Highways, Schools Represent Most Of State, Local Capital Expenditures

With expension of highway and school aystems setting the pace, State and local government combined have spent a total of almost $60 billion in the 1947-1955 period bined have ment a total of as capital outlays on public works, according to data recently made public jointly by the U. S. Departments of Labor and Commerce.

These capital expenditures for the last nine years added up to about as much as the total state and municipal spending on all sublic works for the four and one-half deades from the turn of the century through World War II. Higher prices, of course, represent an important influence in the magnitude of the spending figures today as compared with the past. Two other major factors are the spectacular growth of population, notably in the suburbs, over recent years, and the abnormally low level of public works spending during the Secand World War.

The level attained by State and local capital expenditures has been a significant influence on the economy and its expansion. This is particularly true with respect to construction, which has been taking about 25 cents of every dollar for State and local expenditures in recent years.

The impact on the capital market also has been substantial. In the early post-World War II period, State and local governments combined borrowed less than half their annual capital expenditures in each of these years. The borrowing proportion was up to a new high of about 60 per cent in 1985, and came to an estimated $61/2 billions of new funds exclusive of a substantial amount of additional borrowing by State and local governments for other than capital outlays,

Such expenditures in 1955 rose to a new high of more than $4 billions, and for the 1947-1955 period as a whole amounted to around $221/4 billions. School expenditures were second, with close to $8 billions spent on new classrooms and other educational buildings last year and almost $14 billions for the 1947-1955 period. Highways and schools together now represent more than three-fifths of all State and local capital expenditures.

Have the Cincinnati Rediegs, who igured "to go as far as our pitching will carry us," reached the end of the line?

It was Manager Birdle Tebbetts who tagged his pitching the big "if' in the National eLague pennant chase, and now that his notso-robust Redlegs are slumping at the plate just when the pitching is in need of a lift, the Cincys are hurtin'.
