LEAVE FOR ITALY

LONDON, Apr. 10.—(AP)—370 British warships were authorized to leave for Italy today.

FATALLY INJURED

MIAMI, Apr. 10.—(AP)—A 25-year-old man was fatally injured today when he was struck by a car.

Which Way America?

While Congress is considering the repeal or amendment of our ill-conceived Neutrality Act, which lends considerable aid and comfort to all aggressor nations while denying help to those little countries which have been attacked or are about to be gobbled up by hungry neighbors, and to those great democracies which might come to their assistance, it is well for the people of the United States themselves to be thinking what their attitude will be in the event of another world war.

For it is the people of the United States who will have to decide whether we are again to try to make the world safe for democracy, whether we are to fight another war to end wars, whether we are to seek complete isolation from the rest of the world and tend strictly to our own business, whether like China and Ethiopia we are to hide our heads in the sand and try to imagine that we are safe and that no one will ever attack us. We may not realize it now, but the voice of the people will determine our policy.

Shall we, then, do as most of us believe England should have done months ago, and recognizing that nothing will ever satisfy the dictators, march out to meet them and give them battle before they become any stronger? Should we make a bold statement that in the event England and France are attacked by the Axis, we will immediately send them our arms, ammunition and other supplies, and if need be, with the Army and Navy?

Such a declaration might go a long way toward preventing any European war from occurring at all for it is very doubtful if Germany and Italy would dare to take on the combined power of France, England and the United States all at one time. And if a war should come, it might be concluded more quickly and at less expense in money and lives if the United States threw its full strength to the support of the democracies on the first day.

But there are some who say that European affairs are no business of this country and that the United States should neither get into the war at first nor later. We should keep out of it, they say, and mind our own business. Certainly if that were possible to do, that would be the best way. We want none of our young men wrecked on any more battlefields of Europe. We want no more of our good American dollars sent overseas, never to return, on a mission which is apt to turn out as unhappily as the last one.

But in trying to keep out of foreign involvement, what about our overseas commerce? Should we say that because the rest of the world is at war and that we want to keep out of such wars, we will stop trading with other nations? If we do, millions of American workmen will be thrown out of employment. The standard of living of every one of us will fall to the lowest level in generations. There will be a depression the like of which this country has never seen before.

And if we put our commerce on a "cash and carry" basis, are we not then clearly going to the aid of Britain and France, and completely abandoning neutrality though we still keep up the pretense? England and France have all the ships with which to carry our supplies, nearly all the cash with which to pay for them. Germany and Italy under such circumstances would be completely shut off from American production, while France and England would have ready access to it.

Well, you say, what of it? It's as fair for one as it is for another. We will sell to Germany and Italy if they will come and get it and pay for it on the same terms as France and England. That may sound fair enough to us, but it would not to Germany and Italy. And they would not like our selling to their enemies. Without a shadow of a doubt they would take immediate steps to stop it.

They might content themselves at first by sinking British and French ships carrying American supplies. They would, of course, sink any American ships they thought might have supplies for their enemies. We might put up with that, but they would not stop there. If we continued to aid France and England with the products of American factories, they would soon undertake to bomb those factories out of production.

And if we refuse to sell to anyone, what then? We would, of course, be indirectly contributing very strongly to a Fascist victory, a policy which very few in this country would care to follow. But presuming that we followed it, in the interest of peace, we might expect to come out very well, providing of course, France and England finally triumphed without our help. But suppose Germany and Italy, probably with the aid of Japan, should win.

Is it likely that these Fascist powers, having triumphed over the rest of the world would leave the great riches of the American continent alone. There are those who say they would. They say that if Germany and Italy had control of most of the European continent as well as the continent of Africa and most of Asia, they would be satisfied. They would not want anything in South America or anything belonging to the United States.

But these same people said Italy would be satisfied when Ethiopia was conquered. They said Germany would be satisfied with Austria, with Szechuan, with Czechoslovakia. They said when the Spanish war was liquidated to Italy's satisfaction Italy would be satisfied. They said all Japan wanted was Manchuria, then North China, then all of China.

And when Japan demands the Philippine Islands, these people will say, give them to her. They are not worth fighting for, and they will satisfy her. And when she demands Alaska, they will say, give that to her too. Anything to avoid a war. And when Japs land on the coast of California, these same people, if they happen to reside in Florida, New York or Massachusetts, will say, "Well, let Japan have California, that will satisfy her."

And as the people of the United States have got to make up their minds which way America they have got to decide whether they will fight now or later. And they have got to determine where they will draw the line.

Britain Warns Italy Against Greek Invasion

arm was about to be thrown prospectively around Greece.

In Paris, both Britain and France were reported considering joint military and naval demonstrations to back up their eastern European allies against further Italian-German expansion.

Meanwhile authoritative circles in Rome disclosed Italy had reinforced her troops in Dodecanese Islands in the Aegean sea off Greece.

A number of conferences took place yesterday, in which army and navy leaders also were consulted, but the uneasy situation last night was termed "somewhat easier" in view of the Italian assurances Signor Crotta gave Italy.

Alarming rumors had swept London earlier that Italy planned to use Athens only as a springboard for moves against Yugoslavia or Greece.

Halifax, it was learned, told the Italian Charge d'Affaires of "the serious view" taken by the British Government of the action against Albania and of "the strength of British public feeling on the subject."

The Earl of Perth, British Ambassador to Rome, was understood to have made similar representations there.

Opposition leaders have urged the recall and there were unofficial predictions that the legislature would reassemble in the middle of the week for a debate on foreign affairs.

Chamberlain talked with Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax after the latter had received Chamberlain, Giuseppe, Greek Minister to London.

Lord Halifax conferred at the office of the Committee of Imperial Defense in Whitehall in the afternoon with General Viscount Gort, chief of Imperial General Staff, Vice Admiral A. B. Cunningham, Deputy Chief of Naval Staff, and Sir Alexander Cadogan, permanent under secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Chamberlain meanwhile took advantage of the British spring vacation to drive to New York for tea with Mrs. Chamberlain.

Chamberlain who conferred with the Foreign Secretary were Charles Clegg, British Ambassador to London, and Sir Robert Vansittart, chief of the British mission in Washington, D. C.

Reports which were widely circulated yesterday that London would not attempt to force Italian withdrawal into the Aegean sea off Greece, or the Aegean sea off Greece, were said to be "unfounded."

Czechoslovakia garrisoned in Downing Street, police reinforcements were called in to keep the spectators on a move.

King George VI, who is spending the Easter holiday at Windsor Castle, was kept informed of developments by the Foreign Office.

FHA Administrator Announces That Lower Terms Have Brought Increase

With the Spring building season now under way in earnest and with Federal Housing Administration figures running at record levels, Administrator Stewart McDonald emphasized today the fact that more funds and cheaper terms are available for home financing under the FHA plan than ever before in history.

"Applications for FHA insurance of small-home mortgages have exceeded $25,000,000 a week for the past three weeks," Mr. McDonald said, "the heaviest volume ever received in our offices for a comparable period. Each of these three weeks has shattered the previous high reached last Summer. Applications have numbered more than 17,000, of which about 11,000 represent mortgages on homes to be constructed."

"Figures for 1939 to date have far exceeded last year, when good results in residential construction were brought about by amendments to the National Housing Act."

Leaders increase
 To meet this demand there are, fortunately, more lending institutions now actively making FHA-insured mortgage loans than at any other time, and the rates being charged are declining in many areas below the 6 1/2 percent maximum cost permitted by the FHA's regulations. This includes interest and insurance. A uniform maximum interest rate which institutions may charge now prevails throughout the country, even in those sections where funds for home financing are not relatively plentiful.

"The prospective home buyer should encounter no difficulty in obtaining a mortgage loan insured by FHA and made under these liberal terms. The application, of course, must originate with an approved lending institution—that is, a bank, building and loan association, life-insurance company, mortgage company, or a similar type of agency—a share of the interest, as
