

4 Need Rescue At Capsized Boat...And They Wait

By GEOFFREY POUNDS
 Herald Staff Writer

Four members of an Orlando family, clinging for their lives to a capsized sailboat in Lake Monroe this week while Volusia and Seminole County sheriff's units refrained from sending help.

"We were partially at fault. There's no excuse, but it won't happen again... ever," said Seminole County Sheriff John Polk.

At about 3 p.m. Tuesday an Orlando man, his wife, two sons and a nephew were sailboating on the lake when their boat tipped over, said Bert Rivers, an employee at the Florida Power plant in Sanford.

Rivers said he was on duty when a man crawled out of the water and approached the plant yelling for help. Rivers said the man told him he had been in the water swimming for two hours trying to reach shore for assistance. The man said he left his family with orders to hang on to the overturned boat, according to Rivers.

While Rivers and the man put a Florida Power boat into the water and let out to rescue the family, another plant employee phoned the Volusia County Sheriff's Department.

"We finally found them and pulled them back to shore. It took us about an hour," said Rivers.

Rivers said the youngest child was three years old and was shivering when the rescue boat reached him. He said he offered the child his shirt but the mother told him the child was not cold

"Just very scared."

Bob Reichenbach, who witnessed the call for help, said Volusia County authorities said it would take considerable time for a boat to be sent. He said Seminole County deputies when contacted, referred them back to Volusia authorities.

The family's name could not be recalled by any of the parties involved. None were seriously injured.

Sgt. Linda Mercer of the Volusia County Sheriff's Department said she could not find a record of any call for help Tuesday in connection with a boater in distress. Cpl. Pete Slaughter of the department operates the water patrol for western Volusia County. He was on duty Tuesday afternoon, but said he received no request for help.

However, Polk said he listened to a tape of the call Tuesday in which Volusia County indicated they would handle the matter. Polk was not on duty at the time of the call Tuesday.

He said that since the call originated from Enterprise in Volusia County and since his department had an understanding that help was being sent, no Seminole units were dispatched to the scene.

"Even if it wasn't our call, we should have sent help. In the past we have done so," Polk said.

The sheriff said he sent out a terse memo to all deputies Friday stating that in the future all such reports will be given attention regardless of whether another county already has sent help.

Palibearers at funeral of Sanford firefighter, Lt. William L. Price

Hundreds Attend Funeral Of Sanford Firefighter

Hundreds of friends, fellow firefighters and officials gathered at the Church of Nazarene on Sanford Avenue on Saturday to say farewell to William Lloyd Price.

Price, 36, of 314 Lakeview Ave., Sanford, died Wednesday night while battling a downtown fire. The lieutenant with the Sanford Fire Department had been a firefighter 15 years.

"Greater love has no man than he who would lay down his life for his friends," said fire chief George Harriett during the funeral service, which was conducted by Rev. Jack Hinton.

Harriett said Price was uncharacteristic in his concern for others. That trait was shown Wednesday when Price tried to extinguish a fire that could have injured many, the fire chief said.

"No words can express how much we have lost," said Harriett. "The good Lord doesn't make many men like Lt. Price."

Mourners began assembling at the church by 9 a.m. When the services began at 10, the crowd had filled the church and portions of the adjacent parking lot.

Representatives from every county fire and police department attended. There were also firemen from Tampa, Titusville, Fort Orange, Melbourne and other departments present.

Price was to be buried in Oaklawn Memorial Park.

The veteran firefighter was a native of Savannah, Ga. He moved to Sanford 23 years ago. He graduated from Seminole High School and attended Ocala Fire College. He served in the U.S. Navy. Survivors include his wife Jeanette.

Price was the second Sanford firefighter to die in the line of duty during the city's 100-year history. On Oct. 27, 1967, Hubert Ray Daffron, 27, was killed when he leaped from a fire truck, fell and was crushed when the truck backed up.

The blaze that claimed Price's life was said to be the worst in Sanford's history. The fire destroyed a half city block and completely razed the Seminole Pet Supply building at 200 Magnolia Ave. Preliminary damage estimates ranged from $200,000 to $500,000.

When the fire started, Price was not on duty. But he rushed to the scene and was the first to arrive. He and another fireman, Edwin Brooklyn, coupled a hose and approached the building. Both men were buried beneath bricks and fiery debris when a burning wall collapsed on them.

Price and Brooklyn were taken to Seminole Memorial Hospital. At 3 p.m. Wednesday, two hours after he was pulled out from under the collapsed wall, Price died. Brooklyn on Saturday was reported in satisfactory condition at the hospital, where he is recovering from deep cuts to his left foot, a fractured toe and a separation of the pelvis.

Lake Mary Backs Hospital Conversion

By RICH THOMPSON
 Herald Staff Writer

The Lake Mary City Council has become the first elected panel in Seminole County to formally endorse a reorganization plan proposed by the board of Seminole Memorial Hospital trustees.

The council passed a resolution Thursday requesting the Seminole Board of County Commissioners "to act promptly and affirmatively to establish Seminole Memorial Hospital as a private, not-for-profit institution."

Two days earlier, the county commissioners delayed action on the SMH trustees' request so that proposals from other hospital groups interested in taking over operating authority of the 25-year-old hospital on First Street in Sanford could be considered.

Reorganization is being studied by the county commission in light of reports that the hospital must undergo major repairs and renovations if it is to remain competitive with other area hospitals. A reorganization which would convert the hospital from a county-owned facility to a private institution would permit the sale of tax-exempt bonds. That financial advantage is not open to government hospitals.

The Lake Mary resolution, formulated by Councilman Pat Southward, also asked the board of trustees of the hospital to seek "establishment of a health care facility in the mid-Seminole area" regardless of whether the facility was located "within the city of Lake Mary or not."

Southward's resolution stated that the health, safety and welfare interests of Lake Mary citizens were involved in any proposed re-organization and

Pharmacist Points To Potential Peril Drugs Plus Drugs Equals Death

Kearns' Ann Quintill stated that combinations of the medicine to 1978 when she found into in cause after receiving a medical of symptoms and alcohol consumption.

Quintill, 42, is the mother of a 12-year-old boy who has been hospitalized in the past for seizures.

"I have been having trouble in taking my medicine," she said. "I don't consider them to be medicine." Kearns explained.

Reorganization drugs like tranquilizers and sedatives can be dangerous when combined with alcohol, she said. "I don't know if I should be taking them or not," she said.

Quintill said she had been told by a doctor that she should not take any more medicine. "I don't know if I should be taking them or not," she said.

Quintill said she had been told by a doctor that she should not take any more medicine. "I don't know if I should be taking them or not," she said.

Avoiding Danger

Pharmacist points to potential peril of drug combinations. Mixing alcohol with tranquilizers will produce a cumulative additive effect, Kearns said. "You are going to have sedation from the tranquilizer. You may have taken it several times but you're in a normal state. Alcohol, which is another sedative, depresses the central nervous system and enhances the effect of the tranquilizer."

Common non-prescription drugs like aspirin and acetaminophen can be dangerous when combined with alcohol, she said. "I don't know if I should be taking them or not," she said.

50% Cost Overruns At County Juvenile Facility $180,000 Needed To Complete Center

Cost overruns in excess of 50 percent have forced Seminole County commissioners to seek additional funds in the amount of $180,000 to complete renovation and expansion of the juvenile detention center.

County administrator Roger Neiswender told the commissioners this week that the $345,000 allocated during last year for improvements to the facility at Five Points would not be enough to complete the work. Due to inflation and rising costs, he said, another $180,000 would be required.

For 9 Years, He Has Led Double Life

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — For the last nine years, Alfred Kasab has led a double life.

A dried egg salesman from New Jersey by profession, Kasab's location has been the relentless pursuit of the man he thinks killed his stepdaughter and her two young children nine and a half years ago at Fort Bragg.

Haunted by the brutal slayings, Kasab first prowled the halls of Congress and the U.S. Justice Department demanding that the investigation into his family's deaths be reopened. Endless hours were also spent courting reporters, poring through transcripts of court proceedings, and playing the role of a self-appointed investigator.

Kasab's central role in the reopening of the case against his stepson-in-law, Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald, has made him anything but a hero — a fact he readily accepts.

Defense attorneys have labeled him a fanatic unable to live in the present. Those charged with prosecuting MacDonald in a Raleigh U.S. District Court confide privately that Kasab is a mild nuisance with which they have learned to live.

MacDonald's trial on charges of beating and stabbing to death his wife, Colette, 26, and daughters, Kimberly, 6, and Kristen, 2, enters its fourth week Monday under the watchful eye of Kasab, who along with his wife Mildred, have rented a Raleigh apartment and plan to stay in the area for the expected six to eight weeks of trial.

At first MacDonald's most ardent supporter, Kasab said he began to change his mind about the personable young doctor's conviction for the slayings after he had seen a transcript of a military proceeding in which the charges against MacDonald were found to be "untrue."

In a lengthy interview last week, Kasab recalled that his first step was to travel to Washington where he had spent four weeks distributing pamphlets to "every member of Congress" detailing the Army's handling of the case.

"It was popular to attack the Army in those days," he said. "I figured if I went to Washington and screamed that my daughter and granddaughters had been murdered and nothing was being done, I would have been just another grieving parent."

He said both the House and Senate Armed Services Committees looked into the investigation and ordered the case reopened. Flipping through a loose-leaf binder at his Raleigh apartment, Kasab displays a letter from a Nixon aide in 1971 that said the investigation was "not a model of its kind" but was the work of "overworked investigators."

By the end of 1971, Kasab said a report consisting of "thousands of pages" was sent to the U.S. Justice Department, which gave him "the royal roundabout" at first.

He then filed a criminal complaint in U.S. District Court asking for either a special prosecutor or a grand jury. He eventually got both, and MacDonald was indicted after six months of testimony before a grand jury from scores of witnesses.

"The federal government rarely prosecutes a murder," Kasab said, adding that much of the credit for the case being reopened should go to the press.

"I am so grateful to the press," he said. "The thing that made the whole thing possible is the power of the press. The Army was afraid of the press. The government was afraid of the power of the press."

He said his obsession with the case has changed the lives of both he and his wife, who gave up all their social activities to devote time to the case.

"People have said 'There's nothing you can do about it. Give it up. You sooner or later have to give it up,'" Kasab said. "But, I didn't."

His wife, Colette's natural mother, said the couple replaced "emotionalism with drive" after the deaths.

The marriage is the second for both. Kasab's first wife and daughter were killed during a "buz-bomb" attack in London during the World War II, while he served with the Canadian army. Mrs. Kasab's first husband was the victim of a suicide.

They married while Colette was a young child, and Mrs. Kasab, a frail, nervous-looking woman, is fond of recounting how her daughter looked upon Kasab as her real father.

Both say they still often think of Colette.

"She was so kind," said Mrs. Kasab. "She wouldn't ever hurt a person's feelings."

She recalled that as a child, her daughter walked her bicycle to school each day, so a young neighbor who suffered from polio would not have to walk alone.

"That was just a typical thing, because of her kindness to everyone," said Mrs. Kasab.

Last Chance For Condor?

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Wildlife biologists this week began a last, desperate effort to save the majestic California condor from extinction.

They will try to breed North America's largest land bird in captivity in hopes of increasing the dwindling species, now down to about 30 birds — 20 less than two years ago.

Most of the bald-headed scavengers, which have wingspans of up to 12 feet and are known to live as long as 45 years, are found in the hills of Ventura, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles counties.

Their threatened extinction is being brought about mainly because of land development near their habitats, the experts say.

Condors are private creatures and wary of human beings.

"They may not nest in an area within a mile of even a dirt road and shun a half-mile of a trail," said National Audubon Society biologist John Borneman of Ventura.

Under the current proposal, about 10 birds — five pairs — will be captured, perhaps as early as next year, for breeding. The first four are to go to the San Diego Zoo and others will be sent to zoos in Los Angeles and Santa Cruz.

While most biologists feel the captive mating program is necessary, they are only cautiously optimistic about the outcome.

"It's definitely a last-ditch effort," Borneman said. "There's no guarantee it will work, but it's the only chance we've got."

Even if the program is successful, it will be 30 years before California condors in captivity will be returned to their native habitat, Borneman said.

Officials with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Audubon Society met with California's Department of Fish and Game endangered species office this week to plan the program.

Under the current proposal, about 10 birds — five pairs — will be captured, perhaps as early as next year, for breeding. The first four are to go to the San Diego Zoo and others will be sent to zoos in Los Angeles and Santa Cruz.

Local Baseball Teacher Unhappy Over Changes

Baseball instructor Wes Rinker, a man who has spent most of his life practicing, playing, and teaching baseball, is unhappy with the changes in the game.

"I've trained over 62 colleges and 42 high schools this spring at my field, (Memorial Park) in Sanford and I am discouraged with the changes in baseball," Rinker said.

"I was so upset, it was sad," Rinker explained. "The park was being used for an occasional high school football game and it was severely run-down."

"I leased the land and began renovations," Rinker said. "The field was a mess. I removed four truck loads of broken glass and cans."

"What about Rinker's future?" I plan to start a girl's softball clinic next year, plus I hope to publish my book "Throwing a Baseball." I have worked on the book for some time and expect for it to be completed when I go on the road next summer," Rinker said.

"We hope to be conducting a clinic in Japan in the fall and I'll be traveling to Columbus, Ohio; Vermont and cities in Kentucky," Rinker said.

$400,000 Renovation Effort Wiped Out

WASHINGTON (UPI) — It is the only church Jessie Poole, 85, has ever known.
 She had been praying there since 1927 — the year Charles Lindbergh made his historic trans-Atlantic flight, Babe Ruth hit 60 home runs, and Al Johnson ushered in the folkies with "Jazz Singer."
 Now the John Wesley African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church lies in ruins from a fire last week that wiped out a $400,000 renovation effort funded mostly with raffles, bake sales, dinners and magazine sales drives.
 "I just had to see it," Mrs. Poole said. "It's the only church I have ever attended."
 "I was practically born in that church," said Clara Hill, 67, as she stood, near tears looking at the charred rubble.
 "I don't know what we're going to do now. I guess we'll have to start all over again."
 Start again is exactly what the pastor, the Rev. Cecil Bishop, plans to do.
 "John Wesley Church did not burn. Only the building that housed John Wesley burned," he told his congregation Sunday from a borrowed pulpit.
 "The John Wesley AME Zion church is alive and well in Washington, D.C."
 Long a symbol of the Civil Rights movement, the 63-year-old church was designated the national church of the AME Zion faith in 1936.
 It is located in northwest Washington in a neighborhood undergoing transition from its now seedy appearance due to an influx of young middle-class families renovating old homes.
 In May, the 4,000-member congregation — many of whom now live in the suburbs but return faithfully to attend services — had finished a $400,000 renovation project on the brick, Gothic-style church that seated about 1,200.
 Then last week, a fire started in a hot plate while meals were being prepared for a senior citizens' lunch program. It spread to some loose papers, then to the roof and steeple. Luckily, there were no injuries but the church was gutted.
 Louise Thompson, 84, was one of about 20 regulars in the lunch program. "I eat here every day for lunch," he said. "I pay 50 cents for it. I couldn't fix no dinner at home for 50 cents."
 "It's hurt a lot," said Douglas Rich, 76. "It's saddened most all of the church members."
 But the membership's spirit remains positive, said Bishop, one of a long line of John Wesley ministers active in the NAACP.

hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:
 Help! My pink linen tablecloth, matching napkins and several pastel linen towels are completely polka-dotted with black mildew spots, having been too long in the fridge.

Something urgent came up after the linens had been sprinkled for ironing, and it was several days before I remembered them being there.

What can I do to remove all the terrible spots without ruining the lovely pastel colors?

Please use only my initials: I don't want everyone to know how poor my memory is!

H.J.

Oh, dear, oh dear! I know what you're going through. No matter how hard we try, that pesky nuisance catches up with us sooner or later.

Mildew is a bacteria; therefore, it grows, so you can't just brush it off. All you do is spread the spores.

The best way to treat mildew is while the stain is still fresh. So take it outside and brush it off first.

Depending on the fabric, you can run the garment(s) through the wash with some chlorine bleach, hydrogen peroxide or sodium perborate bleach.

If the article is perma-press or double knit, you can soak the area in lemon juice and then rub salt into it, letting it stand overnight, or placing in the sun.

We've been told you can even soak it in naturally soured milk overnight, wash and rinse, and then expose to sunlight until dry.

I sure hope this helps you restore those pretty linens back to their original freshness for that next special occasion.

But, in the meantime, those of you who aren't presently bothered by this "uninvited guest," clip this hint out and attach it to the laundry room door, or some handy place, so when and if he does come calling, you'll be prepared.

Keep smiling.

DEAR HELOISE:
 For those who love to paint-by-number with oil paints, here is a useful hint.

Since they only give you one brush, it's hard to do the small areas.

So, use a toothpick to stir the paint and then use the same toothpick to paint the small areas.

STRIKE UP THE BAND!

DEAR HELOISE:
 Many people who have braces must wear elastic rubber bands.

When traveling, or staying at a friend's house for the night, they can get lost quite easily.

I just slip the number I need over the handle of my toothbrush. Since the handle narrows just before the brush, the elastics don't get stretched. Also, they won't fall off because of the wider handle below.

Raise Standards For Security Officers, Police Say

By SHARON CARRASCO
Herald Staff Writer

Seminole County police officials apparently agree security officers should be subjected to higher standards of training and not just be "any yoyo" off the street. Recently, top officials from Sanford and four other police departments in Seminole County were asked to respond to a 10-question survey whose topics varied from police strikes to firearm control.

Participants included the police chiefs of Winter Springs, Altamonte Springs, Casselberry and Longwood. The National Association of Chiefs of Police authored the survey and tallied the responses of 23,000 police chiefs and sheriffs.

With 1 million private security officers (of an average age of 56) employed, police officials were asked if it is time for police and sheriffs to assist in the training of security officers.

All five local police officials said they favored higher training standards for security officers and said yes. The association tallied 87 percent of its 23,000 respondents agreed.

"People pay taxes to support law enforcement units," said Sgt. William Bernosky Jr. of the Sanford Police Department. "The government and people insist on the rigorous training of all law enforcement officers. Then private industry comes in and hires any yoyo they want."

Greg Manning, Longwood police chief, said stricter training standards for security officers should have been instituted "years ago." They should be required to go through the same training as an authorized officer, he said.

"There are too many jerks," Manning said. "They couldn't make a living as a soda pop man much less a security guard." Security officers are required by Florida law to be licensed in order to carry firearms, Bernosky said. But that is only one facet of the gamut of training needed to be effective, he said.

On another question, police officials drew a consensus that the death penalty instituted nationwide for killing a police officer

'Private industry comes in and hires any yoyo they want'

would act as a deterrent. The association's survey indicated 91.6 percent felt this would deter the deaths of police officers.

Lt. Steve Garver of Altamonte Springs police department said the death penalty should be utilized for the death of any, not just a police officer.

"I feel anybody convicted of first degree murder should get the death penalty," Garver said. "An eye for an eye for anybody."

"Studies have shown the prisoners themselves agree if there had been a death penalty they wouldn't have committed murder," said John Govorukh, police chief of Winter Springs.

"I think the death penalty is a deterrent," Manning said. "The idea of sitting in that electric chair and having my eye balls pop out doesn't thrill me at all."

On the question of gun control, three local police officials felt there should be no restrictions on purchasing guns. Others felt some restrictions were necessary to guard against having the guns in the wrong hands. Sixty-five percent of the association's participants were opposed to any form of gun control.

"Any society throughout history in which the government controlled the citizens' right to arm themselves has fallen," Bernosky said. "There's no need to control firearms. Guns don't kill, people kill."

Police officials did not favor the organization of a national police force to replace that of state, county and local police. An undisputed "no" came from 93.4 percent of the respondents in the association survey.

"I think the idea smacks of a police state," Bernosky said. "You lose too much control when you get to state-wide," Manning said. "You have better control at the local level. The government can't govern itself, much less have a nation-wide police agency."

Garver added: "Each individual officer has a great deal of pride for his own department. It would take the personal pride away from it if you put it on a national level."

"We feel our department is best and second to none."

On the question of exposure in the media, officials were asked to choose one of the three answers:

"The news media on all levels of reporting, in your opinion, is: fair and impartial in reporting; not fair or impartial in reporting facts, or no opinion."

Of the five departments, the majority said local media coverage was fair and impartial or something of the equivalent. Manning said coverage was "between poor and no opinion."

Casselberry Police Chief George Karber said proper coverage and accuracy depended on the individual reporter and would not make a blanket statement about the media.

According to the association's survey, 73.3 percent consider the news media "either fair nor impartial," 17.3 percent regard it as fair, and 9.4 percent had no opinion.

On other questions, a majority of local police officials agreed: A law enforcement officer who strikes and is in violation of the state law should not be allowed to return to work;

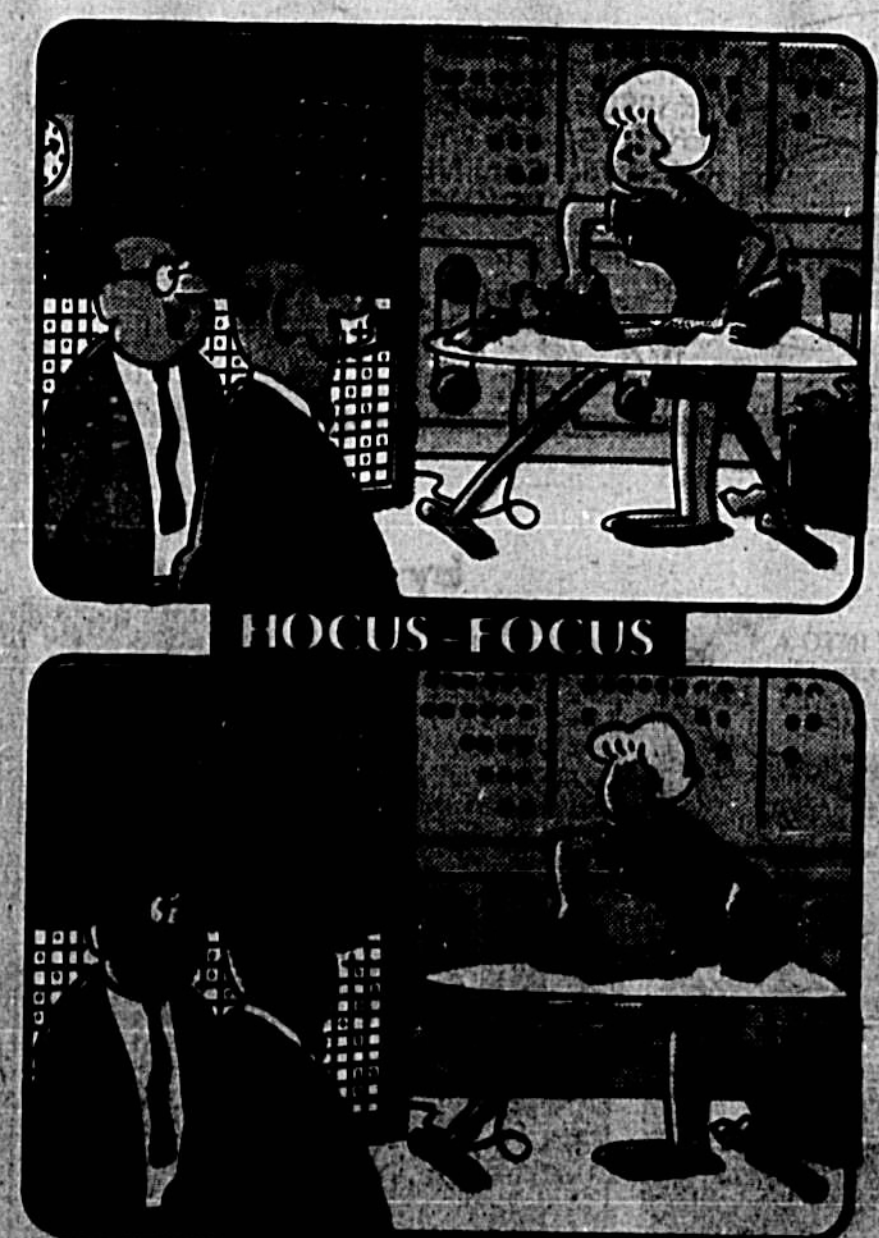

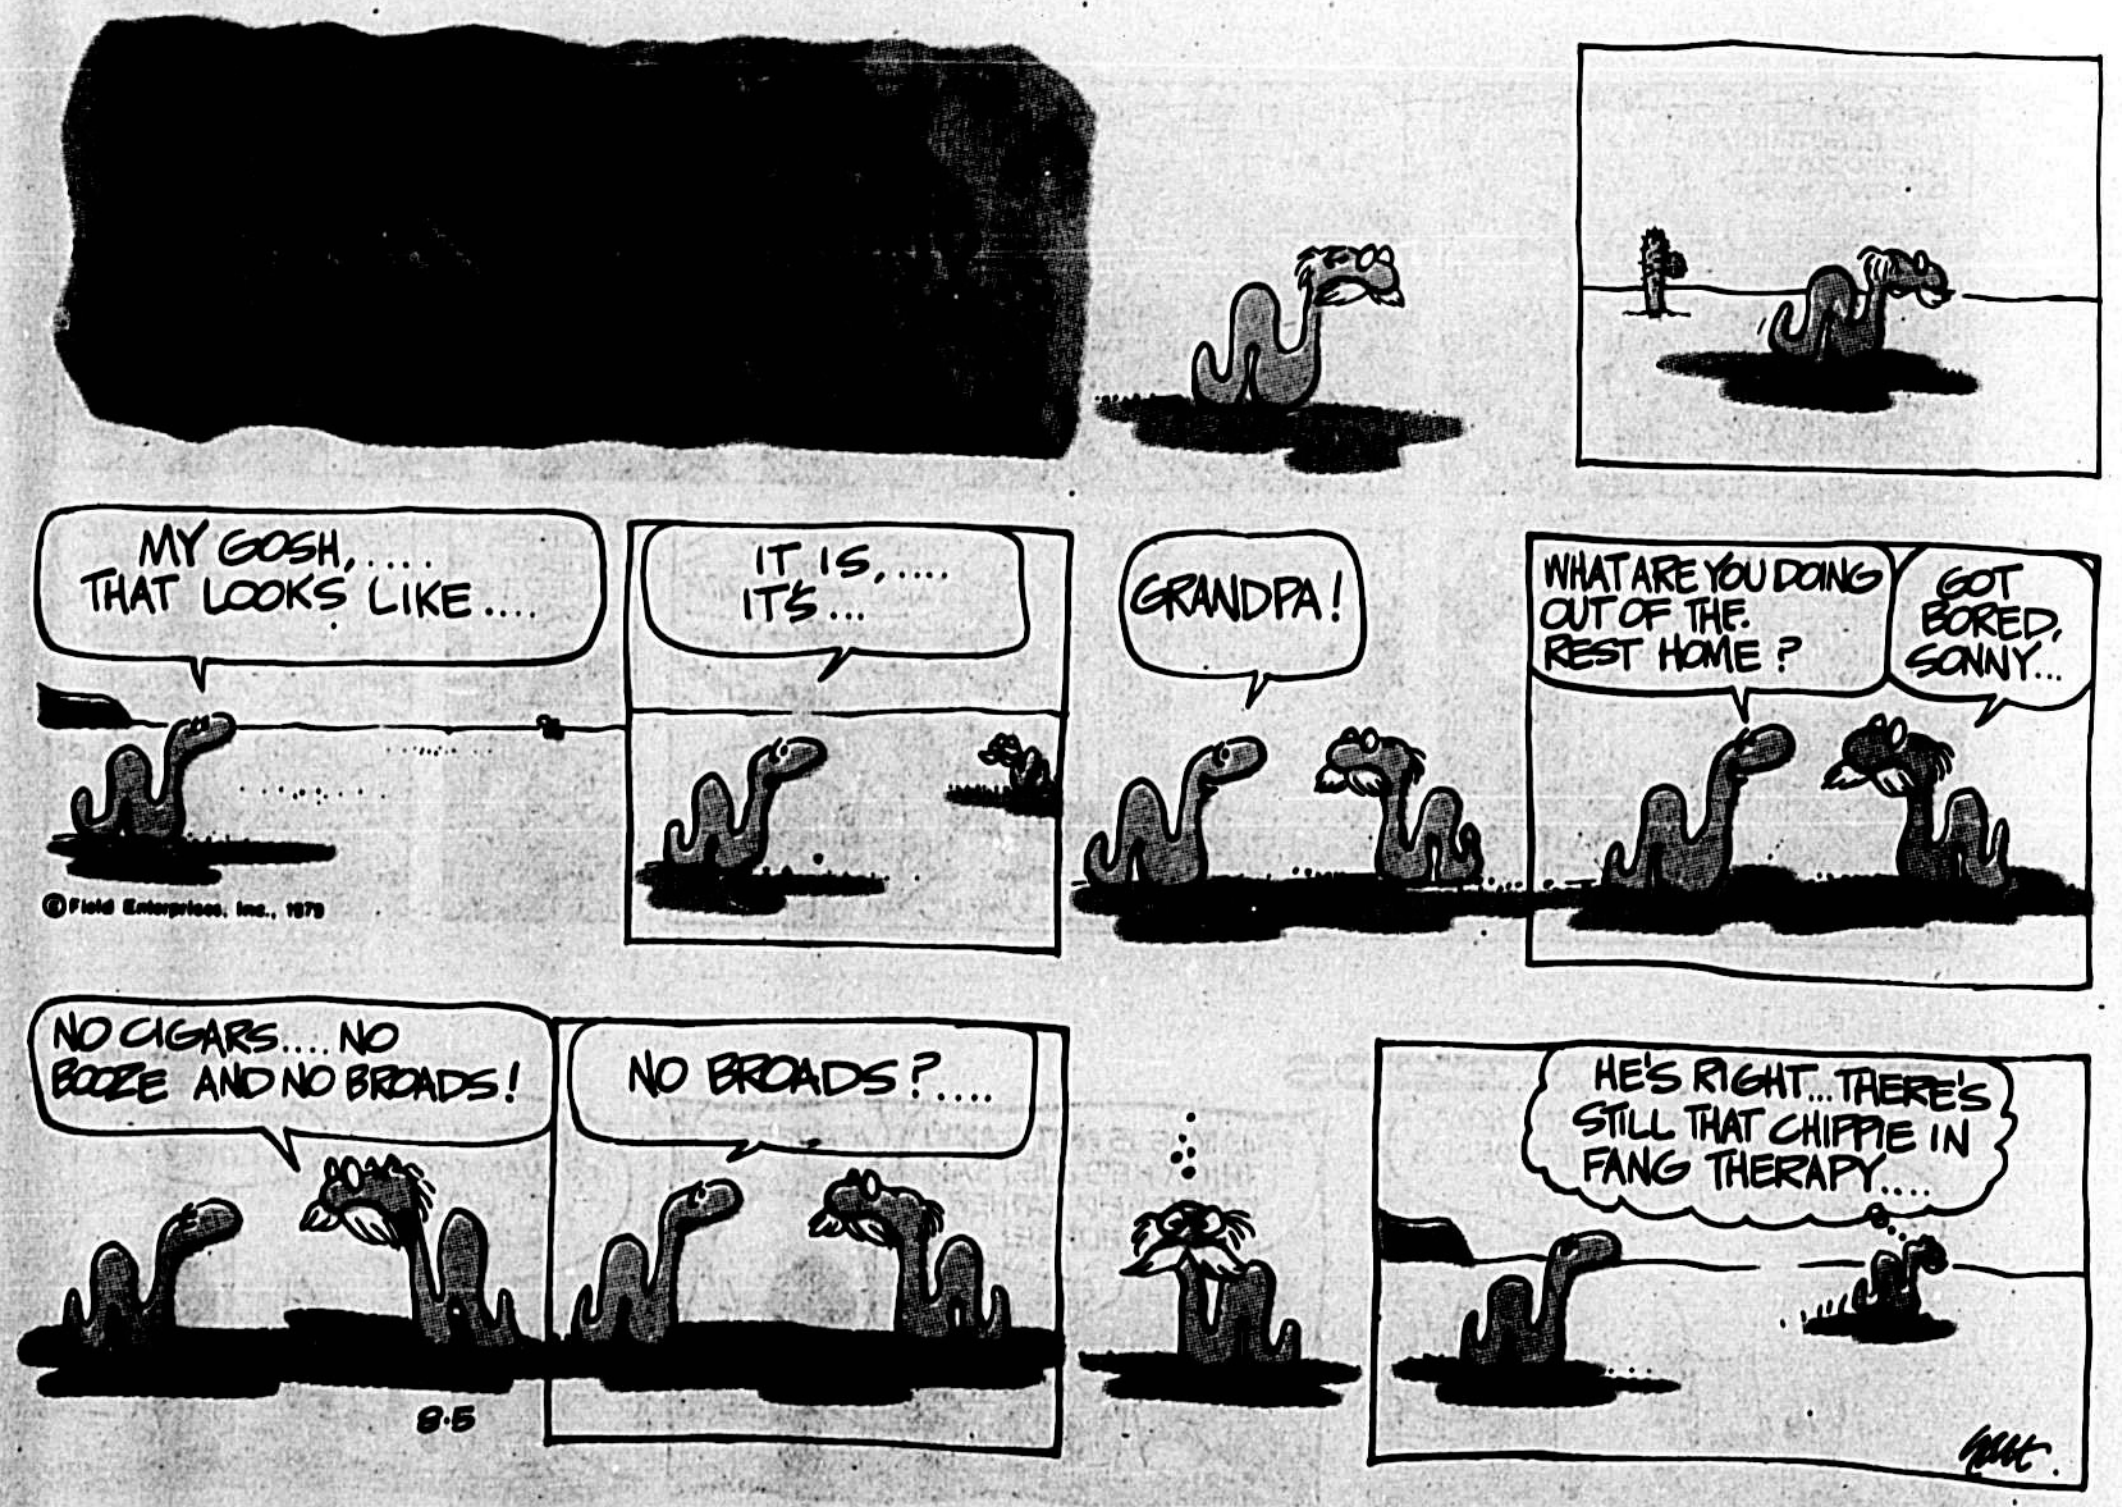

The Law Enforcement Administration Assistance (LEAA) overall has benefited police departments by providing funds for training, advanced technology and sophisticated equipment;

The United Nations should be retained in this country despite the utilization of our tax dollars and police personnel to "maintain control."

Police officials couldn't pinpoint a single cause on which to blame the increase in crime but suggested more stringent court penalties and parental responsibility might help curb it.

On rating the image of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, most police officials declined to comment, since their department's contact with the federal agency is minimal. Bernosky vehemently upheld the agency as a must.

"People better face the reality that this country needs every system that we have at our disposal to keep our people secure," Bernosky said. "Even if it takes wiretapping."

HOLE TRUTH! Cut a dime-size hole in a sheet of paper. Challenge friends to pass a quarter through the hole. It can be done easily! Fold paper across center of hole. Drop quarter in fold. Bend up corners of fold to enlarge hole. Quarter will slip through easily.

Sum Number! Double this number, turn the answer upside down and divide by three. If the result is 227, the original number is what?

More Aside Lines! What produce comes from Missouri? Missouri's cheese. From Dayton? Dayton's not bread. Almost TV Afros. Any to add?

Tongue Tied! Say fast: Every single short-sleeved sport shirt shrunk. Fresh fish, crisp chips. Fanny Fowler flew to Flint.

CAUGHT IN A TIE-UP! Let's say you're standing in a room 10 feet high by 10 feet wide by 10 feet long. You have with you a bundle of 10-foot strings with which to connect the room's several most remote corners. Assuming that stretching will make up for cutting and fraying, how many of the 10-foot lengths will you need?

Of course, thousands are longer than this. Therefore, if you can connect the corners of the diagonal and corner, you're back on your way to the answer.

ROCKY ROAD! Are marshmallows for roasting? If so, what's the best to roast on the marshmallow on the roasting stick? You decide.

Lake Mary Officials Push Tax Increase

By HUGH THOMSON
Herald Staff Writer

Lake Mary City Council members were backing up their belief that the Sept. 11 referendum on a property tax increase is vital to the city by campaigning for passage in the last week of the month.

Thursday, the council unanimously voted to hold the referendum on increasing the tax rate from $3 to $4.25 per thousand of assessed valuation.

Saturday morning, council members Bert Perinich and Pat Southward, along with Lake Mary Mayor Walter Sorenson, were "putting their vote was" by actively campaigning in front of the city's post office to get the public on their side.

Perinich said at least 50 voters had learned the officials' views on a personal basis from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. More voters were talked to later.

The campaigners were also making sure the ones they talked to were Lake Mary residents and registered voters.

Mrs. Southward said many people really were not aware of the problems which Lake Mary faced, but so long as she and other council members could talk to members of the public on a "one-to-one" basis, the referendum stood a good chance of passing.

Southward said she had talked with a third of those she had talked with — and she said about a third of them had been against passage — to vote for the tax increase.

Perinich said at least 50 voters had learned the officials' views on a personal basis from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. More voters were talked to later.

The 25-lap feature race was cut back to a 24-lap race in memory of Price and his Number 24. Then, as a final parting gesture those drivers who finished in the money relinquished their earnings — about $1,000 — to Juanita Price, the fire lieutenant's widow, and declared their fellow race driver the winner of the feature race — a final victory. Price's friends carried their feelings a step further and went into the stands for contributions. They collected about $500 and turned over the $1,500 to Mrs. Price. They gave her two trophies, as well.

"It's just been unbelievable. So many people have responded since Bill died. How can you keep track of everyone's who's been so kind and helpful? Everybody, his co-workers, friends, church groups and individuals... the list is so long. But I want everyone to know even though it would be impossible for me to thank everyone individually, my heartfelt thanks go out to each and everyone who has helped."

Mrs. Price said the money the raceway people turned over to her will go to defray funeral expenses.

What happens to Number 24? "I just don't know, yet," said Mrs. Price. "I'll keep it right here at home in the garage until I decide what to do."

Although Price was a highly efficient freighter and well-thought of among his peers, his father points out Price was an avid stock car driver.

"He built and raced five or six cars. He was always interested in racing. And he had a lot of good friends in racing. Words can't express the deep appreciation we feel toward the entire community... his friends, neighbors, the people at the raceway, it's just hard to describe how wonderful everyone has been."

Both Price's dad and his widow said they felt raceway owner Robert Hart, Leslie Holcombe and Harold Lee Johnson were instrumental in Saturday's raceway activity.

The two trophies Mrs. Price now has are for Price's ownership of the 1969 Camaro and the other for being declared the winner of the feature race.

Lt. William Lloyd Price, 36, was buried Saturday in Oakland Memorial Park.

Price: A Final Victory

There was racing as usual Saturday at the New Smyrna Raceway, but a popular and favorite driver was missing. Missing, but not forgotten by other drivers and the fans.

They remembered that man who was missing from the driver's seat of car Number 24, Number 24 sat there Saturday, glimmering in the light, almost. It wouldn't race this night. And its future is uncertain today.

Number 24 will stay garaged at 214 Lakeview Ave., the home of its builder and driver, William Lloyd Price, a Sanford fire department lieutenant who was killed last Wednesday after a brick wall fell on him and a fellow firefighter while they fought a blaze at a pet supply company in downtown Sanford.

But despite Price's physical absence from the raceway Saturday, his racing buddies and the fans were acutely aware of his presence in spirit.

The 25-lap feature race was cut back to a 24-lap race in memory of Price and his Number 24. Then, as a final parting gesture those drivers who finished in the money relinquished their earnings — about $1,000 — to Juanita Price, the fire lieutenant's widow, and declared their fellow race driver the winner of the feature race — a final victory. Price's friends carried their feelings a step further and went into the stands for contributions. They collected about $500 and turned over the $1,500 to Mrs. Price. They gave her two trophies, as well.

"It's just been unbelievable. So many people have responded since Bill died. How can you keep track of everyone's who's been so kind and helpful? Everybody, his co-workers, friends, church groups and individuals... the list is so long. But I want everyone to know even though it would be impossible for me to thank everyone individually, my heartfelt thanks go out to each and everyone who has helped."

Woodstock: 10 Years Later, Generation In Transition

By KEN FRANKLING

NETHELE, N.Y. (UPI) — Just one month after a man walked across the Moon's dusty line of Tranquility, 60,000 young people walked and danced across a sea of mud known as Woodstock.

With parties on their backs and beards in their hair, they arrived from all reaches of America at Max Yasari's dairy farm. And for three days — Aug. 15, 16 and 17, 1969 — they shared music, food, drugs and love.

The girl next door, the long-haired hippie, the curious, the acid-wild and the mad were mixed together in a human mass that was so wild and so free that it has become a legend and a symbol of a generation that was reborn.

The Woodstock Music Festival became a rallying point, a celebration that transcended religious, racial and ethnic boundaries as a national country entered the worst of the 1960s.

A decade ago, youth made up 30 percent of the nation's population. Thanks to the postwar baby boom, there were 40 million young Americans between the ages of 14 and 24. Like a lot of water poured into a bowl, the youth of America spilled over the confines of their homes and towns and, free and floating, drifted to Woodstock.

It was The Happening. A phenomenon. A half-million young people gathered at Woodstock, and with them came a new generation of rock and roll stars, a new generation of philosophers and poets, and a new generation of artists and writers. It was a period with very widespread dissatisfaction with the way government was operating in this country, and with hope for the future, he said.

"The festival cleared the air, so to speak. People came to lose their fear of this young youth."

Now, as the 1980s approach, the Woodstock generation has adopted more traditional lifestyles and occupations. Some are raising families and buying homes, working as doctors, lawyers, truck drivers and teachers. But many retain their concern for America's direction as it grapples with new issues — including energy, inflation, nuclear power and the environment.

Robin Lange, then 17, was a recent high school graduate who wooed his girlfriend from a sleepless night and went to the festival with another girl and two boys.

Like most Woodstock veterans, she was lured to the festival by the galaxy of music talents — Richie Havens, Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin, Joan Baez, the Jefferson Airplane, Santana, Blood Sweat and Tears, and Crossroads Clearwater Revival — to name but a few.

She is now Robin Lange Irselski, 27, and lives in the affluent Washington, D.C., suburb of Fairfax, Va., with husband, Ira, and infant son, Aaron.

She said she is also concerned about nuclear power and "the
