Tell This To The World

Compliments for Florida's astute adoption of that antitax constitutional amendment continue to come from important financial leaders. Practically every day, The Herald sees some interview published in the state newspapers, in which is praised this shrewd invitation for moneyed men to bring their wealth to Florida.

Along, also, with the considerable talk concerning the benefits to be derived from the adoption of the amendment, forbidding the imposition of inheritance and income taxes in Florida, several business concerns in the state are using long he has been dead doctors will facts taken from the tax situation in Florida as effective tell, approximately. advertising literature.

It is in this same booklet of the Jacksonville bank that isting day after day for nearly facts concerning Florida's tax situation are set forth in ten discomfort. paragraphs. The Herald believes it is well worth the space to publish these ten paragraphs herefi and suggests that they be used by all advertisers of Florida's attractions. As given by the Jacksonville bank, these ten advantages of Florida's tax system are:

(1) There is a constitutional prohibition against the levying of state taxes upon incomes of citizens.

(2) There is a constitutional prohibition against the levying of a state inheritance tax upon estates left by Florida citizens.

(3) There being no inheritance taxes in Florida, the securities of state corporations owned by nonresidents are not subject to taxes of this kind.

(4) Taxes upon personal property in Florida are moderate and are considerately administered. By constitutional amendment $500 of personal effects and household goods of a citizen are exempt from taxation.

(5) The corporation laws of the state are liberal and modern. There are no annual franchise taxes. The exemptions from state income and inheritance taxes either upon the property and earnings of the corporations themselves or upon the stock ownership held by residents or non-residents, cause Florida to represent an unusual opportunity as a state in which corporations may be domiciled.

(6) Property in safe deposit boxes within the state is not subject to inspection by tax officials.

(7) Entire freedom from state income and inheritance taxes and the situation regarding taxes upon intangible personal property bring about a condition that makes Florida the ideal place in which to set up irrevocable trusts.

(8) Trusts set up in Florida institutions whether revocable or irrevocable, on account of Florida tax measures, can be administered cheaper than elsewhere.

(9) The administration and final settlement of estates of Florida citizens is free from endless litigation and complications brought about by state inheritance taxes. (10) No corporation organized under the laws "of another state is authorized to act in fiduciary capacities within the state of Florida.
