For District Three Seat

Trio Vie In Altamonte Commission Race

Herald Writer

A three-person race for the district three seat on the Altamonte Springs City Commission, currently held by Glen W. Buschman, will appear on the city's Nov. 8 election ballot.

The winner of the contest will be determined by majority vote-50 per cent plus one. If none of the candidates receives a majority on Nov. 8, a runoff election between the two top contenders will be held one week

Challenging Buschman, 54, of 580 Orange St., who is completing his first two-year term in office, are: Jim Broughton, 28, of 828 Orienta Ave. and Mrs. Dolores Vickers, 42, of 720 Florida Boulevard. Neither Broughton nor Mrs. Vickers have run for public office before.

Polling places for the election are: the city's civic center which encompasses those areas included in county precincts 11, 23, 25, 36, and 50; the city hall for the city areas within precincts 4, 34, and 64 and the Montgomery Road fire station for the city areas within precincts 9, 12, 35, 48, and 51.

Clerks of the elections are Pat Chisamore at the civic center; Marcella Hanson at the city hall and Bill Taylor at the fire station, according to City Clerk Phyllis Jordahl. As of Aug. 31, the city had 6,458 registered voters, said Seminole Supervisor of Elections Camilla Bruce.

Bakke And High Court: A Test Of Principles

SAN FRANCISCO-The issue was very clear to Stanley Mosk, justice of the Supreme Court of California. Pigmentation of the skin shouldn't decide whether or not Allen Bakke would be admitted to the medical school of the University of California at Each fall, 100 new students are admitted to the Davis medical school. Of those, 16 qualify through what is called "a special admissions program for the economically and educationally disadvantaged." In the whole history of the school, not a single Caucasian has ever been included in the latter group.

Commentary

A white boy or girl from Appalachia without any shoes, argued Mosk, is just as disadvantaged as a black kid from the ghetto without any shoes.

And so the California Supreme Court judge wrote the majority (6-to-1) decision which ruled that Allan Bakke, a white, Nordic type, had indeed been the victim of "reverse discrimination" when he was refused admission to the state medical school. On Wednesday, the case will again be argued at the highest judicial level in the land when the U.S. Supreme Court considers "The Regents of the University of California vs. Allan Bakke." Its decision, expected next January at the earliest, could be a bench mark in American civil rights because it affects the entire affirmative action concept promulgated by the late President Lyndon Johnson a dozen years ago to move minority groups into leadership positions in society.

Mosk's role as a spokesman for discrimination against whites is significant because he has long been regarded as one of the most liberal jurists in the country.

"To me," he says thoughtfully in his book-lined chambers in the anyone on the basis of race is invalid. And my credentials for fighting this are pretty good.' In the late 1940s, when Mosk sat on the Superior Court in Los Angeles, he rendered the first opinion in the United States holding that racial restrictive covenants were invalid. "It used to be common," he recalls, "that you'd buy a piece of property and in the small print it would say that you covenant not

Allan Bakke, a NASA space engineer working in Sunnyvale, Calif., south of San Francisco, was 32 years old when he decided he wanted to be a doctor.

The Davis medical school turned him down for the 1973 fall term, but invited him to try again a year later. In 1974, he was rejected once more. But correspondence with an assistant dean at in a democratic society." the school convinced him there was a preferential system of

He had a college grade point average of 3.51 (out of a possible 4.0). The appeared suitoff point for admission interviews was 2.5.

He discovered that some students had been admitted with averages as low as 2.11.

Bakke decided to take legal action and was pointed to a San Francisco lawyer, Reynold H. Colvin, who had served on the city Board of Education. Later, Colvin was retained by 115 Caucasian administrators after the school superintendent "de-selected" them to promote black minority administrators.

"Mr. Bakke," said the lawyer to the young engineer, "the road to litigation is long and hard. There's a similar case pending before the Supreme Court: Why not wait to see how it's decided?"
"DeFunis vs. Odegaard" involved a suit charging reverse discrimination by the University of Washington law school. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled it to be moot because while the case was being argued, Marco DeFunis had been admitted to the law school and was about to graduate.

'Are we going to go through a whole lifetime of giving preferences on the basis of race?"

As soon as he heard the decision, Bakke was on the phone back to Colvin: "Now we got to go."

In the course of taking a deposition from Dr. George Lowery, dean of the Davis medical school, Colvin drew the admission that a quota system existed, that 16 spots were given to minority people under different criteria than the regular program. Judge Mosk and his state Supreme Court colleagues, ruling on the case in September found the idea of a quota system repugnant.

"There's a certain aspect of accepted inferiority by minorities," says Mosk. "They say, 'Well, we can't compete on a to sell this property to a non-Caucasian. It was aimed at blacks. Mosk makes another point: "We're talking about medical school. We're not dealing with slum children. We're not dealing with a headstart kindergarten program where obviously the kids are not competing on a basis of equal background. We're dealing with kids who have graduated from grammer school, from high school and from college, and have a bachelor's degree. Now they want to go to professional

"If, after all that period of prior training, they can't compete on a basis of equality, then apparently they're not going to be able to the rest of their lives. Are we going to go through a whole lifetime of giving preferences to people on the basis of race?

"We're going to have medical doctors up here who meet certain standards, and we're going to have black medical doctors down here whose standards are not as high. I don't think we can do that

'The best thing that could happen would be to find another cadaver for Mr. Bakke...'

However, the court was sensitive to the issue that there should be minority representation. "We said to the university," argues Mosk, "You may consider disadvantage as long as the kid has potential, but you may not do it on the basis of race.' We do not compel the university to utilize only 'the highest objective academic credentials' as the criterion for admission. The university might increase minority enrollment by instituting aggressive programs to identify, recruit and provide remedial school for disadvantaged students of all races."

Allan Bakke will be 38 when and if the U.S. Supreme Court rules he must be admitted to medical school at Davis. From the start, he has maintained a low profile. He has never submitted to personal interviews. All he wanted was to be a doctor.

Early in the case, his lawyer, Colvin told the university lawyers, "One of the rules of life is, there's always room for one more. The best thing that could happen would be to find another cadaver for Mr. Bakke up at Davis and let him into school. It is not a test case. It is not a class action. It is not a suit brought to establish principle." Colvin admits that if the university had made an exception and upped the entering class to 101 to accommodate Bakke, the case would have ended right there. Meanwhile, he is puzzled by a recent revised brief prepared by the Justice Department, "It completely avoids the central issue," says Colvin, "which is the quota issue, and goes even further than that. It seeks to persuade the court not to decide the issue, to send it back."

There has, of course, been consternation within the Carter administration about the effect of a favorable verdict for Bakke on the affirmative action program, to which it is committed. And that accounts for the effort to duck the controversy:

Prescription For Nation's Hospitals

Medical economists following the fever chart of rising hospital costs tend to agree that a big part of the problem is that there are too many hospital beds and too much expensive medical equipment in many American communities. When hospital beds are empty or equipment is not being used, a hospital's fixed costs are spread among fewer patients. Hence, their bills are higher.

Doctors, hospital board members and others responsible for shaping the development of local health facilities often have been too ambitious, not reckoning how medical bills would be affected by under-utilization of those facilities. The government shares some blame by offering grants that made it easier to finance hospital development. But that's water under the bridge, and the question now is what to do about the cost of hospital care - or to be more accurate, the inefficiencies in hospital networks that serve most communities and metropolitan areas

In the best of worlds, hospitals would cooperate voluntarily to scale back the number or types of services they offer or otherwise concede that they are involved in an unnecessary duplication of facilities. But in the real world they will need prodding, and the extent of it is now seen in the "quantitive" health service standards which the Department of Health, Education and Welfare isproposing under legislation passed by Congress in

HEW wants to see the number of hospital beds in America reduced by 10 per cent. It wants to see maternity units only in hospitals that expect to handle at least 2,000 deliveries a year. It wants to see similar limitations on the number of units that perform open heart surgery or provide radiation therapy for cancer patients. It will be up to the regional Health Systems Agencies which are now assuming responsibility for local health planning around the country to see that the standards are

We hope the debate, which these proposed standards are sure to arouse, does not distract tention from the goal, which is a good one. If the standards are realistic and flexible enough to allow for special conditions that may exist in some communities, they can produce a dual benefit. Not only could costs be reduced, but the quality of care could be improved by concentrating resources for specialized treatment or services in one hospital instead of several

Above all this approach to "cost containment" is certainly preferable to the alternative of empowering the federal or state governments to exercise direct control over hospital charges. Those in the medical professions may find it hard to swallow that someone in Washington has decided how many hospital beds there should be in your city, or whether this hospital or that should be equipped for open heart surgery. But the rest of us are finding hospital bills and insurance premiums hard to swallow, too. If HEW and the regional health agencies can see that new service standards are implemented with the cautious hand of a surgeon; both the hospitals and their patients will come out ahead.

A Spartan Event

'Spartan event' may have been persuasive in winning support from the U.S. Olympic Committee for its bid to host the competition as it did in 1932.

Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley told the committee that the goal of the committee and host alike should be "halting and reversing the trend of ever-in-creasing deficits." The lowspending budget envisioned by the California city, made possible by existing facilities which include a 100,000-seat coliseum, was in contrast to proposals of New York City, which made a determined effort to capure the committee's nod, New York Gov. Hugh Carey promised the state's financial backing to erase any deficits.

Gov. Brown, however, flew over to Colorado Springs to reaffirm the insistence of Los Angeles officials that there would be no cost to the taxpayers. The state, he said, would not contribute to the spectacular.

Olympic Committee in Athens next spring. In the meantime, Californians might consider methods of holding Gov. Brown's successors to his "nonpledge."

"There are three things I do not discuss at par-ties: religion, politics and the Bakke case!"

Former mayor and councilwoman Irene Van Eepoel, Winter Springs' perennial gadfly, demonstrated her propensity for irritating city officials at a recent special meeting of the council.

Hendrix was in favor of making the mayor a fulltime administrator while Mrs. Van Eepoel expressed the opinion that the city needed a full-time dogcatcher more than a full-time mayor, and since they had previously decided $6,000 was more than the city could afford for a dogcatcher, she did not see how it could afford a $14,000 mayor.

Council eventually voted down the full-time mayor plan at the end of the three-hour session but not before Mrs. Van Eepoel managed to get in a few good jabs. She brought out the fact that the mayor had been receiving a full-time salary of $13,500 from the city's general fund since February although it was not included in the 1976-77 budget.

Piland became the full-time administrator when he was named coordinator for a federal public works project in the Ranchlands section of the city, at which time it was understood his salary was to be paid from the grant, but as of last week officials admitted the city has yet to receive any reimbursement from the grant and it expects to receive approximately $6,000 for time Piland put in on coordinating the project.

What may be learned from those examinations is still questionable, but at least Seminole Countians will have a school-by-school comparison of how students in the area are doing. Not only will we be able to compare students in Seminole County with those in Orange, Volusia or any other of Florida's other 66 counties. Now the figures will be available showing how students at Lyman and Lake Grantley compare with other high schools; how students at middle and elementary schools compare to each other. And once those statistics are known, what good will they be? If they cause an immediate furor pressure to run right out and "correct the problems" at schools where children do

School Breakfast Program Ignored WASHINGTON - Across America, millions of children arrive at school in the mornings The final decision will be made by the Internationa hungry. Yet the nation's underfed school children are entitled by law to governmentsubsidized breakfasts. The absence of a wholesome morning meal, doctors warn, can have grave consequences for young children. Hungry youngsters simply function in the classroom as effectively as those who get their nourishment. One seven year-old summed up the problem with touching simplicity: "I get a headache that hurts when I don't eat in the morning."

Congress created a nationwide school breakfast program more than a decade ago. The ation was left to the Agriculture Department, which is more devoted to the cause of agricultural empires than hungry children: The department's lackadaisical bureaucrats would rather pass out subsidies to farmers. therefore, than food to improverished

This attitude is exemplified by an Agriculture official who was questioned about the breakfast program during a legal proceeding. He was asked for a "reasonable" estimate of how long it would take to make breakfasts available to every school.
"I suppose," he said, "two generations ought to come close to reflecting the congressional intent." The flabbergasted attorney demanded:

Patriots For Real As Albers Scores Thrice

Herald Correspondent

Nobody wants to believe this showing them with every victory this year we are for real," said Jim Raley after his Patriots scored a 21-8 victory over Bishop Moore Friday night at the Forest City school. The Patriots, or "The Big Blue" as they prefer to be called, chalked up victory No. 4 in five weeks, which is one more than they had in all last year. The Pats led the game the entire way, shutting down the Bishop Moore attack. They allowed just 98 yards passing and 97 yards rushing.

Raley, who has been unhappy with several of his team's performances despite victories, had "no complaints" about this one. In fact Raley had nothing but praise for the young team which has steadily improved throughout the season. "We get better with each

How Is Florida Meeting Menace?

Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE (AP) - Last October, the second statewide grand jury finished its 18-month campaign against illegal gambling by warning in strong terms that Florida had become a haven for mobsters.

The grand jury's 79-page report contained a number of proposals for dealing with "these undesirable people." But, as the 16member panel observed, the effectiveness of its alarm could only be determined later, after top state officials had the chance to

They've had a year.

During that time, an insistent Gov. Reubin Askew has goaded a reluctant Legislature into passing two important pieces of antimob legislation and putting more money into law enforcement. Without Askew at their back, however, lawmakers failed to pass several other measures that are crucial for a serious war on the underworld.

The executive agency with the most acute organized crime problem is the Department of Business Regulation, which has employed some new tools to become more vigilant. But that agency is struggling with cigarette smugglers who are earning more money than ever because lawmakers raised Florida's cigarette tax to one of the nation's highest. And still another statewide grand jury is in the works, this one designed to avoid the pitfalls that hindered two earlier ones.

'Florida is still a haven for organized crime'

A mixed bag, to be sure. As one lawmaker assesses the situation: "Florida is still a haven for organized crime. I see signs that the public's awareness and the willingness of government to respond are gaining momentum. But they're only signs. The prospect is very real that, having gained some momentum, the issue will be put to bed.'

The experts had cautioned against expecting too much too soon. Cleaning up these messes takes time, they said. In Florida's case, as long as 10 years.

The complex Mafia problem calls for a balanced, well-conceived response. "You've got to do more than what Americans usually do - pass another criminal law," one expert advised. But such a well-tailored program remains somewhere in the future even though there is no sign that the underworld problem has done anything other than grow. Florida is still operating catch-as-catch-can.

House Speaker Donald L. Tucker took the first step shortly after the grand jury's report came out. He formed a sixmember Select Committee on Organized Crime patterned after a New Jersey commission that was credited with driving mobsters out of that state - and into Florida.

Chairman Eric Smith promised that his traveling committee would hound mobsters right out of the state by hauling them in front of TV cameras. "They can plead the Fifth Amendment," Smith said, "but there will be newspapers and television, so they'll lose the thing the need to survive - a low profile."

'You've got to do more than what Americans usually do

pass another criminal law

Still, some lawmakers are less than satisfied with the agency. It hasn't made any major anti-mob cases lately and Smith's committee has called top FDCLE officials "bashful" and "timid" in facing up to the mob menace. They note that a normally penurious Legislature this year actually gave the FDCLE more agents than they asked for. One important new law they are preparing to enforce makes it illegal to use the proceeds from criminal conspiracies for taking over legitimate businesses, a problem prosecutors say is growing. But, State Attorney Ed Austin of Jacksonville says "it could be months before any criminal indictments come down." Austin, who heads the state attorneys' new Council for the Prosecution of Organized Crime, is preparing for a third statewide grand jury that will not be restricted to a single subject as the first two were. Instead, Austin expects Askew to seek a Supreme Court order for a panel authorized to attack mobsters on

That grand jury, however, will be a long-range offensive, as any anti-mob effort ultimately must be. Even teams of agents, says state Criminal Intelligence Chief Dick Scully, need a long time to ferret out secrets about the money-making plots of a Mafia

For all these plans and new laws, however, the fact remains that Florida's response so far lacks the unity of purpose and coordinated planning that the experts say is a prerequisite for sustained, year-in, year-out anti-mob campaign. As Smith points out, the "cyclical nature of government" is such that organized crime will be a hot issue one year, then recede as lawmakers move on to another issue and wait to see if a new law

After all, it was 10 years ago that the old Legislative Council appointed an 11-member panel to probe the underworld. Headed by a young senator named Robert L. Shevin, now attorney general, that panel spent 10 months in highly publicized hearings and produced a report saying 14 mob families were working in Florida. Now it's 17.

"The fear of stronger law enforcement and the power attached to that - especially a statewide prosecutor - is greater than the fear of organized crime right now," Smith adds. 'Everybody acknowledges that it's here, that it's bad and that it costs. I'm afraid it will take an event that can't be ignored. For example, the horror story of that reporter who was killed in

"It's not an easy problem and - I hate to sound pessimistic - I don't see us winning the war anytime soon."

Smith, D-Jacksonville, now says that authorities convinced him the spotlight tactic wouldn't work. His panel, when it wasn't debilitated by disinterest, internal squabbling and two resignations, only heard warmed-over stories from police and convicted mob operatives. Except for focusing public attention, the Smith panel has been ineffectual.

"We gave that committee an impossible task," says House Criminal Justice Chairman Ralph Haben, D-Palmetto. "You can't do in the Legislature what we asked that committee to do. The concept was a good one, but we put it in the wrong place." He says lawmakers this week will discuss formation of a New Jersey-style crime commission

But any proposal must pass through a Senate that has proved its lack of concern. The Senate this year put cement overshoes on most pieces of important anti-mob legislation. Askew even had to pull out his brass knuckles to force the Senate barons into passing a bill that said convicted felons aren't welcome on Florida's · Several other bills died. The grand jury urged a crackdown of illegal book-making at Florida tracks, saying it costs the state $44 million a year in Dade County alone. Part of the problem is that For one thing, past history shows just how difficult it is to devise state law makes it a felony to make book off-track, but only misdemeanor to take illegal bets on-track. And yet, the Senate refused to pass a bill to make on-track bookmaking a felony.

> The Legislature made its contribution this year as holders of the state pursestrings - a contribution that shouldn't be underestimated despite its modesty. A variety of agencies involved in the battle got significant increases in funding to go with the little legislation that made it into law.

'Response lacks unity of purpose that experts say is a pre-requisite for success'

The increases included more employes for the Florida Department of Criminal Law Enforcement, the state's chief investigative arm, and the Board of Business Regulation, which handles racetracks and cigarette taxes. The payroll increases required years of effort and agency lobbying but reversed recent budget-cutting trend.

Those-agencies have differing records of achievement in neeting the mob problem, but they clearly have been responding. An apprehensive Business Regulation Department has used the 'felony bill" to make an extensive investigation of a proposed buyer, stalling the world's largest slot-machine maker, Bally Manufacturing Corp. of Chicago, in its attempt to take over World

That agency also claims progress in the war on cigaretts smuggling. It sounded the warning on the bootlegging scam last January only to see lawmakers raise Florida's cigarette levy to 21 cents a pack. That may be mitigated by a stricter antibootlegging law. Officials expect up to a dozen bootlegging inlictments this week from a Tampa grand jury.

For its part, the FDCLE has embarked on a three-year plan to shift agents to the centers of organized crime activity. The agency's Miami office will be increased from 18 to 36 by next July. for example, with the stepped-up effort focusing on the Mafia

Watson Likes The Challenge

"It's satisfying to finish ahead of Jack (Nicklaus) twice in big tournaments," says this year's No. 1 golfer Tom Watson, "but it's one thing to have a big year and quite another to attain real greatness like Jack's. My goal is to reach that kind of greatness."

Just turned 28, Watson is nearly 10 years Jack's junior, which on the tour is like a generation, and it is difficult to find an insider who doesn't believe the best is still to come for

Says Ray Floyd, "Tom Watson didn't just appear out of nowhere to win two major championships in 1977. He's built himself to a peak for the past five years. Every time I'd go to the practice tee, he'd be there. Every time I'd go to the putting clock, he'd be there. I'd say he worked harder at his game than anybody else out here in that time . . . He's good enough and determined enough to keep

Dino Jr. Tries Pro-Tennis

"I'm going to play on the circuit for as long as I'm eager and keep improving," says protennis aspirant Dean Martin Jr. "If I'm still having to qualify when I'm 28 or 29 - well, I'll reevaluate. But I believe I can be No. 1. I'm going to try

At 25, Martin's chances of succeeding on the international circuit are fading fast. In 1975. he was strictly a fringe player on the pro tour. Last year, he earned a ranking of No. 250 on the Association of Tennis Professionals' computer. And this year, he qualified for the Beckenham Invitational, one of the warmups

Beach Boys Feuding

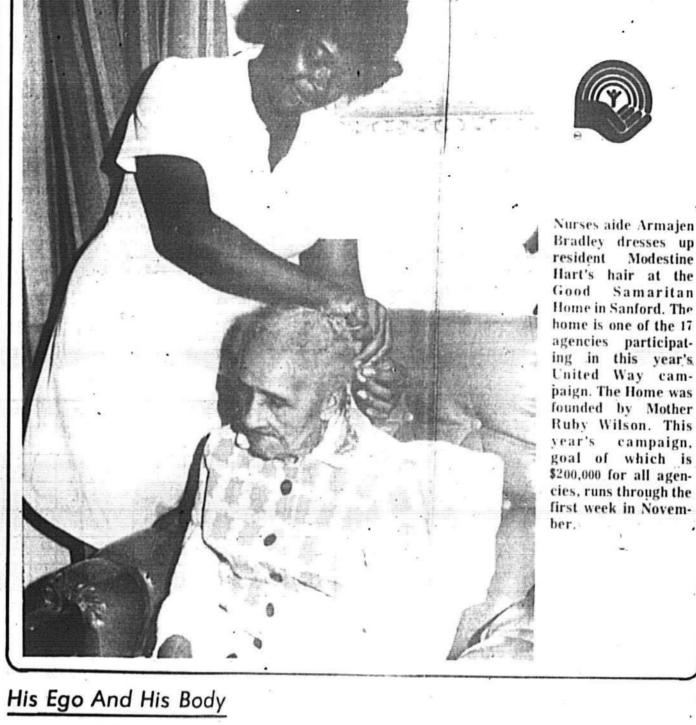

"This could be the last Beach Boys concert, tonight," Beach Boy Dennis Wilson suddenly announced the last day of their whirlwind East Coast tour, September 22. "I see the Beach Boys coming to a close, and there's a lot of backstabbing and maliciousness going on." After 16 years together and the triumphant comeback of leader Brian Wilson, the Beach Boys have just signed a multi-million dollar contract with Caribou Records and are on the verge of a break. Mike Love never wanted me in the band," says Dennis Wilson in Rolling Stone. "For that matter, apparently Brian didn't either, or at least not at first. Mymother took my part and told Brian I had to be in the group. I never even knew about this myself until about two vears ago." Is this merely a family quarrel or will the Beach Boys bring an era of sun and surf to a

Mike Love is optimistic "We're not breaking up." he says. "You witnessed an argument. There's nothing really cataclysmic about it; it was just the end of the tour. Dennis had a lot on his mind . . . It was just one of those things that happen over the years between people in the same family."

Integrate Midway By January, U.S. Orders

The United States Justice Department has filed a request with U.S. District Court in Orlando that Midway Elementary School be integrated at the beginning of the second semester of the current school year, Jan. 30, 1978.

"We have received a response from the Justice Department to our proposed plan for Midway integration," attorney Ned Julian

The proposed plan calls for some students now attending Soldsboro and Pinecrest Elementary schools to be transferred to Argument on the starting date for the integration plan will be heard Thursday by U. S. District Judge George C. Young in Orlando. Judge Young had already ordered that integration take place beginning in September, 1978.

"The Justice Department also said in this response that, if an attempt to integrate Midway this next semester results in people moving out of the area or is otherwise unsuccessful the school district must submit another plan for integrating the following

In recent years as Seminole County has grown in population from a rural county to part of a metropolitan area, the sheriff's department also has grown. This year with a $3.31 million budget and 192 employes, a new employe might find it difficult to become familiar with the many duties and functions of the department without being able to work in all the divisions. So Sheriff John Polk has instituted a new "onthe-job" training program for orientation of new employes. Last week five new department members went through the one-
