Reduction In Food Costs Seen Bright Outlook For 1938

By AP Feature Service
WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Bright spot in the 1938 outlook for the American consumer is the prospect that this year's food dollar will go further than 1937's.

Unusually large foodstuff supplies, presage continuation of the current "breathing spell" from mounting food costs. Harming a severe drought, government food supply experts see a trend to a lower general price level. Extent of the decline can be only a guess, but a price level of 6 to 8 percent below last year is regarded a reasonable estimate.

Between last May, when prices were at the highest level since the spring of 1931, and December 14, when the last official survey was taken, the decline was 4.6 percent. Since then there has been a break in most prices, particularly in better grade beef.

Here are some of the factors on which government officials base their unofficial forecast: Potatoes, No. 1 Item on the poor man's budget, now 28 percent below prices of a year ago, probably will continue at that level at least through first half of 1938; oranges are ticketed for the "bargain counter"; seasonal decline of butter prices from the December peak probably will be greater than average; dry-edible beans are slated to be cheaper than last year; cereals and bakery products may go somewhat lower; fats and oils are declining in price; rice supplies will exceed any other year, on record; total supplies of canned vegetables are indicated to be the largest recorded.

100 Carloads Of Commodities Are Handled By Board

JACKSONVILLE, Feb. 4.—An even one hundred carloads of commodities have been distributed or allotted for distribution in Florida by the State Welfare Board since December 15, according to an announcement here of Chas. L. Cranford, director of surplus commodity distribution.

Commodities received were two cars of dried-peas, 7 cars of rice, 3 cars of dried apples, 6 cars of shortening, a total of 18 cars. Commodities allocated were 6 cars of rice, 2 cars of shortening, 3 cars of pea beans, 2 cars of dried peaches, 24 cars of oranges, 45 cars of apples, a total of 82.

The oranges will be bought in Florida by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, which has opened offices for that purpose at Lakeland. The buying program is expected to have a stimulating effect upon orange prices, thereby benefiting the state through the added revenue re-

English Garagemen Boost Price Of Air

LONDON, Feb. 4.—(P)—The air is no longer free in some parts of England. A number of garagemen have decided to charge 12 cents every time they have to inflate a motorist's tires. This and such other services as filling radiators and topping up batteries are performed free by most filling stations which depend on good will for much of their business. But the garagemen say the services cost them several pounds a week in time and they are disturbed over "undercutting" by filling stations. MIAMI, Feb. 5.—(AP)—A special grand jury completed a two-week investigation of the city administration yesterday, reporting suspicious circumstances surrounding a bond refunding deal, numerous irregularities by the civil service board and indications that a syndicate held a monopoly on illegal horse race bookmaking and was virtually immune to arrest.

This is the first prorate to be recommended to the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of the Marketing Agreement which operates under the Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1937. While the available amount of celery reported was not in such proportions as to demonstrate the market.

No new indictments were returned, however. The jury last week indicted Mayor Robert H. Williams, Commissioners John DuBose and Ralph Ferguson and Thomas E. Grady, special rate expert, on charges of conspiracy and soliciting a $250,000 bribe from the Florida Light and Power Company in a rate reduction case.

Lewis For President

Whether or not John L. Lewis has any aspirations for the presidency of the United States can be seen as much from his recent article in the Country Home magazine...

Advocating in his magazine article "the formation of a CIO for farmers which would stand shoulder to shoulder with other unions in a solid front," Mr. Lewis goes on to say that such a union could exert enormous political influence...

And on Thursday just before the United Mine Workers convention adjourned, Frank Hayes, a former president of the union, in a lengthy address boomed Mr. Lewis for the presidency before the cheers and shouts of approval of more than two thousand delegates and closed by saying that if this were the Democratic National Convention, Mr. Lewis would be our next president.

All of which leads one to the speculation as to what kind of a president Mr. Lewis would make if he were elected. Personally, while we do believe he wants very much to be president and is mapping his course in that direction, we do not take him seriously enough to think that he would make a very bad president, at least not nearly so bad a president as many thoughtful and conservative people seem to think.

We are inclined to believe that once Mr. Lewis were installed in the White House, he would find that he had been elected president of all the people, and not just of the United Mine Workers, not even just of the CIO members, or even of the laboring class in general. His responsibility to the Committee for Industrial Organization would be ended, and his responsibility for the safe conduct of this entire nation, and for the peace and happiness of all its people would be his only responsibility.

In all probability he would make much the same kind of president as Ramsey MacDonald made as premier of England. MacDonald was a labor leader of much the same type as Lewis, and if anything, entertained even more socialistic views. But when he became premier he found it difficult to reconcile his previous plans for the benefit of his own particular group with his duty to the people as a whole. He gained the respect and admiration of all the world, but lost the support of the Labor Party.

In the case of Mr. Lewis, however, there is apt to be this one important difference, that whereas MacDonald actually became premier of England, Lewis will never be president of the United States. While he might command a large part of the labor vote, he could never win the farmers, and without them he could not be elected.

An Unnecessary Issue

As we intimated a few days ago, Claude Pepper's unnecessary reiteration of his determination to promote the cross state canal regardless of consequences is going to cost him the support of many of his most influential South Florida friends.

One of them, the Bradenton Herald, said this week, "Just as The Herald indicated months ago advocacy of the cross state canal by Senator Pepper will cost him the support he needs in South Florida if he is to succeed himself in the Senate."

"But the Senator has refused to see the plain signs heretofore," the Bradenton paper continues, "and already there is a revolt against him, particularly since his letter in support of the canal, written to the Mayor of Ocala, was published. His assertion in that letter that the canal would yet be built if his support could build it, or words to that effect, was a bit too much for many to take calmly."

"For South Florida, where the vote is, views with plenty of alarm, and with good reason, the construction of a sea level canal as a direct threat not only to its irrigated farms and groves, but what is even more important, destruction of the water supply upon which its cities depend."

"The Miami Herald was quoted in these columns a few days ago as bitterly complaining against the Senator's latest outbreak in favor of the canal. Now comes the Tampa Tribune, which has always supported Mr. Pepper with heartiness, breaking relations with him so far as his ambition to go back to Washington for the long term is concerned. So Mr. Pepper loses the support of the strongest newspaper on the East Coast and by far the most influential paper on the West Coast. A bad beginning for him."

"The Tribune's language is unmistakable. It says, '... we cannot believe that Florida is well represented by a Senator who seeks the political favor of a portion of his state's voters at the expense of great peril to the livelihood and well being of the rest. In our opinion, and to our regret, Claude Pepper has sung his swan song in South Florida.'"

Prorate Of Celery Shipments To Begin On Monday, Feb. 7

Regarding the estimates of the recently employed estimators, Mr. Lettice reported that there was only a four percent variation in the estimates submitted and the number of crates actually shipped from the state during the week.

When this small variation is in evidence that production in each week will be maintained on a much more satisfactory basis than when the growers are allowed to speculate the yield of the celery available for shipment as was the case during the previous season.

the board to discuss the possibilities of a nation-wide celery advertising campaign.

Mr. Hutchinson advised that this matter was out of the jurisdiction of the Committee and indicated that the advertising campaign could be conducted through a voluntary agreement with growers and shippers.

It was learned that the cooperative of an advertising campaign will be in Sanford soon to learn the attitude of celery growers and shippers in the Sanford-Ocala section relative to proposed plan.

Australia will join the procession of nations using the radio to further their interests if favorable action is taken on a recent proposal.

CANDLELIGHT BY NINA OUYERDORF

The kiss of the moonlit pines, The song of the birds for mirth...

In a thicket of silvery leaved sweet bay, in a Florida wood, the birds were singing their heads off, a screech (tanagers) was silhouetted against a soft grey velvet curtain of Spanish moss—a scarp in contrast with a voice? the song came down through the branches of the cypress trees...

"Oh how beautiful," said a silver-haired grey-tressed lady to her silver-haired, grey-tressed husband, and to think that back in Boston, everything is covered with sleet and snow."

On a rustic bridge made of the trunk of an old oak tree, a girl with a shy self-conscious smile and a North Western accent posed while a young man took her picture, a young man who hummed happily, "Roses in December." I can see just how that picture will look in their kodak book some day under the caption, "Honey mooning in Florida."

The scene was the Cypress Gardens near Winter Haven on the shore of Lake Eloise where the great cypress trees stand in the water and make queer designs with their fluted trunks. The characters were the Florida birds and the winter visitors. We should be grateful for these winter visitors of ours, not only for their economic value to the state and their companionship, but for their enthusiasm that helps us to see anew the enchantment that lies around us all the time. Here in Florida we grow so used to the "kiss of the sun" and the "song of the birds" that we are apt to be too "at ease in Zion" and forget to enjoy them.

Cypress Gardens are a good place to start remembering. Tall old cypress trees stand as if dressed for a party with garlands of Spanish moss and coxages of strange air plants; giant tree ferns from Australia grow next to saw grass from the Everglades; the acanthus raises its sculptured leaves, a perfect model for the decoration of a Greek Corinthian column; and the bright crimson of the Christmas berry adds a scarlet gleam to the green along the pathway. Of course, the Cypress Gardens are famed for their glass and water shows, and they bloom in the water. When they do, the whole pool is white with their foam, and the water is sweet with their scent. The glass shows are in bloom now along the edge of the lake, and there are great drifts of them—crimson, rose, saffron, pale pink, orchid, and white—lovely in the original and lovely in the soft coloring of their reflection in the water.

All kinds of queer plants are to be found at Cypress Gardens. There is one called the "Mou-lers," a native of Mexico that seems to feel quite at home in a Florida cypress. Its fruit may be used for salad and makes something like a pineapple, but like a banana, with a faint resemblance to a cantaloupe—and it not really like any of them. I do cry once, and it was funny while I was eating it, but not much fun afterward.

Then there is the Pitcher Plant, a meat eater. It is tall, vase-like leaves, lovely bright colors, and a sort of waxiness that attracts insects, and it is a "come by my side" and it is a "come by my side." For once inside the pitcher insects are prevented from escape by downward pointing hairs and smooth inner walls, and they fall into a fluid at the bottom of the leaf and are absorbed by the plant.

A path of wooden blocks, laid like flagstones with grass peeping between, winds through the trees, along the water's edge through the wood, and to a Camellia Garden. There they stood a group of Southern belles in their party frocks—Sarah Frest, in dusty rose, Pink Perfection in pale pink, and some of the violet-haired cousins from Alabama in breath-taking combinations of blue and white.

There's something fearfully remarkable about the appeal of a Camellia. Perhaps it is the gleam of Dumas' lovely lost lady that still lingers through them. Perhaps it is the memory of all the famous dances of France that in the 1840's were never appeared at a function without the inevitable Camellia. Perhaps it is the thought of the old Albee Barrow who in 1870 raised the first three plants from the seed trees on the coast of Georgia. With me, it is a personal memory of the days when I was very young and used to go to the Camellia Garden to see the new ones that were being raised.

With our Southern 1933 and 1934, our Florida Camellia Garden.

FLORIDA HIGHLIGHTS

Back in 1901, on Feb. 28, before the Plant System became the Atlantic Coast Line, a speed record was established on this road that has never been equalled by any other Southern railroad. A train, consisting of Engine III, one postal car and a sleeper, ran from Fleming, Ga., to Jacksonville, a distance of 148 miles, in 134 minutes. The train attained its greatest speed in a stretch from Screven

Ga., to 74-mile siding, a distance of 4.8 miles in 2 minutes and 40 seconds, for a record of 108 miles per hour. This record was made under the observation of the U. S. postal authorities in competitive tests of speed between the Plant System and a rival road. An important mail contract was at stake. (See History of Jacksonville by T. Frederick Davis.)

WASHINGTON DAYBOOK BY PRESTON GROVER

WASHINGTON—A major factor impelling the United States and Great Britain to get together on a trade pact is that in recent years each has shut the other out of a fat share in its home trade. Each has followed an isolationist policy, the United States pushing up its tariff walls steadily until they reached abruptly an all-time high in 1929 under the Smoot-Hawley act. The United Kingdom (the British Isles, exclusive of the dominions), which once had sold handsomely to the United States, buying largely in return, began taking its own protective steps, which all the dominions abated in interest.

In 1932 at Ottawa, the British empire, including the islands, possessions and dominions, went into conference and came out with an agreement to help each other in the matter of buying and selling of goods, and let the rest of the world do the best it could. Agreement Changed The Picture. Now the 60,000,000 residents of the British Isles always have bought principally food and raw produce, paying for them with manufactured products, shipping and capital services.

The immediate effect of that 1932 Ottawa agreement was to give the dominions an increasing share of the profitable food and material market of the "light" list. In return, they began taking a larger share of British manufactures. Both events are against U. S. trade. Other factors also influenced the shift, but the empire agreement played a big hand. Two brief tables show in part what happened. In 1929 the United States supplied the British Isles with 19.2 per cent of their grain and flour. By 1936 it supplied only 2 per cent. Here is how it ran:

Table with columns for 1929 and 1936, listing various goods like Grain and flour, Pork, Hams, etc.

Table with columns for 1929 and 1936, listing various goods like Grain and flour, Pork, Hams, etc.

These figures were taken from statistics compiled by the London "Statist," an important British trade magazine. The magazine stated that in order to reach an agreement both sides could expect to make sacrifices. Negotiations Due. "In so far as tariffs are lowered on American manufactures the (British) manufacturers will suffer," said "Statist." "Increased imports of foodstuffs will strike at the dominions."

Only the islands and Canada have indicated they would come in on the negotiations. But all the dominions are looked upon as likely to come in presently. Negotiations open in March. The importance of the negotiations may be surmised when it is recalled that together the United States and the British Empire represent 80 per cent of the world's trade.
