Hijacker Says Plane Will

Be Blown Up Unless...

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (UPI)-A Pakistani dissident who hijacked a domestic airliner with 141 people aboard to Soviet-occupied Afghanistan threatened today to blow up the plane unless Pakistan released 80 political prisoners. Airline authorities in Islamabad said they could not confirm or deny a report the 130 passenger were brought into the Kabul Airport lounge, leaving the hijacker on board with the 11-member crew. Officials said the passengers were on the four-engine jetliner as it left Peshawer Monday when a man reportedly armed with hand grenades and light arms ordered it to Kabul instead of its scheduled destination of Peshawar. Four unidentified foreigners were on board, airline officials said.

The Pakistan government was considering sending negotiators to the Afghan capital and called on the United States and Soviet Union to use their diplomatic missions in Kabul to help end the crisis.

The dissident, reportedly a supporter of the late Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, threatened to blow up the Pakistan International Airlines Boeing 720 unless 80 political prisoners were released and he was allowed to fly from Kabul. Airline officials reported the hijacker said his father and brother were in jail in Karachi.

U.N. Keeps S. Africa Ban

UNITED NATIONS (UPI)- The U.N. General Assembly reinforced a 1974 ban on South Africa, expelling it overwhelmingly from General Assembly debates. The United States and Western nations voted against the ban. "The South African government will not take this lying down," South Africa's U.N. Ambassador J. Adriaan

Eksteen said as he walked out after the 112-22 vote. Monday's vote spearheaded by black African nations came at the start of the debate on Namibia, when South Africa tried to take its seat in the General Assembly from which it was barred in 1974.

Although South Africa is pivotal to a U. N. plan to bring independence to the giant territory of Namibia. Cameroon immediately challenged South Africa's credentials. There was a quick vote in the credentials committee, 6-

1, with the United Stated casting the sole negative vote. The Assembly then reconvened, denied South African envoy Eksteen a chance to speak and voted to accept the committee's recommendation rejecting the credentials of South Africa because of its policy of apartheid, or racial

Balloon Trip Postponed

NAGASHIMA, Japan (UPI)— The huge "Double Eagle V" balloon was a heap of polyethylene today and plans by its crew to make the first trans-Pacific flight were called

Captain and flight leader Ben Abruzzo was fatalistic. "I guess this wasn't meant to be," the veteran balloonist said. "I don't know why. I guess this just wasn't our time. Abuzzo, 50, said they didn't have enough helium to make another try at sending the limp balloon aloft, adding, "We don't have a balloon we can trust." The team's first balloon was damaged Sunday night and the backup was ruined in today's failure, the second attempt to get the balloon filled and the gondola off the ground. But the team said they will try again next year.

Royal Wedding Site Picked

LONDON (UPI) - Buckingham Palace gave in today to unprecedented demand for seats at the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer, announcing the ceremony would be July 29 in St. Paul's Cathedral, London's biggest church.

The Palace also announced that Charles will visit the United States next month. It had been expected that the wedding would be in Westminster Abbey, scene of the 1947 wedding of Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip and most other royalty in this

But the ancient Abbey cannot hold anything like the number of people in Europe and elsewhere who feel they should be present at the marriage of the heir to the British throne. St. Paul's can accommodate 2,000.

A 36-year-old ex-preacher who was arrested more than two weeks ago for multiple sexual assaults on a five-year-old girl, Monday was slapped with three additional charges involving lewd behavior with young children. As a result of Monday's action, C. Lonnie Earnest of the Citrus Heights section of Nolan Road just south of Sanford, now faces five counts of committing a lewd and lascivious act on a child.

The original charges grew out of incidents that took place between Thanksgiving and Jan. 31 when Earnest allegedly molested a 5-year-old girl at the Ravenna Park Baptist Church, 2743 Country Club Raod, and the offices of Star-Line International at the Sanford Airport, where he was sales

Earthquake Rattles

Frisco's Bay Area FREMONT, Calif. (UPI) - A moderate earthquake roared along the Hayward fault early today, jolting residents awake, cracking windows, setting off burglar alarms and sending rocks tumbling across a canyon

University of California seismologist Dr. Robert Urhammer said the quake registered 4.1 on the openended Richter scale and occurred at 2:45 a.m. PST. It was centered in the Fremont vicinity, 20 miles southeast of San Francisco.

A smaller aftershock registering 2.7 rattled the area at 2:57 a.m., he said. R.V. Black of the state Emergency Services Center in Sacramento said dozens of worried residents from Marin County in the north to Monterey in the south called after the quake hit, some reporting they heard

3 Hike Gasoline Wholesale Prices; Sun Cuts It In Florida

By United Press International Three U.S. refiners are hiking wholesale gasoline prices and one firm reduced its prices in Florida amid speculation that Saudi Arabia, the country's largest foreign oil supplier, may cut production by 500,000 barrels a day.

An industry spokesman said Monday in Atlanta that conservation by Americans and development of the U.S.'s own energy supplies may make it possible for the country to cut its oil imports 50 percent by the end of the decade. Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, said the United States slashed oil imports last year by 18 percent and virtually halted the decline of oil production in the contiguous 48 states. He told a news conference that oil imports dropped by 112 million barrels daily in 1980 compared with 1979. At the same

The state-national arrangement in effect doubles the amount the more wealthy national party may spend. Under the law, the national party can spend only two cents per eligible voter in each state. The state party may spend an additional two cents.

The Volunteers: It's Not Working

A graphic report of the effects upon the peacetime Army of a deterioration of discipline has been rendered by Tom Tiede of the Newspaper Enterprise Association.

He quotes non-commissioned officers and fieldgrade commissioned officers. Higher-ranking officers might tell a different and less disturbing story. But we are inclined to believe the lowerranking officers, who are closer to the problem and have no motive to excuse or hide the facts.

Tiede is talking about the Army, and the problem may be most serious in that branch of the service. But we have no doubt that similar complaints would be heard from other branches.

It is the premise of our volunteer military that by raising the pay and sweetening the benefits and by making the working conditions of military duty more attractive to young men and women, this country can be defended without resort to the military draft or any form of universal service.

It is a comfortable doctrine. It accommodates the disillusion with the draft which resulted from the deplorable injustice with which the draft was administered during the Vietnam War.

Those with a sense of history may say the peacetime Army of the 1920s and the 1930s was no burden on middle-class citizens while virmore efficient than today's Army.

There is a difference in the circumstances, now, however. The world is a more dangerous place, and combat forces must be ready to fight on short notice with the weapons and the manpower now available. It took us a couple of years to get ready to fight World War II. We are not likely to have Bank's authority to make new direct loans in that kind of time in the future.

Sure, the draft is unpopular. Sure, compulsory military service is a harsh burden that falls only upon the young. But it would provide a corps of young recruits who would be serving their country as a duty, and who would take discipline and pride themselves on their willingness to give up creature comforts. It would, if fairly administered, build a broad base of patriotism those available on the open market. within our society. And it would result in military services that are more ready for combat.

Most European countries require a period of military service as a condition of citizenship. Many immigrants came to America to escape such service. We have a tradition against the peacetime draft and in 1941 Congress extended the draft for another year (three months before Pearl Harbor) by only a single vote. President Reagan, who wants to strengthen our defenses, objected during his campaign to the national registration for the draft which President Carter revived last year. That is a measure of the widely perceived popular opposition to compulsory overseas sales to set up DISCs that were service of any kind.

But, increasingly, Americans concerned about defense are suggesting it is time to admit that the all-volunteer military is an idea that isn't

$3 Billion Itch

The junkets of footloose members of Congress to remote, exotic places for "study" have been widely publicized and heartily deplored.

But the itching feet of bureaucrats in federal agencies generally escape condemnation. Now the General Accounting Office has reported to Congress "questionable practices" tucked away in the taxpayers' $3 billion bill for travel last year. Among the items that perturbed the GAO:

unjustified use of first-class accommodations, linking of personal vacations to government trips, unnecessary travel outside Washington for "field meetings," which few field officials attend, questionable travel by secretaries accompanying their bosses. Former President Carter ordered travel costs among federal agencies cut by 20 percent, but nobody bothered to verify whether cuts were President Reagan seems to have got the bureaucrats' attention, however, even before his President Eisenhower shocked his old Inauguration. After the November election, about military buddies by warning of the growing 100 officials of the Legal Services Corp. traveled power of what he called the "militaryto San Juan, Puerto Rico, to devise a strategy to even Ike foresaw the extent to which the protect their budget from the Reagan ax. But the president's program ignores another export boon doggle, the Domestic International Sales Corporations established under a 1971 law designed to encourage exports by allowing the companies involved to efer federal corporate income taxes on a substantial portion of their profits.

Instead of attracting new entrants to the export market, however, the law allowed large companies that already had substantial merely subsidiary "paper corporations" that passed their inflated profits back to the parent company. As a result, DISCs deprive the federal treasury of $1.8 billion annually. Another law, dating back to 1921, exempted from federal income taxes the profits of

Pick A War, Any War

Again. Sorry, but it will not go away. Worse, the more attention it receives, the more confusing the developing civil war in that tortured Central American nation becomes. To the point that depending upon which newspapers you read or commentators you follow, entirely different conflicts can appear to be under discussion. Which isn't actually so strange since there are, as a matter of fact, three wars under way in El Salvador. To start with, there is the war being waged by the governing junta, publicly committed to social and political reforms, against leftistguerrillas seeking to seize power by force. There is also the war of a loose coalition of political groups, ranging from dissident Christian Democrats all the way to hard-line Marxists, against an entrenched oligarchy of a few dozen immensely wealthy families and their allies in the army officer corps, the latter alliance defending a position of economic power and social privilege enjoyed since the Spanish colonial era. And then there is the war of the far right within the military and the junta itself against most of the rest of the country, a war of terrorism waged through torture and murder with the country's large peasant population supplying most of the victims.

All three wars are going on simultaneously. which is enough in itself to explain the confusion. But it is further compounded by the insistence of most concerned observers in focusing on only one of the wars, downplaying if not totally ignoring the others.

The United States government is providing an excellent case in point. The first is the official war and has Washington's backing, a commitment initiated by the Carter administration, which energetically encouraged the junta's reforms while carefully limiting military assistance, and now even more firmly endorsed by its successor, with less emphasis on reform and more on hardware.

But the Reagan administration is doing even more. It is internationalizing the Salvadoran crisis, making it a litmus test of sorts for relations with the United States. good or bad and for allies and adversaries Largely in the latter category, the Soviet Union, Cuba and Nicaragua most prominently among others are being warned to keep a distance or face the diplomatic wrath of the tough new administration in Washington, Meanwhile, State Department teams have been dropping in on the European allies to explain why lining up solidly and publicly behind the U.S. decision to draw a line in Central America is vital to the interests of the free world.

The response has not been uniformly enthusiastic, which does not reflect any lack of concern in Europe over the war in El Salvador and its trouble-making potential but real differences in focus. Particularly on the second war, which is seen as a justified national revolution.

Match That'll Make You Cry Andrew lost tough wrestling matches Saturday night, but they each won the battle of the watery eyes - at least until they got home. It was quite an effort for both. When Greyhound Principal Carlton Henley pressed the second place medal into their hand on the finishing steps, the tears began to form. As well they should. Athletics is a very emotional situation. Some of the best and worst performances have been given during this frenzied state of mind. Some feel, it would be an unmanly act for a young wrestler to cry. I don't see it that way. And I'd hate to be the guy that mentioned it to one of these two brutes without the benefit of a good insurance Crying is a release of emotionwhether it be good or bad- it's better for it to come out. I doubt that anyone gets too old to cry. Sometime Saturday or maybe even Sunday, the tears probably did flow for this talented It's hard to say who suffered the greater despair. Andrew, a virtual inknown in the tournament, but an excellent wrestler and district champion last year as a sophomore at Lake Howell, was leading until the final He ended up losing 6-5. Cyclones Swirl Past Rollins, Alma 3-2, 5-3

Iowa State's Cyclones swirled into Sanford Monday posting baseball victories over Alma (Mich.) College 5-3 at Sanford Stadium and whipping Rollins 3-2 in Winter Park. In the morning opener the Cyclones handled Alma as Bill

Solomon and Phil Czosnyka combined on a four-hitter. Solomon hurled the first five and one-third innings, striking out three and walking six. Czosnyka bailed out Solomon by getting out of a sixth inning jam. He struck out three. "We had opportunities early, but we couldn't play catch," said former three-time Iowa State All American Larry Corrigan, who is in his first year as Cyclone boss. ISU trailed 3-1 in the fifth, but put four runs on the board to pull out the victory. Right fielder Greg Lempke lashed out two hits including a decisive triple to pace State. The Cyclone career home run leader batted in three runs for shutdown the Tars on five hits as ISU prevailed 3-2. "They're (Iowa State) the best hitting team I've seen so far this spring," raved Rollins Coach Boyd Coffee. It was pitching, though, which kept the Cyclones undefeated on the year at 2-0. Riley spaced five hits, whiffed six and walked six in a route-going performance. "We really stung the ball early," confirmed Corrigan, a former Los Angeles Dodger. "Even though it was 0-0, we were dominating the game." Once again, however, ISU came from behind for the victory. The Tars put up two runs in the fifth, but the Cyclones came Shortstop Kenny James plated the first tally of the inning and first sacker Billy Boyd chased home the two game winners later in the inning with a smash up the middle. Iowa State, who figures to be in the running for the Big 8 title this year, continues its southern trip through Sunday as part of Wes Rinker's Florida Baseball School package.

Other scores at the stadium Monday were, Rochester Tech 6 Heidelberg College 2 and Alma College 9, Rochester Tech 2
