The Councilman Who Wouldn't Vote — Did Casselberry's Robertson Break The Law?

Herald Staff Writer Freshman Casselberry Councilman Carl Robertson Jr., who abstained from voting on a proposed bond issue at a city council meeting Wednesday night may have violated state law in the

According to the law - Florida State Statute 286.012 - members of various boards and governing bodies must vote on every issue unless a conflict of interest is involved. When Robertson last night declined to vote, saying he did not fully understand the complex information on the bond issues before the board, he was asked by a colleague if a conflict of interest was involved.

Robertson's response was that he had no conflict. Jerrold Bross, chief assistant State Attorney for Seminole and Brevard Counties, declined comment this morning on whether his office will be taking action on the matter. Bross said in keeping with policy of the office, no comment could be given.

He said that Robertson may wish to correct his action at a special meeting of the city council, called for 3 p.m. Friday, to set public hearing on the disposition of federal revenue sharing

The City council Wednesday night, however, taking the stance that action may forestall the ruling, adopted a resolution noting its intent to refinance, to float a $6 million special obligation bond issue and to select a bonding company to handle the issues.

Selected was a combine of H. I. Henann Inc. of Ft. Lauderdale and Southeastern Municipal Bonds Inc. of Orlando. The estimated savings by the city floating the special obligation issue and

Comprehensive Land Plan Deadline: What Happens If...?

(About that comprehensive plan the county and individual law to create the agency. municipalities must adopt by Oct. 1, 1977 . . . What happens if either or both fails to do so in time to meet the deadline? Staff reporter Ed Prickett set out to find the answer and filed this

> By ED PRICKETT Herald Staff Writer

Any governmental entity in Seminole County that doesn't meet the Oct. 1 deadline for completion of its comprehensive plan will give up its right to draw up its own plan. And, the defaulting agency will be required to pay the governmental agency that is required by the 1974 law to complete the

If either a county or city government fails to meet the deadline, the law states a "special land planning agency" will be created. The agency "shall assume the duty of both preparing and adopting the comprehensive plan for the defaulting agency." If a city defaults, the county commission by resolution will create the land planning agency. If the county misses the Oct. 1 deadline, then the Seminole Legislative Delegation is obligated by

In either case, the land planning agency will have one year until Oct. 1, 1978 - to prepare the plan for the defaulting agency "and the costs of such preparation are hereby declared a lawful obligation of the defaulting entity payable upon demand of the special land planning agency."

following: Three members appointed by the city which defaults, two members appointed by the regional planning agency, and one member appointed by the legislative delegation. If the county defaults, the land planning agency will consist of the following: Three members appointed by the largest city (by population), three members appointed by the county commission, wo members from the regional planning council and one member when the rest of the state is required by law to produce a com- with power company officials to insure there will be sufficient deadline, the date set by state law for final adoption.

An attorney general's informal ruling on Aug. 5, 1975, states,

"The local law deadline of Oct. 1, 1977, would appear to 'exceed' the general law deadline of July 1, 1979."

The county commission, according to Principal Planner Gary Langston, requested the opinion after representatives from some of Seminole's cities inquired about extending the deadline to 1979. In 1973, the Environmental Land Management Committee in the Florida Legislature introduced the concept of a comprehensive plan which would plan and regulate future growth in Florida's cities and counties.

But the legislature failed to act in 1973, and in 1974 the local legislative delegation pushed through a local bill that mandated a Seminole County comprehensive plan by Oct. 1, 1977. The legislative acted the following year, and passed a bill that did virtually the same thing. Except the states's comprehensive planning act of 1975 applied to all counties and cities in Florida. The state bill set 1978 as the deadline.

Langston said Seminole County will have to meet only one additional guideline in 1979. That is the "utility element" of the predictions in Seminole County.

"I don't see it as any big deal," Langston said.

How could a governmental entity miss the deadline. For starters elected officials who make up the governmental body could refuse to approve the plan as drawn. Or. planners could slip up and not meet the advertising deadlines which require public hearings before any plan is adopted. How is county government doing?

"There's no problem," Commission Chairman Dick Williams

Though Williams is optimistic, there is no way to predict accurately how the commission vote will be on June 21, the date set for the second of two public hearings on the plan. The first is set for June 7. County Planner Bill Kercher says the first hearing will be held over to receive input from interested parties.

The June 21 vote, however, is not the one that will adopt the plan. It is a preliminary vote to adopt the development framework or philosophy of the plan.

state act. Basically, the utility element required coordination The vote on final adoption is scheduled to come before the Oct. 1

Firefighters Fail In Efforts To Control Panhandle Blaze

SUMATRA (AP) - Around-the-clock efforts have failed to control a major forest fire in the Apalachicola National Forest 45 miles southwest of Tallahassee. As of early today, the fire had burned about 7,000 acres since it flared up on Monday.

Damage to timberland was estimated at $1 "It's a major fire, very definitely," Ted Thomas, assistant forest supervisor for administration, said late Wednesday. "It's what we call a project fire, meaning the mobilization of men and equiptment from all parts of the South.' U.S. Forest Service spokesman Bris Price said the fire burned 1,800 acres on Wednesday alone but still posed no threat to populated

Cops To Carry Machine Guns

Freeman has ordered his deputies to start carrying machine guns after a detective was fired on when he stumbled upon some drug smugglers.

Freeman, who campaigned on a promise to try to squelch the thriving drug trade in the Florida Keys, issued orders Wednesday that all patrol cars be equipped with Israeli-made Uzi submachine guns or AR-18 combat rifles. His 50 deputies also were told to switch to .38caliber magnums revolvers, more powerful than their old .38-caliber revolvers.

away by a House subcommittee.

The Alcoholic Beverages subcommittee Wednesday unanimously killed the bill (HB202) by Rep. Walter Young, D-Hollywood, that would have raised about $91 million. Young, who didn't even show up to fight for the bill, said he preferred a sales tax increase to fund higher spending for schools. The same panel earlier killed Young's bill to raise $96 million through higher liquor and beer taxes.

MIAMI (AP) — Retail gasoline prices in 11 Florida urban areas have risen as much as 3.5 cents per gallon since Thanksgiving, the American Automobile Association reports. A survey by the AAA of 110 stations in Florida showed that unleaded gasoline has gone up 3.5 cents to an average of 65.9 cents per gallon. Regular averages 62.4 cents per gallon, up 2.8 cents since November, and premium averages 68 cents per gallon, up by 3.3 cents, the survey showed Wednesday.

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — Florida's public counsel says the Public Service Commission has wrongfully denied him the right to question staff recommendations in open hearings on proposed orders in utility rate during a one-hour Supreme Court session. He said the PSC has issued a directive saying he could be present but not take part in such discussions between the PSC and its staff.

refinance the $9 million utility issue will be abandoned. The council Monday night delayed a decision on the selection of a bonding company to permit the firms to compute again the savings which could be realized. In the two-day period between Monday night and Wednesday refinancing savings of $365,000 and a savings of $373,000 on an It is expected that the savings to be realized by the city by virute of the two-day delay will ultimately total $700,000 to $900,000 - with a savings overall of $2 million.

Another important detail of the refinancing is that the city's utility tax revenues will be released from a pledge as a backup for the bond issue. 9. The resulting savings here could be used to reduce or eliminate the utility tax except for that portion pledged to pay off the loan on the current city hall or to reduce property taxes. The motion selecting the Henann-Southeastern combine as the city's bonding agent was passed by the city council Wednesday night on a 4-0 vote with Councilman Carl Robertson Jr. ab-The resolution passed 4-1 with Robertson voting against.

Americans Should Watch That Sleeper

The quiet, persistent effort now under way by the AFL-CIO and federal employe unions to repeal the Hatch Act poses a sinister but little-understood threat to the nation's political process.

House Resolution 10, introduced by Rep. William Clay, D-Mo., would remove existing prohibitions against partisan political activity by federal workers. Its passage would politicize the Civil Service, undermine the merit system and subject Congress and the American people to intimidating and intolerable political pressures by an army of nearly three million federal employes.

Despite the current labor-union smokescreen about restoring lost citizenship rights to federal employes, the historic fact is that the Hatch Act was enacted originally to protect workers from political coercion by their supervisors. It was passed in 1939 to deal with one of the few scandals to besmirch the New Deal widespread efforts by federal bureaucrats to organize workers behind Democratic candidates in Kentucky and Tennessee. Because of the Hatch Act, civil servants have since refused political solicitations with the universally understand slogan, "I can't - I'm Hatched." This protection is one reason that most government workers have shown no enthusiasm

Congressman Clay's bill would "encourage" federal employes to enter the political arena, to raise campaign funds and to run for office; it would even grant leave to federal employes seeking election. While superiors would be prohibited from soliciting or coercing lower-level employes, nevertheless, the bill says nothing about union pressure on members who are civil servants. And such bullying may be an even greater problem for workers than coercion by supervisors.

It is true that HR 10 exempts certain employes of the IRS, the CIA and the Justice Department, and the Carter administration is seeking a broader definition of "sensitive employes" who would, in effect, remain bound by Hatch Act restrictions. Even so, it is likely that lower-level employes in all agencies would be given political license according to President Carter, who is supporting the Clay bill in accordance with a campaign commitment to the Democratic platform.

We need not spell out the implied pressure that would accompany any political solicitations of the average American citizen by even the lowest-level employes of the FBI and IRS. Nor do we have to dwell on the obvious occasions for political sin that would arise if businesses and industries are solicited by employes of a federal agency that decides on government contracts. The Hatch Act is under siege now for one primary reason: Organized labor correctly sees it as a roadblock against mass unionization of the civil service and expanded clout at all levels of government. The labor rationalization is to champion the political rights of government workers, but government workers for years have made it clear they are indifferent, if not opposed, to such deliverance.

John R. Bolton, Washington attorney, author and political scientists, clearly and correctly points out that the Hatch Act is at bottom a civil libertarian idea. Through this law, the government restrains itself, not the individuals in its employ. And by such restraint does the government in classic First Amendment terms act to protect the free and voluntary political activity of private

A similar bill to repeal the Hatch Act's political protections sailed through Congress last year. Only President Ford's veto prevented it from becoming law. Now, with the explicit support of the Carter administration and an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress, the odds favor the killing of the Hatch Act and the distortion of the nation's political process. It will require a fully aroused public opinion to prevent this calamity.

The American people should awaken to the dangerous sleeper that is now making its way through Congress.

"It's time for a call to arms," said Michael Rothenberg of the University of Washington Medical School at the recent annual meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Association. "We need a concerted effort toward major program revisions that are more stimulating and less violent.

The American Medical Association has declared television violence to be "an environmental health risk."

In California, the state medical association has filed a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of the nine-year-old victim in a rape case. The defendants (all adolescents) are claiming that they were inspired to the act by a similar episode they saw in a television movie.

Television has become "a school of violence and a college for crime," says the association's brief. "It is in the interests of the health of all Americans, especially our children, to hold broadcasters civilly accountable for acts which lead to foreseeable harm."

The National Parent Teachers Association has given the networks notice that it is putting them on six-months' "probation" beginning July 1. If there is no "substantial response" during that time to demands for less TV gore and more diversity and quality in programming, the PTA boycotts of sponsors and local stations, selected test cases to deny license renewals and civil

Let's Junk The Junk Food Bill

WASHINGTON - The Dept. of Agriculture's annual budget is $15 billion. Its 80,000 full-time employes run about 275 programs. The number of laws the department is responsible for enforcing are "countless," the number of regulations it administers are "endless," according to Steve Dewhurst, Agriculture's deputy budget director. All of the department's laws and regulations fill an entire section - Title 7 - of both the U.S. Code and the Code of Federal

But Sen. Clifford Case doesn't think the Agriculture Dept. has enough to do. So the New Jersey Republican has introduced a bill to authorize Secretary Bob Bergland "to prohibit the availability of so-called junk food in food service areas during the time meals are served under the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 and the National School Lunch Act."

Sen. Case believes that it "makes no sense" to allow vended food in our nation's schools because this competition is a threat to the "integrity" of federal food programs. But is it really? Well, nobody knows.

Nancy Anderson, the aide to Sen. Case who helped draft his proposal, tells me that she "doesn't have exact figures" as regards the impact of "junk food" on the federal lunch programs, which now feed about 24 million kids lany. Ms. Anderson, who favors the banning of all "candy bars, potato chips, soft drinks, cupcakes, pies, etc.," says that her boss has relied on the American School Food Service Association (ASFSA) for his information.

Now, this is interesting because the ASFSA is a special-interest group whose existence is entirely dependent on the federal lunch programs. Its 70,000 members make it the largest national organization of people who work either as directors of or actual workers in state or local federally funded school lunch or breakfast from vended foods (and also from those in-

Ken Schlossberg, the Washington rep for the ASFSA, tells me his group enthusiastically endorses the Case bill and opposes "any competitive foods." Like Ms. Anderson, Schlossberg says it's "hard to get numbers" that show the impact of vended food (all of which, he concedes, is not "junk food") on the federal food programs. He tells me that over the past five years, during which time vended foods have been allowed back to have pupils, public confidence in you must be in the schools, he knows of no study assessing this impact. He says that things "have gotten worse" but admits that this assertion is only "observational," that there is no hard data - or,

So I press on. And like Ms. Anderson and Mr. only established and available path to Schlossberg, Alan Stone, staff director of Sen. George McGover Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs tells me that he also knows of "no specific figures" regarding the

Male Backlash Threatens Women Doctors' Advance

The Herald Services

What are the chances that your next doctor may be a woman? Many commentators believe that if current trends continue at least half of this country's doctors will be women by 1990. This may be an overoptimistic view. There is no question that women have made significant progress in recent years. The number of women enrolled in medical school has increased more than 300 per cent since 1969. An article earlier this year in the New York Times even suggested that women now have a better chance of getting into medical school than men. What few people realize is that women experienced a similar breakthrough in the late 19th century. And, just as the recent gains owe a great deal to the women's liberation movement, much of the 19th-century progress can be credited to the women's rights crusade.

It is no coincidence that the current increase in the number of women physicians parallels the development of the women's liberation movement

A century ago, the rise of the women's rights movement provided aspiring female physicians with a similar boost. Rejected by the more prestigious medical schools and denied appointments to internships and hospital staffs, nineteenthcentury women opened their own medical schools and training hospitals.

At the end of the century, there were only seven hospitals in the United States where women could count on securing internships! All of these institutions were owned and operated by

Women also waged a carefully planned campaign to gain

vantage of Johns Hopkins University's financial problems, a group of women donated $500,000 to the school after reaching an agreement with officials that women would be admitted on the same terms as men. By the turn of the century, a major role for women in medicine seemed assured. In 1894, women represented a significant portion of the student body at a growing number of medical schools in the country: 19 per cent at the University of Michigan; 25 per cent at Tufts University; and 37 per cent a

Boston University. The turn-of-the-century period was a "golden age" for women doctors. In 1900, 18.2 per cent of Boston's physicians were women, a figure which has not been surpassed to the present

Convinced that the battle for sexual equality in medicine had been won, woman's rights advocates shifted their attention to other battles.

Similarly, convinced that they had outlived their usefulness 19 separate women's medical colleges closed their doors. At that point, a male backlash developed in medical circles Concerned over what they believed to be a surplus of physicians, medical leaders sought to reduce the number of practitioners. Not surprisingly, in an early version of last-hired first-fired, women were hard hit by the retrenchment. Quotas were established that successfully limited the number of women to four or five per cent of each medical class. Can history repeat itself? I think that such a possibility is a real one if government pressure is relaxed. Affirmative action programs have come under increasing fire in the past few years. Charges of favoritism, reverse discrimination and decreasing standards have raised serious questions about the advisability of federal interference with the admissions and hiring process. Equally significant is the fact that medical women are still vulnerable to the dictates of the male leaders of medicine. Although there have been substantial gains in medical school admissions in recent years, the number of women in influential positions remains unchanged. The percentage of women faculty is the same today as it was in 1971. Similarly, medical schools and hospitals have refused to appoint women to key leadership

Until women have a real voice in decision-making, their future in medicine remains uncertain.

"Picnic" takes place in the joint back yards of two middleaged, small town women, both long since deserted by their husbands. One has an invalid mother, and the other, two maturing daughters, and a boarder, who is a spinster school teacher.

Into this female atmosphere comes a visitor, a most interesting character, who seriously upsets the entire group. Out of these characters and a few more, a play is born. The time is 1953 and it is midsummer, in Kansas. The rest of the story. . . well, curtain is at 8 p.m. sharp. The public is in-

Whistlin' Dixie - Sanford -Lester Wows | m! !

Lester Maddox opened his act "The Governor and the Dishwasher" for the first time in Florida Thursday night at "Mr. P's" in Sanford, and won nearly continuous applause and two standing ovations from a near-capacity

Bobby Lee Fears, the ex-convict sidekick of the former Georgia governor, who sang, danced around the supper lub, played the guitar and received shouts of approcestion from the crowd that had identified itself certier as mostly composed of Sanfordites and other Seminole

The most touching part of the performance was when Maddox left the stage to leave Fears in the spotlight singing "Moon River" as it has never been sung before. The song was the focal point of Fears' talk on America and what it has meant to him, of his growing up in the ghetto, seeing his father murdered before his eyes, later to become a convict in an Atlanta prison. Now he is almost certain to gain national prominence because of the unusual routine with the former segregationist governor. Toward the end of the Moon River rendition, Fears began calling for "Papa Governor" to return and told of how only Maddox wo. The plan when he was in prison and Maddox was lieutenan governor of Georgia. Fears said he had written Jimmy Carter, then governor of the state, and received no response.

Maddox during the act referred to Carter several times, not by name, but by mentioning peanuts and noting that he had suffered kidney stone problems because of eating peanuts in the early 70's during the years Carter was

Among the songs the duo sang and played together with Maddox on the harmonica and Fears on the guitar were the "real" national anthem, "Dixie," "Yankee Doidle " and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," as well as several spirituals.

The two had their audience keeping time with the music by clapping their hands and singing along. As the audience participated - with some people dancing around their tables - Fears shouted, "Amen. Amen. We've had church tonight. Halleluah!" The crowd responded, "Amen, hallelujah!"

Among those prominent Seminole Countians seen enjoying the show and participating were: County Commissioner and Mrs. Bill Kirchhoff, Sanford City Commissioner A. A. McClanahan, School Board Member and Mrs. Bud Feather; Former Casselberry Councilman and Mrs. John Zacco, Dr. And Mrs. Frank Clonts.

rock Southerners who fought against intergration in the '60s akin to Alabama Gov. George Wallace, appeared a defeated and pathetic man during a personal interview after his last show Thursday night at Mr. P's in Sanford. "I'm trying to be happy and make others happy," he said, adding that he has sold his Pickrick restaurant where he became nationally known more than a decade ago for his refual to serve blacks. Ironically his partner in his comedy act is a black former dishwasher and ex-

"I'm 61 years old and probably will never be able to pay off my old campaign debts," the ex-governor said. "But, I don't regret my time in politics. It is a citizen's duty to serve. I could have joined the crowd, but I didn't and I opened up government for awhile. It is closed again since I left." Maddox said.

Maddox said he learned in politics that politicians choose up sides and when they "are not working for themselves or their friends, they are at work cutting their opponents." He said he left public office after eight years - four as governor and four as lieutenant governor-in debt more than he earned.

The former Democrat who now considers himself an independent, said he is $350,000 in debt from past campaigns and has four judgments against him in the courts "I hate to see my wife, Virginia, punished like this in her He said friends and relatives have "frowned" upon his getting into show business with an act. "But, during the last few days my wife has encouraged me," he said. "We have never had much time to spend together." Maddox said he and his black former dishwasher and ex-convict Bobby Lee Fears performed their comedy routine the first time three weeks ago in a small club in Georgia. Someone from California, who saw the act, "We are not good professionally because we are not professionals," he said, noting his partner has "lots" of talent and ability, however. "If this man - pointing to Fears - changes his life, that's enough. I'm trying to teach him and the work is worth it to me. There is no other team like us in the country."

Most bitter at Jimmy Carter, whom he defeated for election to the governor's mansion first and who succeeded him four years later in the mansion, Maddox said," Carter got elected by telling people he was my friend. When he was elected he stomped me. "I hope he (Carter) does a great job ... his dealings in Korea are impossible...his position in Rhodesia and South Africa is meddling in others affairs. He is fighting our friends and encouraging our enemies.

"I can't go along with his expansion of welfare programs. He has a real fight on his hands with energy. "He is a worker of and belongs to the political establishment. He is a captain of the political establishment and unable to be his own man. But, then that is no different that his predecessors in office," Maddox said of the Maddox said he has difficulty understanding the Carter position on water projects. "If it weren't for Buford Dam. Atlanta would be without adequate water today, would be dried up and not prospering," he said. Maddox and Fears are writing their own act as they go along. "There is no one to write it for us," he said, "no
