other areas, the scientists said.

But because the deaths were caused by a naturally occurring event, there's no way to prevent it from happening again.

"These are natural occurrences. Large numbers of animals die but we can't control it. You can't stop a volcano," said Dr. Thierry Work, a scientist from the National Wildlife Health Center who helped pinpoint the cause of the deaths.

Scientists were particularly baffled by the deaths — and initially said red tide weren't the cause — because the pace of deaths was quicker than during previous red tide outbreaks.

Wright said. Also, no sick or disoriented manatees were found until late in the outbreak. The victims were large and healthy adults who died quickly.

So for a while, scientists suspected a viral infection that caused the pneumonia or a previously undocumented type of red tide, even though preliminary tests showed no signs of it.

They now say cold winter temperatures forced the manatees to gather in the warmer waters of southwest Florida. That exposed more of the mammals to the red tide outbreak when they moved from warm riverways into the Gulf waters, where the concentrations were highest.

Manatees migrate from the Carolinas to Florida every winter and huddle in warm water when the temperature dips. They have inhabited Florida's waters for the past 45 million years, but due in part to increasing motorboat traffic, their numbers have dwindled to about 2,600.

In 1995, 201 manatees, or 9 percent of the known population, died — the second-highest number of deaths since the state began counting the animals in 1974.

Welfare workers up efforts to get jobs for applicants

By DIANE BUSTON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Welfare workers in several states are now greeting applicants with the question, "Do you really want to be on welfare?"

Instead of asking immediately for details that would get them monthly welfare payments, the workers are likely to say: "What we ought to do is see what we should do about getting you a job," says David Bixler of the General Accounting Office.

The GAO, Congress' investigative and auditing arm, released a study Tuesday that looked at five states with federal waivers allowing them to experiment with ways to get people off public assistance and into jobs.

In Fauquier County, Va., for example, caseworkers visit prospective welfare recipients in their homes to get information about services the clients would need to go to work.

In Fond du Lac County, Wis., welfare workers receive daily attendance reports from the local technical college that trains recipients for jobs. When a client is absent, the welfare worker finds out why.

Traditionally, state welfare workers have concentrated on ensuring that qualified applicants get their monthly Aid to Families with Dependent Children checks.

But in the states GAO studied — Florida, Indiana, New Jersey, Virginia and Wisconsin — staff are helping clients find work, said Bixler, assistant GAO director for income security issues.

Instead of focusing on obstacles that have stood in the way of gainful employment, they're looking at the strengths of each person and how they could translate into a job, he said.

In Wisconsin, welfare workers diverted about one-third of their applicants in the pilot counties from applying for AFDC by suggesting work opportunities and stepped up child support, said the GAO report.

Wisconsin has a statewide plan with even more innovations under consideration for a waiver now by the Clinton administration.

During a half-hour stop in Madison, Wis., on Tuesday, Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole called for immediate granting of the waiver.

Michael Kharfen, a spokesman for the Department of Health and Human Services, said the administration was moving as fast as it legally could, given that a mandatory 30-day period for public comment on the plan doesn't expire until July 11.

In 1995, the AFDC provided about $22 billion in cash benefits to nearly 14 million adults and children, according to the GAO.

But both Republicans and President Clinton favor time limits and job requirements to cut welfare spending and foster the work ethic. Legislation pending in Congress that would make such national changes is expected to be voted on this summer.

America's net debt jumps by 40 percent, study shows

By MARTIN CRUTCHER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — The United States, already the world's largest net debtor country, saw its debt position jump by 40 percent last year while Britain retained its No. 1 spot as the country with the biggest holdings in U.S. companies.

In its annual look at America's international balance sheet, the Commerce Department said Tuesday that America's net debtor position rose to $814 billion, up from $580.1 billion in 1994.

The net debtor position is the shortfall between what foreigners own in U.S. assets — corporations, real estate, stocks and bonds — compared to what Americans own in overseas assets.

In direct investments, defined as ownership of at least 10 percent of a company, Britain retained its hold on the No. 1 spot in U.S. holdings for the second straight year. It had displaced Japan in 1995.

For 1995, British direct investment holdings totaled $132.3 billion, up 19 percent from 1995.

Japan was in second place with direct investment of $108.5 billion, up 3.8 percent from 1995. Third place was held by the Netherlands with direct investment in U.S. companies of $87.7 billion.

The big jump in America's net debtor position in 1995 reflected the fact that the deficit in the broadest measure of trade, the current account, climbed to $153 billion in 1995, the second worst showing in history. Those dollars flowed into the hands of foreigners who turned them into U.S. investments.

Until the mid-1980s, the United States enjoyed the title as the world's largest creditor country, a position now held by Japan, as the amount of American-owned assets abroad dwarfed the foreign-owned assets in this country.

In 1986, the United States became a net debtor for the first time since early in this century, and that position has grown every year since as Americans transferred billions of dollars overseas to pay for imported cars, oil and other products.

The net debtor figure is not a debt in a classic sense since it includes not only bank loans but all forms of investment. However, it does represent the amount that would have to be produced if for some reason foreigners suddenly decided to liquidate all of their U.S. holdings.

Agent sentenced in FSU probe

TALLAHASSEE — The criminal investigation into a $6,000 buying spree at a Foot Locker by FSU football players ended with an unregistered sports agent getting a year in jail. Raul Bey financed the buying frenzy by players in November 1993, the year Florida State won the national championship. Three months ago, the NCAA put the Seminoles' football program on one year's probation for failing to properly monitor agents on campus. The university is appealing. In addition to his sentence, Bey was ordered to reimburse FSU the $10,000 it spent on investigation allegations and pay a $2,000 fine. Paul Williams, Nate Cebun and Dallas agent Steve Endicott pleaded no contest to charges against them. Williams and Cebun were sentenced to 30 days in jail. Endicott was ordered to pay a $3,000 fine.

Astros 4, Marlins 3, 12 innings

HOUSTON — Bill Spiers hit a bases-loaded single with one out in the 12th inning as the Houston Astros beat the Florida Marlins 4-3. John Cangelosi led off with a double down the right-field line off Terry Mathews (1-3), who relieved to start the 12th. Craig Biggio's grounder moved Cangelosi to third. Jeff Bagwell and Derek Bell were intentionally walked and Spiers blooped a single to shallow center. Houston went ahead 2-0 lead in the fourth when Spiers hit an RBI double and scored on Orlando Miller's infield single. Devon White pulled Florida within a run with an RBI double in the fifth, but Houston made it 3-1 in the bottom half on Biggio's RBI single. Greg Colbrunn and Gary Sheffield tied the score in the sixth with consecutive home runs.

Bonanza for NBA players

WASHINGTON — NBA players would receive more than $60 million additionally over six years if the revised agreement between the NBA and the players union is ratified by players, the Washington Post reported. The $5 billion deal would give players an extra $50 million for pensions and profits, $28 million for the sale of the union's logo and a share of television profits, according to a nine-page summary of the agreement. Players will vote on the agreement by Monday. There is a moratorium until Tuesday on all player signings and trades until it is ratified.

Seminole nine bests Lake Brantley squad

Ben Dunemann started the game for Seminole, and gave up three hits and one walk over two innings while recording one strikeout. Brad Jenkins, who relieved Dunemann to start the third inning, gave up no hits and just two walks over six innings while striking out five batters. "Brad came in and did a great job," said Seminole coach Mike Powers. "Brad has won his last three games in relief, and has done a terrific job for us this summer. Plus, we hit the ball very well." Mitch Hunt gave Lake Brantley a quick 1-0 as he doubled to open the game, advanced third on a ground out by Jeff Hall, and scored on a passed ball. All-Stars outscore coaches

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — The youngsters got the better of their elders Tuesday afternoon.

T.J. Thompson drove in three runs with a double and a single and the trio of Tug Daniels, Mike Robinson and Ramone Raines scattered eight hits as the Sanford Babe Ruth 14-15 year old All-Stars outscored a team of coaches and Sanford Recreation Department employees 9-7 at Sanford Memorial Stadium.

The game, which is fun for the adults and a good tune-up for the All-Stars, was the second played between the two groups in the past three weeks. The two teams battled to a 7-7 tie in the first contest.

The game was also used as a fund raiser as there was a Bar-B-Que offered with proceeds going to help defray the cost for the All-Stars to go to the different tournaments.

The All-Stars, who won the district tournament in Flagler last week, will next be in action either next Thursday or Friday, July 11 or 12, at Candyland Park in Longwood, site of the Area Tournament.

Anyone others interested in helping the team out financially can call the Sanford Recreation Department at 330-5697 for information.

The coaches took a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the first inning on a single by Tom Kelly, an RBI double by Brian Jones and a sacrifice fly by Dean Daniels, a Minnesota Twins farmhand who had the day off from his workouts with the Twins' rookie team in Ft. Myers.

Summer: Bring out the burgers!

The great thing about summer is that it liberates us from the fast-food burger. Those thin, flat, premeasured rounds (or squares) bear no little resemblance to the homemade backyard barbecue burger that they hardly deserve the same name.

Well, there's nothing like a homemade burger, and while you don't want to go messing around with the Gold Standard (ground beef, salt and pepper, grilled and served on a bun with sliced onions, tomato, pickles and ketchup) there are a few little culinary tricks you can do to liven things up on occasion. The jalapeno burger, developed by students at the New England Culinary Institute, will be a lively addition to your repertoire. The burger stuffed with herb butter comes from "Patio Daddy-O," by Gideon Booker, Karen Brooks, and Leland and Crystal Payton (Chronicle Books, 1986), a just-for-fun cookbook that puts a '90s spin on food from the '50s. The chili-burger recipe comes from "Saturday is Cook-Outs," part of a Time-Life series of "Everyday Cookbooks" that includes "Friday is Fish" and "Sunday is Family Dinners." And just because there's one in every crowd, I've included a recipe from Bharti Kirchner's new "Vegetarian Burgers," (HarperPerennial, 1986).

JALAPENO BURGERS

- 2 pounds lean ground beef
- 1 clove garlic, peeled and minced
- 2 roasted jalapeno peppers, peeled and diced (see note)
- 2 teaspoons red pepper flakes
- 1 tablespoon garlic powder
- 1 tablespoon onion powder
- 1/4 cup Worcestershire sauce
- 2 eggs
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 4 slices of your favorite cheese
- 4 sesame buns

In a large bowl, using clean hands, mix all ingredients together. Form into four patties, and cook on a grill, under a broiler or in a frying pan to desired level of doneness. Serve with cheese on toasted sesame buns.

Note: To roast a jalapeno, put under the broiler or stick it in a gas flame, turning, until skin turns black. Allow to cool briefly. Put into a plastic bag and seal. As the pepper cools, rub off the skin. Remove seeds for a milder taste.

Yield: 4 large burgers.
— Recipe from Tanya Blaine and Eric Mills, students, New England Culinary Institute, Essex, Vt.

PATIO DADDY-O BURGERS

- For the herb butter:
- 4 tablespoons unsalted butter at room temperature
 - 1 tablespoon minced fresh parsley
 - 1 tablespoon minced fresh basil or oregano
 - Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- For the burger:

- 3 pounds freshly ground round
- 6 slices Fontina cheese
- 6 split hamburger buns or other rolls

Make the herb butter: Place the ingredients in a blender or food processor and pulse until smooth. Transfer the mixture to a piece of plastic wrap. Roll into a log using the plastic wrap. Freeze until firm.

Prepare a fire in a charcoal grill. Divide beef into 6 equal balls. Slice the butter log into 6 slices. Bury 1 slice of butter in the center of each meatball. Flatten each ball into a patty about 1 inch thick.

When the coals are medium hot, place the burgers on the grill and cook for 5 minutes on one side. Flip the burgers over and cover each with a slice of cheese. Cook for 3 to 4 minutes, or until the cheese melts and the meat is medium rare. Cook a few minutes longer for medium or well-done burgers.

While the cheese is melting, place the buns, cut-side down, on the grill to lightly toast them. Place the burgers between the toasted buns and serve.

Yield: 6 servings.

CHILI BURGERS

- 1 pound lean top round beef, cut into small pieces
- 3/4 cups canned red kidney beans, rinsed, drained and mashed (see note)
- 1/2 cup frozen corn kernels, thawed
- 3/4 cup chili sauce
- 2 tablespoons fine unseasoned dry bread crumbs
- 1 egg white
- 2 teaspoons chili powder
- 3/4 teaspoon cumin
- 1/2 teaspoon oregano
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 4 hamburger buns

In a food processor, process the beef until ground, about 30 seconds.

Spray the grill rack with non-stick cooking spray and prepare the grill for cooking.

In a large bowl, combine the beef, beans, corn, 1/2 cup of the chili sauce, the bread crumbs, egg white, chili powder, cumin, oregano and salt. Shape into 4 burgers.

Grill the burgers, turning them as they cook, until cooked through, about 10 minutes. Grill the buns on the outer edges of the grill, cut side down, until lightly browned, about 30 seconds. Top each bun bottom with a burger, spoon 1 tablespoon of the remaining chili sauce on top of each burger, put bun top on and serve.

Note: You can substitute pinto, black or great-northern beans. Yield: 4 servings.

FALAFEL BURGERS

- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1 cup diced onion
- 1 tablespoon minced garlic
- 1 jalapeno pepper or other green chili, cored, seeded and minced (or, to taste)
- 1-1/2 cups cooked or canned chickpeas, drained
- 1 cup cooked white basmati rice or other long-grain white rice
- 1 tablespoon freshly squeezed lime juice
- 1-3/4 cups bread crumbs
- Salt and freshly ground black pepper
- Ground panko or other red pepper (such as cayenne), to taste. Heat oil in a small skillet until sizzling. Cook the onion and garlic until the onion is wilted and the garlic is golden. Add the jalapeno and stir several times. Remove from heat and allow to cool.

Place the onion mixture, drained chickpeas and rice in the container of a food processor. Pulse on and off several times until the mixture becomes a smooth puree. Transfer to a large bowl. Add the lime juice and 1 cup of the bread crumbs. Season to taste with salt, black pepper and red pepper. Mix with a large spoon, or with your hands, until evenly combined.

Shape into 3-inch patties, 1/2-inch thick, adding extra bread crumbs if the patties don't hold their shape. They will be slightly sticky.

Prepare a grill or preheat the broiler. If grilling, place the patties on a vegetable grid. If broiling, place the patties on a large cookie sheet lined with a lightly-oiled piece of aluminum foil. Grill or broil 3 to 5 inches from the heat source, 4 to 7 minutes per side or until lightly browned. When one side is done, turn patties carefully. Check often to prevent burning.

Yield: 7 to 8 patties or 3 to 4 servings.

Students receive ministry honors

By MARVA HAWKINS
Herald Columnist

The Institute of Theology and Ministry Training of Orlando held their 1986 Orlando commencement at the Holiday Inn at Universal Studios on June 8.

Seminole County students receiving honors and associate degrees were William Stiver, valedictorian; Martha DeBose McKinney, salutatorian; Terry McKinney, high honor and Ella Woodward.

John Wilson, of Sanford, served as chaplain. Music for the program was rendered by Wanda Clark Wilson.

As salutatorian, Martha had the privilege of speaking words of wisdom to her class. She admonished them to become productive members of the kingdom of God, to acquire knowledge and skills and develop character. She reminded them that training provides a stairway that leads to full spiritual maturity and that the stairway is built on a solid foundation.

Dr. Walker, founder of the Institute of Theology and Ministry Training, and the instructor, has cultivated, nurtured and trained all of the students to become leaders. God has given her vision to see that the pews are filled with potential leaders waiting to be planted and watered.

Other students receiving degrees were Calvin Donaldson, specialist program, designed to develop expertise in missions, evangelism and ministry.

In the Biblical studies program were Catherine Bell, Precious Haun, Theresa McCarver, Patricia Neima, Cathy Ramasser, and Bill McCaffer.

Congratulations to Rev. William Stiver and Martha McKinney who served as assistant instructors. The McKinney's will continue their studies at ITMT where they will study toward the bachelor degree program doing advanced student research. For information about ITMT, P.O. Box 585008, Orlando, FL 32858, (407) 392-9922. Dr. Sheila Walker, founder and president.

New babies are welcomed by rabbi who celebrates life

DEAR ABBY: When did weddings cease being joyous religious and family celebrations and become media events? A clergyman recently wrote to you asking, "Can you imagine what it's like to officiate at a wedding with a baby screaming at the top of its lungs? Have you ever watched and listened to a video of a wedding with two or three babies crying while the parents make no attempt to quiet them?"

Babies are a part of the family, Abby. I have been in synagogues where babies began crying — not in distress, but simply because babies make noise — and I have been embarrassed. Not embarrassed by the babies, but embarrassed by their mothers, who felt it was necessary to take them out so as not to "disturb" the other worshippers. I have followed mothers out of the sanctuary of the synagogue (when I had the privilege of doing so, as a congregant rather than a rabbi) and assured them that their babies, in my opinion, enhanced the worship by their truth, their honesty and sincerity. What is a baby's cry if not a prayer?

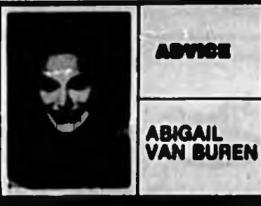

As with regular worship services, even more is it true of weddings. Yes, I have officiated at weddings where babies were present and noisy; I have not been disturbed by them, and by acknowledging the delight of the infants, I have kept the wedding party and guests from being disturbed.

One wedding in particular comes to mind, in which a couple who had been married five years earlier in a civil ceremony asked me to preside at a religious ceremony. Their infant daughter was present, held in her grandfather's arms, and she made noise, as a baby will do. The noise of the happy baby disturbed nobody present, and she quickly quieted from the loud noises to gentle cooing when I suggested that she be transferred to her mother's arms. I acknowledged her as a part of the wedding party, and the wedding was immeasurably beautified by her presence.

Exclude babies? God forbid that I should ever do not Peace and blessings —

RABBI ZEV-HAYIM FEYER, ATLANTA

DEAR RABBI FEYER: As with most letters, there is more than one opinion. Thank you for stating yours.

ADVICE

ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The Fourth of July is almost here, and I would like you to remind your readers that it is safer to watch fireworks at a professional display than to use them on their own.

Every year, thousands of Americans — many of them children — receive injuries serious enough to require a trip to the hospital. The typical injuries are to the head, face and hands, and many result in blindness and amputations. Even sparklers, often given to young children as toys, burn at temperatures as hot as 1,200 degrees.

Please, Abby, ask your readers to think twice this Fourth of July about needlessly exposing themselves and their children to serious injury. Instead, attend a public display put on by professionals who are trained to safely handle dangerous materials.

GEORGE D. MILLER, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL FIRE PROTECTION ASSOCIATION, QUINCY, MASS.

DEAR MR. MILLER: Thank you for the reminder. I couldn't have said it better myself. Readers, please take note, and have a safe Fourth of July.

DEAR ABBY: Mothers-in-law are so often given a "bad rap." I just have to tell you about mine. Recently my marriage was faltering. My husband, "Jack," is a complex man whom I had always had great difficulty understanding. I felt I had tried just about everything, and was one step away from filing for divorce.

Out of desperation, I called my mother-in-law (I'll call her "Adale"). She listened as I poured out the story. She did not judge, criticize or condemn either one of us. She supported her son and me equally. Adale provided some keen insights into Jack that I didn't have. In a kind and gentle way, she also helped me to see where I needed to improve.

I learned a lot about my husband and also about myself from Adale's wisdom, and I'm putting what I learned into practice. Jack and I are staying married, and our marriage is growing stronger.

I thank God for my mother-in-law every night, and I pray that when my children are grown and have spouses of their own, I will be to them the same wise and loving mother-in-law that Adale is to me. MICHELLE IN GEORGIA

DEAR MICHELLE: What a beautiful tribute to your mother-in-law. As your letter so accurately illustrates, there are times when it takes more than two to make a marriage flourish. Thank you for sharing that valuable lesson. Adale sounds like a jewel.

Good advice for everyone — here to readers — is in "The Answer in All of Us and How to Deal With It." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $8.95 ($9.95 in Canada) to Dear Abby, Angus Beach, P.O. Box 497, Mount Morris, IL 61054-0497. Is alternative therapy useful?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've just returned from a hospital in Tijuana. They treat cancer patients from all over the world for about $400 a day. Practically every patient is there because conventional medicine has failed him. It sickens me to see people like you stand on the sidelines and sneer at people like these patients, some of whom are far more intelligent, talented, and likable than you! I agree that some Mexican doctors are as bad as some U.S. doctors, but this in no way justifies your blanket condemnation.

leading to abdominal pain, heartburn, gas, and bloating.

Anything that presses on the abdomen, such as tight clothes and excessive abdominal fat, can worsen these symptoms. So can spicy, rich foods, alcohol and caffeine, because these edibles produce excess gastric acid.

Finally, lying down after a meal may be uncomfortable, because gravity may force acid into the esophagus.

Not everyone with hiatal hernia experiences identical symptoms; it's a matter of degree. Your hernia may be more pronounced than those your friends have.

I suggest that you discuss your pain with your family doctor, who may urge you to use antacids more frequently or may choose to prescribe a drug (Prilosec and others) to reduce the formation of gastric acid.

tight clothes and to stay away from spicy foods, chocolate and caffeine. Several of my friends have the same condition, and they don't experience the pain I do. Why?

DEAR READER: Hiatal hernia, a weakness of the valve where the esophagus joins the stomach, is often associated with reflux, the backwash of stomach acid into the esophagus,

In the trough of a wave

By Phillip Alder

Arguably the strangest television show featuring bridge was filmed as the Canberrans sailed around the North Sea. Four players - Bob Hamman from the United States, Tony Forrester from England, Christian Mari from France and Zia Mahmood from Pakistan - rotated as partners while the cameras ran. Despite the steady pictures, perhaps the sea was rough because Mari made a surprising error on this deal.

How should he have planned the play in six hearts after a spade lead from West?

Mari and Zia were ambitious in the auction. Two clubs was strong, artificial and forcing, with two diamonds the negative response. After hearts were agreed, South cue-bid in spades and North cue-bid in diamonds. Then South lurched into Blackwood.

South was still alive when West led a spade. After taking the first two tricks with his spade honors, Mari ruffed a spade high in the dummy. Now came a trump back to hand and another spade ruff in the dummy. However, East, Forrester, took the opportunity to discard his singleton club. So, when declarer exited from the dummy with the diamond king, Hamman won with the ace and gave his partner a club ruff, one down.

When one hand entry is in the trump suit and the other is in a side suit, you should use the side-suit entry first. If Mari had played a club to hand at trick four, he would have been safe. After taking his second spade ruff, he could have drawn trumps and conceded only the last trick to the diamond ace.
