12-year-old's knowledge of CPR helped save life of neighbor

By Carol Ramsey
ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — A 12-year-old boy's knowledge of CPR helped save the life of his neighbor's mother, Diane Seranton, when she collapsed in her bedroom Tuesday night. The boy, 12, was in the room with his mother when she collapsed. He immediately performed CPR, which helped revive her. The boy's knowledge of CPR was learned from a class he took at a local community center. The boy's knowledge of CPR was learned from a class he took at a local community center. Marina budget too 'casual'

It now seems that Sanford wants to march to the beat of a different drummer!

Communities and counties throughout Florida are spending millions of dollars to advertise attractions and amenities to attract visitors; even the state legislature lent a hand in assisting St. Petersburg in its efforts to land a major league baseball team in hopes that a successful effort would prove an ancillary benefit to the state. Orlando is building a $100 million basketball arena; Orange County is enlarging a huge civic center; and Volusia County now brags about the Ocean Center. All are spending millions to attract visitors.

Sanford has one of the finest marinas in Central Florida. As a site for the Citrus Bowl regatta, it attracts thousands of people, hundreds of thousands of dollars and garners news attention to the city nationally. The benefits of the marina are felt throughout the year by attracting boaters to the city, and onlookers who just want to see the boats.

However, the city commissioners of Sanford appear to view the marina as an opportunity to garner a few dollars without regard to the possible dilution in numbers of visitor or loss of tourist dollars.

The marina parking and ramp fees structure adopted by the commission projects annual income at $66,400 and expenses of $37,011 thus producing an estimated net income of $29,389 to be placed in the Facility Maintenance Sinking Fund.

There is a very troublesome area in the scheme aside from the obvious negative effect on the city's image. The expense side of the budget is a total of fixed expenses whereas the income is, as cited in the commission minutes, a very preliminary estimate "based on opinion and casual observation rather than actual data sampling." That estimate is that 300 people will pay $100 each for annual registrations and that an average of 66 people will pay $5 daily registration on each of 112 days. A shortfall in the estimated numbers could produce a loss situation quickly.

The attitude of the commissioners seemed to be summed up in the statement by Commissioner A.A. McClanahan who said if the visiting boaters didn't like the fee, "let them dock somewhere else."

Perhaps the registration fee is intended to reduce use of the marina by "outsiders." Perhaps such a fee is actually a good thing. There are lots of "perhaps" but one should not be a budget predicated on opinion and casual observation. Another should not be an attitude that if you don't like it go somewhere else. The citizens of Sanford deserve better governance than that.

A statesman goes

Howard Baker took over as White House chief of staff during very troublesome times. He said that he would "turn out the lights and lock the door" at the end of President Reagan's term. This goal changed when a family member's health took a turn for the worse. He is now resigning.

Mr. Baker had Central Florida links through his in-laws, Sen. and Mrs. Everett Dirksen who had a home in DeBary. He garnered international attention as vice chairman of the Watergate Committee. He served the Senate as its minority and majority leader. In all instances he proved himself an unselfish statesman with a gift as a mediator and a man of unquestioned integrity. He has served his nation well and deserves the gratitude of all for a job well done.

Winners think present system works

By Steve Gerstel
WASHINGTON (UPI) — For George Bush and Michael Dukakis, nothing could have worked better. They seized the system, and ran away with the Republican and Democratic presidential nominations.

But, as happens every four years, there are many others, not just the beaten candidates, who are clamoring for reform of the unique, and uniquely long, process by which the parties anoint their winners.

Just last week, the Senate Rules Committee held hearings on proposals by Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., and Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., to install a new system of regional primaries.

Yet, even they could not agree. Dixon wants to carve this great country into six regions. Packwood would slice the nation thinner, into 10 more or less equal parts.

The star witness was former Vice President Walter Mondale, the 1984 Democratic presidential candidate, who should be an expert on the subject. After all, he went through the interminable series of primaries and caucuses four years ago as a winner.

Mondale, then a senator from Minnesota, proposed regional primaries in 1975, before Jimmy Carter plucked him out of the ranks and put him on the Democratic ticket a year later.

And, he still supports regional primaries, calling the present scattershot system "not all bad" but an enervating exercise that leaves candidates hopping from airport to airport, careening through the skies from the West Coast to the East Coast.

But Mondale has other suggestions, some of which seem to indicate at least a modicum of nostalgia for the "smoke-filled" rooms when power brokers had a big say in the selection of the candidates. He describes it more of a "tilt" away from the far-reaching reforms of the 1970s.

For instance, Mondale would like to see an increase in the number of super delegates — senators, congressmen, governors, party leaders — who are not chosen by the people, either in primaries or caucuses.

After being shut out in the wave of reforms that swept the Democratic ranks during the last of the Vietnam War years, the Democrats' big chiefs were given special entrée for 1988.

This year, they make up 14 percent of the total. Mondale would like to make it 20 percent.

That suggestion puts him at odds with Jesse Jackson who feels, rightly, that the establishment of super delegates robbed him of support that he won during the long grind of the primaries and caucuses.

White super delegates, those choosing sides before the race was officially done, climbed on the Dukakis bandwagon, not because they were latent racists but because they considered Jackson a sure loser in the national election; not solely because he is black, but because he is too liberal.

Had Dukakis failed to reach the magic majority on the last and final day of the primaries, the super delegates would have put him — not Jackson — over the top.

California's 'other' races

LOS ANGELES (NEA) — The national headlines surrounding the California primary centered on the presidential races. But, as is often the case here, other contests on the state and local ballots were far more interesting.

Here is a look at some of the key developments:

(BU) The congressional race that generated the most excitement was the effort by a group of influential Republicans to oust freshman GOP incumbent Ernie Konnyu from his 12th District seat.

Silicon Valley is at the heart of the 12th District, which also stretches into areas that include both Stanford University and the University of California at Berkeley. District voters have the highest average level of academic completion of any congressional district in the country.

Konnyu, a Hungarian immigrant and staunch anti-communist — decidedly not a product of the high-tech community — won the congressional seat two years ago in a badly split field. Since then, he has been in hot water over alleged sexism, and his constant anti-communist tirades.

A group of entrepreneurs, including some of the biggest names in the computer industry, persuaded Tom Campbell, a young Stanford law professor, to run against Konnyu in the GOP primary. Campbell and the high-tech executives raised more than $300,000.

The primary was long and bitter; in the end, Campbell won by a 57 percent to 43 percent margin. He is now the favorite to win in November in the heavily Republican district.

In a contest that may augur the political future in California, incumbent Democratic Rep. Matthew Martinez was challenged by Monterey Park's mayor, Lily Lee Chen, in Los Angeles' 30th District. The District has a majority Hispanic population, but it has had a significant Asian influx over the past several years. Martinez won easily, but observers believe this was the first shot in what is likely to become a long-term clash between Hispanics and Asians in California.

The California primary also showed that former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North might have some sway with conservatives.

In recent weeks, North campaigned in two highly conservative Southern California districts where former White House staffers were seeking the GOP nomination for open seats. Both won.

Cars prime hiding place for drug smugglers

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta
WASHINGTON — You won't read it on the window sticker with the other luxury options, but cars are perfect hiding places for illegal drugs. False trunks, secret doors, upholstery filled with marijuana — the spots smugglers find to hide drugs defy the imagination.

To the untrained eye, the car has not been altered. But drug enforcement agents can't afford to dismiss it on first glance. Sometimes they have to tear a car apart before they find what they suspect is there.

A drug intelligence unit in El Paso, Texas, makes the job a little easier by sharing the secrets of the smugglers. The El Paso Intelligence Center (EPIC) is a federal information-sharing organization. It gathers the latest intelligence in the war on drugs and shares it with enforcement officers from the Drug Enforcement Administration, the U.S. Customs Service and others. We recently reported on EPIC's

ROBERT WALTERS

Sparks fly in races

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (NEA) — The first TV ads imploring Nevadans to re-elect Republican Sen. Chic Hecht this year were broadcast here in early February — a full nine months before the balloting was to occur.

By mid-May — almost five months prior to election day — Hecht's opponent, Democratic Gov. Richard Bryan, was airing his own video ads, challenging Hecht "to come out from behind the television commercials and debate the issues with me."

In their premature jostling for position, Hecht has claimed "that Bryan 'is playing to the galleries' rather than asserting true leadership, while Bryan has claimed that 'Nevada's future is being compromised' by Hecht's ineptitude.

The competition elsewhere in the country is substantially less intense at this relatively early stage of the '88 campaign. But serious political maneuvering is underway in all of the 33 states where elections for Senate seats are to be held in November.

In presidential election years, those contests invariably are subordinated to the race for the White House. Moreover, there is no uncertainty this year — as there was in 1980, 1982, 1984 and 1986 — about which political party will emerge with post-election control of the Senate.

The Democrats have a 54-46 edge going into the autumn elections, and no respected political analyst is predicting that partisan control will shift back to the Republicans.

Nevertheless, almost half of this year's campaigns should produce a substantial degree of drama. Included in that category are the contests in Ohio, New Jersey, Minnesota, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Of even greater interest are the campaigns for seats in the six states where incumbent senators — three from each party — have decided to retire rather than seek another term this year.

The races for the three Democratic seats in that category — Florida, Mississippi and Wisconsin — currently are so close that all are rated as toss-ups. Also too close to call now is the contest for one of the soon-to-be-vacated seats now occupied by a Republican — in the state of Washington.

The second of those Republican seats in Vermont is likely to remain under GOP control — but the third, in Virginia, is virtually certain to be captured by the Democrats.

Two other Republican-held seats the Democrats have a fair chance of winning are those held by Sen. David Karnes in Nebraska and by Hecht here in Nevada.

Karnes is an underdog because he was appointed to the post only last year following the death of a Democratic incumbent. He won the Republican nomination this year after a divisive primary contest, and he now must face popular former Democratic Gov. Robert Kerrey in the general election.

Hecht won his seat six years ago by defeating a four-term Democratic incumbent who had been a tainted by scandal and had to endure a grueling primary challenge.

The vast majority of Nevada's population is concentrated in the Las Vegas, Reno, Lake Tahoe and Carson City areas — but Hecht's campaign strategy in 1982 and again this year relies heavily upon support from the state's sparsely populated "cow counties" that are among the most desolate in the nation.

Cancer treatment promising

By Bob Stein
UPI Science Writer

BOSTON (UPI) — A new cancer treatment using custom-made proteins carrying the equivalent of tiny atomic bombs to destroy individual cancer cells has shown promise in experiments involving mice.

"We're very excited," said Dr. Stephen Burakoff, chief of pediatric oncology at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston, who headed the new studies.

The researchers used proteins known as monoclonal antibodies to carry a high-intensity type of radiation called alpha particles to kill tumor cells in the stomachs of mice.

In the study, published recently in the journal Science, Burakoff and his colleagues at Harvard Medical School found the treatment eliminated tumors in 80 percent of the mice treated.

The approach is promising because it would appear to avoid the often severe adverse side effects produced by conventional chemotherapy and radiation treatments.

Conventional treatments may produce unpleasant, potentially dangerous side effects because they kill some healthy cells along with cancer cells.

But the monoclonal antibodies specifically seek out the cancerous cells and deposit their deadly cargo to destroy the malignancy without harming healthy tissue, Burakoff said.

Alpha particles are more intense than the gamma radiation used in conventional radiation treatment. But because the particles only travel a short distance and lose their potency within an hour or two, they do not damage nearby healthy cells, he said.

"It has a very high intensity so its kill of a cell is good. The emission only goes about the distance of a couple of cells so it's only going to emit and destroy something a couple of cells away," said Burakoff, who is also a professor of pediatrics at Harvard Medical School.

"What we would hope to do is deliver this radioactive effect, have it kill the tumor cell and not have it hang around for more than a couple of hours. The hope would be to deliver very specifically very high intensity radiation to do its damage and then decay so there's no longer any deleterious effects," he said.

Previously monoclonal antibodies have been used to carry anti-cancer drugs and other types of radiation.

Engineers happy with shuttle test

BRIGHAM CITY, Utah (UPI) — Rocket engineers are optimistic that an internal inspection today of a full-scale shuttle booster will confirm a successful test firing and increase confidence in the safety of redesigned O-ring seals.

The 126-foot rocket, called qualification motor No. 7, or QM-7 for short, was fired Tuesday for a full 2 minutes in a new test stand equipped with hydraulic arms that pushed on the rocket from the side during ignition to simulate external forces experienced by shuttle boosters during a real launch.

"All indications are that we had an excellent test," said Royce Mitchell, booster project manager for NASA. "Everything went very smoothly and the new facility worked great. The motor performed very, very well."

The test marked the fourth in a series of five full-scale booster firings required before the shuttle Discovery's launch in late August on the first post-Challenger mission.

Engineers planned to climb inside the burned-out rocket today to inspect its nozzle system, an area that has experienced problems in the past.

"We're very anxious to get inside the motor and look at the joints and the nozzle, especially the nozzle," Mitchell said, but he added, "We're all feeling very, very good. It was an extremely good test."

The test was unique for two major reasons. No full-scale shuttle booster has ever been test fired during the application of external forces, or loads, and the rocket's 1.1 million pounds of propellant was heated up to 90 degrees to simulate summer launch weather.

Valentine arrives 45 years later

EAST HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — It may have taken awhile, but a Valentine's Day card sent by a teenager to her sister in Boise, Idaho, 45 years ago has finally been returned unopened.

The card's mysterious journey began in February 1943 when Anna Zito bought a 10-cent card and put two 3-cent "Win the War" stamps on the envelope and dropped the card, complete with return address, in the mail.

Her sister, Christine Iannotti, never received the card that said simply, "A valentine for you dear sister."

The letter is now in the hands of the sister's brother, Liberato Zito, who lives several miles from the now non-existent Wooster Street return address.

"Ah, I couldn't believe it," Liberato Zito said this week after the card was delivered to him. "Our mailman couldn't believe it. Forty-five years. We don't keep anything around the house for 45 years."

It also stunned postal officials when a sorting machine in the Boise post office spat out the letter out as though it had been sent the week before.

"Our best guess is that someone found it at a garage sale or in the attic, noticed the letter was still good, and dropped it in the mailbox," Boise postmaster Gil Hicks said Monday.

He had a mailman try to track down Christine Iannotti, but the address on the card is now the location of an office building.

So he sent the letter back to Connecticut where postal officials, after realizing it was addressed to a house that had been destroyed to make way for Interstate 95, asked around to see if anyone knew if it could be delivered.

French-built rocket carries Europe into space age

KOUROU, Fr. nch Guiana (UPI) — A French-built Ariane 4 rocket blasted off on its maiden voyage today, ferrying three satellites into orbit, including an American communications station. In the triumphant debut of Europe's most powerful space booster.

Under a clear blue sky, the 185-foot Ariane 4, equipped with two solid-fuel boosters and a pair of unique strap-on liquid-fueled boosters for extra power, roared to life at 7:19 a.m. EDT — six minutes late — and quickly streaked away from its jungle launch pad on the northern coast of South America.

About 23 minutes later, the flight ended with the successful ejection of the third satellite into its proper preliminary orbit. It was the fifth success in a row for the Ariane program following a failure in May 1986, the year of the Challenger disaster.

Ariane rockets, marketed by the European extremely important technically and commercially, the first of what will be 70 Ariane 4s over the next decade," said Douglas Heydon, president of Arianspace Inc., the U.S. subsidiary of the company that markets Ariane rockets.

"It's the culmination of a great deal of work by a great many people. Now we have to make it work commercially."

The Ariane 4 is the first of a new breed of European rockets capable of delivering between 4,190 pounds and 9,260 pounds into the high orbits required by communications satellites.

As such, the rocket poses a major challenge to U.S.-made boosters in the commercial space launch industry and gives the European space program a diverse family of launchers capable of meeting a variety of needs.

Of free world space boosters, the Ariane 4's performance currently is exceeded only by NASA's manned space shuttle and heavy-lift Air Force Titan rockets.

Ariane rockets, marketed by the European consortium Arianspace, now have a flight record of 19 successes and four failures since launches began in 1979.

Delivered into orbit today were three satellites, including a European weather satellite called Meteosat P2 and an amateur radio communications station called Amsat 3C.

The third spacecraft, an American-owned relay station called Pan American Satellite 1, or PAS-1, represented the first private communications satellite system independent of, and in competition with, Intelsat, the international consortium that provides most of the Western world's satellite communications.

Owned by Pan American Satellite of Greenwich, Conn., the 2,700-pound RCA-built relay station will be used to provide communications service between South America and the United States as well as service to Europe.

The satellite and Ariane launch services were thought to have cost about $85 million, which The Washington Post reported was personally financed by television entrepreneur Rene Anselmo, chairman of Pan American Satellite.

The French-built Ariane rockets are the backbone of the European Space Agency's space launch capability and represent the major competition for American-made rockets in the lucrative business of carrying commercial satellites into orbit.

As of May 25, Arianspace had contracts in hand valued at $2.5 billion to launch 44 satellites, including nine U.S. spacecraft.

The Ariane family of rockets now has evolved through four generations since work on the Ariane 1 program began in 1973. The next step in the family's evolution is development of a more powerful Ariane 5 rocket that will be capable of ferrying a small manned spaceplane into orbit in the 1990s.

Agents search Pentagon for proof of fraud

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. agents have made dozens of searches at offices of Pentagon officials, defense contractors and others in a probe of "possible widespread fraudulent activity" in military contracting.

In a prepared statement, the Justice Department said FBI special agents and naval investigators conducted about 30 court-authorized searches Tuesday in the nation's capital and 12 states, including California, Texas, Connecticut and Virginia, home to some of the country's largest defense contractors.

Searches also were conducted in Ohio, Arkansas, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Florida, and Missouri. No arrests were made.

The searches were part of a 2-year-old investigation that has not yielded any arrests, said FBI spokeswoman Sue Schmitzer.

Search warrants were issued at the Pentagon, Schmitzer said, refusing to give details.

One administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said there were 45 searches of offices in the Pentagon as well as those of more than 10 defense contractors and other military installations.

The official said it was a part of a joint effort by the FBI and the Naval Investigative Service to obtain indictments for the alleged fraud.

"I'm sure it will go to the grand jury eventually. We're looking at potential indictments," the source said, adding that the investigation involved contracts with the Air Force, Navy and Marines.

Henry Hudson, the U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia coordinating the investigation, was not immediately available for comment.

"The investigation focuses on allegations of fraud and bribery on the part of defense contractors, consultants and U.S. government employees," the Justice Department said in its statement.

Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard referred all questions to the FBI, saying, "I have no comment on any aspect of this thing."

Another official said that although 45 search warrants were issued, only 37 were carried out Tuesday and presumably, the others were to be made soon.

A primary target in the probe appeared to be United Technologies Inc. Federal agents carried out search warrants on two UTC subsidiaries at four locations.

Officials identified three of the Pentagon officials whose offices were searched as Victor Cohen, deputy assistant Air Force secretary for tactical warfare systems; James Gaines, a Navy weapons systems official; and Melvyn Paisley, a former assistant Navy secretary.

One source said two general groups are being investigated and the searches involved only one of them. He agreed it would be logical to expect more searches, but declined to say there would be.

Flag Day ceremony brings arraignment

LONG BEACH, Calif. (UPI) — Thomas "Ski" Demski has an unusual problem — the city says his American flag is too noisy.

"They're screwing around with my constitutional rights," the white-bearded Demski grumbled Tuesday as a dozen Coast Guard volunteers battled a stiff breeze to run his 47-by-82-foot American flag up a 132-foot-tall pole to celebrate Flag Day.

After the ceremony, Demski went down to the courthouse to be arraigned on charges that the giant banner violates a city noise ordinance when it snaps in the wind.

The Flag Day ceremony was attended by hundreds of schoolchildren and veterans who cheered as the huge flag was unfolded, stretching from the front of Demski's house, across his front yard, across the street and up onto the opposite curb.

They cheered even louder when the wind began to fill the flag, lifting two struggling guardsmen off the ground.

At the top of the pole, the flag snapped proudly and loudly — too loudly for neighbors who have complained for months that it keeps them awake at night with its loud snapping.

Two doors down the street, Vic Verraux voiced the complaint she has been issuing for months.

"The flag flaps even harder if it's wet. We don't mind if he's got it up during the day, said Verraux, Demski's most vocal critic. "We're only asking that he bring it down on wet and windy nights."

Standing behind her screen door, Verraux said she was

"(President) Reagan should come to Long Beach to talk about human rights. He didn't have to go to the Soviets."

—Thomas Demski

tired of the noise and of being portrayed as the neighborhood "Commie."

"People are kept up all night by the noise," she said. "I'm not the only one who's fed up. We have constitutional rights too."

Demski says he can barely handle the flag by himself on a calm day — certainly not in a wind or when it's wet, which makes it even harder to control. So he usually leaves it up for days, and nights at a time.

The city Health Department cited Demski April 4 for violating municipal noise codes, and the city attorney's office filed several misdemeanor charges.

Demski pleaded innocent Tuesday to the violations, and a gasp could be heard from a crowd of about two dozen supporters when he was told that each of the counts could lead to six months in jail and a $500 fine.

"I don't believe this is happening," Demski said after Municipal Court Commissioner Joseph Blocker set a July 6 pretrial hearing date. "I guess I better start looking for a lawyer."

"(President) Reagan should come to Long Beach to talk about human rights," Demski declared. "He didn't have to go to the Soviets."

Reporter arrested for smuggling papers from jail

TALLAHASSEE (UPI) — A newspaper reporter arrested for smuggling written material from a maximum security area of the Leon County Jail will argue her behavior was protected by the First Amendment, her lawyers said Tuesday.

Karen Olson, 34, a veteran reporter for the Tallahassee Democrat, was arrested Monday evening after she turned herself in for smuggling contraband from the jail, a third degree felony punishable by up to five years in a state prison.

She was at work Tuesday while State Attorney Willie Meggs pursued his investigation of the incident.

"I think it is a significant constitutional issue of nationwide importance," said Robert Harper, one of two lawyers defending Olson.

The newspaper said Olson had been investigating allegations of abuse against inmates since April. She took the papers from one of four inmates she was visiting Saturday and refused to turn them over to authorities.

Mag. Larry Campbell, second in command of the Leon County Sheriff's Department, said Olson secreted the papers in her clothing when authorities demanded she give them the material. Authorities decided to seek her arrest after reviewing the case with prosecutors.

The arrest inspired a disturbance Monday in which inmates blocked a toilet and flooded a portion of the jail's second floor before surrendering peacefully.

Olson was working on an assignment for the Democrat, said Bill Fuller, the newspaper's managing editor in a written statement. "The Democrat fully supports her and has supported her with legal counsel. We believe the judicial process will vindicate her."

DEAR AMY

Doctor won't risk eye damage from some contact lenses

DEAR ABBY: I am a busy ophthalmologist whose time is spent in treatment and eye surgery. I do not sell contact lenses. In fact, I forbid my patients to wear permanent-wear contact lenses.

The main group desiring permanent-wear contact lenses are myopic (nearsighted) people who want to put something in, and wear it all day and all night. It works most of the time, but there are enough devastating consequences of these permanent-wear contact lenses so that I personally refuse to authorize them for my patients. If a patient asks for extended-wear contacts, I say no. And if I get an argument, I simply ask, "Would you wear your shorts or panties for 30 to 50 days?" The answer is, "No, never!"

I then explain that contact lenses collect moisture, mucus, sugar and other proteins from the tear fluid that will grow bacteria. The eye is a warm, moist place where all types of severe parasitic diseases can flourish. As far as I am concerned, the best contact lens by far is a soft lens that is placed into a heat sterilizer after each wearing. Every day the wearer starts with a clean lens, which cannot grow enough bacteria or fungus in 24 hours to harm the eye.

As a physician, I feel responsible for my patients' care, and I think the legal system would probably feel that I bear some responsibility were I to prescribe permanent-wear lenses that damaged my patients' eyes. I simply don't want my patients to take the risk, although the major manufacturers would have you believe there is none.

JOHN WM. DICKERSON, M.D., NORFOLK, VA.

DEAR DR. DICKERSON: Your letter was a real eye-opener, and I thank you for it.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to your comment about the letter you just received and noted that it had been mailed Oct. 5, 1984. You said, "I realize that the Postal Service is having its problems, but this is ridiculous."

I assure you that the employees of the U.S. Postal Service are as upset as you are. However, I would have appreciated it very much if you had mentioned the thousands of letters you have received on time.

The U.S. Postal Service delivers over a hundred billion pieces of mail a year, of which 98 percent are delivered promptly.

The U.S. Postal Service is the best in the world, and our rates are the lowest anywhere in the free world. For you to publicly criticize us over a 2 percent error rate seems very unjust to me.

OFFENDED IN LAKE CHARLES, LA.

DEAR OFFENDED: Sorry, I did not mean to offend you or any employee of the U.S. Postal Service. However, when it takes a letter three years and six months to get from Lynn, Mass., to Los Angeles, Calif., that's the news—bad news.

who needs it the most. Print this, please, Abby: It's important.

SMALL TOWN IN N.Y.

DEAR SMALL TOWN: I'll do better than that—I'll add my own message to yours: "And if your offer is declined, don't be too quick to take no for an answer."

DEAR ABBY: I took part in your Operation Dear Abby III last Christmas, which led to my corresponding with several wonderful men. I actually met one of my pen pals, who is stationed five hours from where I live. Through phone calls, letters and weekend visits, our relationship has grown and become very important to both of us. (We are the same age and both divorced.)

My problem: His ship is leaving for a six-month tour. So far we have not slept together, and he thinks we should experience this before he leaves. (He says it will "strengthen our commitment.") I don't know whether I should or not.

He's a caring, sensitive man and I trust him completely, but I really don't know what to do. Since you were responsible for bringing us together, I thought you might be able to help me decide.

TO SLEEP OR NOT TO SLEEP

DEAR SLEEP: Do not go to bed with a man because he's shipping out for six months. If you were ready for that kind of relationship, you wouldn't be asking me what to do. Tell this caring, sensitive man whom you trust completely that you will let him know when you're ready to "strengthen your commitment." My advice: Put this very important step on "hold."

(Problems? Write to Dear Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

In a measuring bowl mix the flour, baking powder and salt together. Add the butter mixture to the flour mixture, alternating it with the cup of milk. Then add the coconut and rum extracts. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour in a tube pan or bundt pan. When the cake comes out of the oven, puncture top and pour on hot syrup. Cool in pan 2-3 hours, then turn it out.

Syrup for wedding pound cake

1 cup sugar
1/2 cup water
1 teaspoon of each following: almond extract, coconut extract and rum extract.

In a pan, dissolve over low heat and pour over hot cake.

FORGOTTEN COOKIES

2 egg whites

1/2 cup sugar
6 ounces chocolate morsels
Beat egg whites stiff adding sugar gradually. Fold in chips. Spoon onto greased cookie sheet. (Teaspoon sized cookies.) Put into a 300 degree oven shut the door and turn OFF the oven and let them sit undisturbed at least 2-3 hours overnight if possible. This recipe does not work well on humid days.

CHINESE NOODLE BIRD NESTS

2 cans Chinese Noodles
1 package chocolate chips (12 ounces)
1 package Butterscotch chips (12 ounces)
small jelly beans
Melt chips in a large sauce pan; add noodles and coat well. Drop by spoonfuls on waxed paper. Leave a depression in the center for 2 or 3 jelly beans. Put the jelly beans in before the chocolate hardens. Great Easter treats and kids love to make them if you don't mind the mess.

GRILLED POTATOES AND ONIONS

1 medium potato for each person
1 medium onion for each person
Wash and prepare for baking. Slice potatoes about 1/4 inch thick. Slice onion 1/2 inch thick. Put the potatoes back together with a slice of onion between each slice of potato. Wrap each potato in foil and bake or grill until tender.

SPAGHETTI SAUCE

1 1/2 pound ground chuck
1 large onion chopped
1/4 teaspoon oregano or tarragon garlic salt to taste
salt and pepper to taste
1-1 1/2 ounce can whole tomatoes

This takes about 1 hour from meat to serve in the microwave. Put onions and meat in the microwave in a microwave dish. Brown the meat lightly, drain if needed. Add seasoning and tomatoes, crush each whole tomato because they will not simmer down. Simmer until onions are transparent. This is a meat sauce without the heavy tomato base. Serve over your favorite pasta.

Lung Transplants may have future

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have severe emphysema and read with interest about heart-lung transplants. If doctors can transplant heart and lung together, why can't they just do lungs?
DEAR READER: They can in rare cases. Recently S.C. Rep. Floyd Spence underwent a rare double lung transplant at the University of Mississippi Medical Center. However, the technique is very difficult. I'm told that it's technically easier to transplant the heart and lungs en bloc, rather than the lungs separately. Nonetheless, at the rate transplant technology is progressing, I wouldn't be surprised to learn that lung transplant itself will be refined to the point that it may become more common.

Treatment is directed primarily toward preventing cosmetic disfigurement. Cosmetic creams can be used to camouflage affected areas. Tanning lotions, such as Dy-O-Derm, which do not wipe off on clothing, are helpful. Recently, drugs called psoralens, when combined with ultraviolet light, have been shown to be effective in repigmenting vitiliginous skin, but results vary. (C)1988, NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.

Peter H. Gott, M.D.

To give you more information, I'm sending you a free copy of my Health Report, "Living with Chronic Lung Disease." Others who would like a copy should send $1 and their name and address to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the title.

Let me add that the primary cause of emphysema and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease - cigarette smoking - is preventable. If fewer people smoked, the incidence of lung disorders would drastically fall. Although this fact may not help patients with severe emphysema, younger people should consider it.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My understanding is that there is no known cause or cure for vitiligo. Is this correct? Mine has spread all over my body.

DEAR READER: Vitiligo consists of patchy loss of the skin's pigmentation. Although the cause in most cases is unknown, some forms of vitiligo are inherited. Because the skin disorder accompanies certain autoimmune diseases - such as Addison's disease and pernicious anemia - experts presume that it could be due to an immunological abnormality or self-allergy.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By James Jacoby
Declarer was lucky when West led his singleton spade against four hearts. With a diamond lead, the defenders would take two high diamonds, a diamond ruff and the club ace. With a club lead, East would win the club ace and quickly shift to the ace and a diamond, with the same result. The spade opening lead gave declarer a chance, but he had to play well.
Just in case West's spade lead was not a singleton, declarer won the king, played A-K of hearts and ruffed a spade with his jack of hearts. When West showed out of spades, declarer played another heart to dummy and cashed the ace of spades, shedding a club. He expected to lose to the ace of clubs, so he had to limit his diamond losses to just two tricks. And there was a clue to guide him.

Since West had a singleton spade and three hearts originally, it was likely he had four diamonds, and maybe five. Furthermore, it was very unlikely that he held the A-K of diamonds, or he might have selected a high diamond for an opening lead. So East probably held a diamond honor, either singleton or doubleton. Backing his judgment, declarer played a low diamond from dummy. When East played the eight, he put up the queen, losing to West's king. West played a club, and East won the ace and played back a club to declarer's king. South now led a diamond. West played the nine, and declarer played low from dummy. Sure enough, the ace from East had to beat the air, and declarer had made his contract.

Bridge hand diagram showing North, South, East, and West hands and a vulnerable East-West Dealer South contract. Opening lead is the 4 of diamonds.
