brought Europe nearer to the brink of war than since the Spanish revolution began a year ago, all hope is not lost yet and we may expect the diplomats of John Bull to pull some trick out of the bag that will save the situation.

It has already been rumored that England has been negotiating with Hitler, a sort of bribe, if you will, to wean that menacing dictator away from Il Duce. The terms of the "bribe," it has been suggested, consist of three parts—the three things that Germany needs must: raw materials, an outlet for exports, and a loan.

If Hitler succumbs to this tempting offer, and it is reliably reported that he is pondering it, Mussolini will have to do a lot of backing down, for he knows that without Germany's help his chances for success in any military action in the Mediterranean would be practically n. However, if Hitler decides to go along with Mussolini the probability of a general war will become almost a certainty. Parisian newspapers have already spoken of huge supplies of war materials being collected on the Franco-Spanish border for trans-shipment to the Loyalist government of Spain, in case Mussolini and Hitler continue to aid the Rebels. It is said that these materials include 200 fightthe Rebels. It is said that these materials include 200 fighting aircraft, 100 tanks, and many hundreds of field guns of the latest type and also much ammunition.

If these supplies are sent to the government forces, Italy and Germany will redouble their efforts in behalf of Franco, and so will begin a race to see which side can be of most assistance to the cause which it sponsors. Such a race can lead to only one conclusion and that is open conflict between the nations involved. That part of the world which is ruled by sanity is praying that the reckless di-plomacy of the dictators will be thwarted by the calmness of the British in their sincere efforts to prevent a repetiion of 1914-18.
