And Carter believes that this training will be gained during the peak months of January through March. During 1977 alone, 8,000 patients passed through the Sanford clinic with about

The Sanford clinic has been in operation for 12 years and became a nonprofit organization in July of 1977. It is funded by grants from the Health Education and Welfare (HEW). This year it operated with a $400,000 HEW grant.

'China Card' Is Not A Pat Hand

During his recent press conference, President Carter emphatically denied that the United States is playing the People's Republic of China against the Soviet Union. This was a proper, pro forma statement. Had the President responded otherwise, he would have simultaneously offended the Chinese and needlessly added to the already considerable alarm of the Russians.

Nevertheless, it is obvious the Carter administration has made a fundamental policy decision that closer ties with a strong mainland China serve U.S. national interests. This policy is viable, not to say compelling, because the Soviet Union's ongoing aggression, coupled with its frightening military buildup, destabilizes the world balance of power. Also we have unusual leverage because of the deep-seated hostility between the Chinese and Russians, which is racial, political, geographic and historical.

Richard Holbrooke, assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs, enunciated the administration's warming attitude toward China and the reasons for it in a significant speech in Hawaii on June 16, which did not receive the public attention it merited. Mr. Holbrooke, for the first time, suggested our shared strategic concerns with China were directed at containing the Soviet Union. "Although important differences remain with Peking, it is fair to say that the United States, China and Japan share an interest in maintaining...the strategic balance that exists today," he said.

Very well. But if the United States is to play the Chinese card against the Russians, as Leonid I. Brezhnev bitterly termed it in a strong warning to Washington, the real question is how shall it be played?

The first step was suggested by Mr. Holbrooke in his Hawaii address: normalization - the establishment of full diplomatic relations -- "is an essential objective for our new Asian policy," he said. The chief difficulty with this is the impasse between Peking, and Washington over the disposition of Taiwan. The United States insists that China renounce the use of force to unite Taiwan with the mainland and China insists the United States must sever diplomatic and defense ties with Taiwan before diplomatic relations proceed beyond the current liaison-office stage. Full diplomatic relations may have to wait until next year, inasmuch as the administration is unlikely to push so explosive a political issue as concessions on Taiwan in an election year.

The next obvious question is how far vashington should go in the meanwhile to increas China's military and technological strength. While the administration denies reports it will provide direct arms assistance to China, it has decided, apparently, to look with favor on China's desire to buy military equipment in Western Europe and to acquire modern technology from the West, including the United States. Giving substance to this policy was the departure for Peking of a high-level delegation of U.S. scientists, who go to broaden cooperation in the scientific and technological

The administration would be derelict not to utilize the shared U.S.-Chinese interest in confining Soviet aggrandizement in Asia and elsewhere around the globe. But while we agree with the rationale for this policy, there is real concern about the degree and manner of its execution.

The United States should be extremely cautious about making too many concessions to the Chinese. They need us more than we need them. JACK ANDERSON For, we enter shoal waters when we add to the arsenal and technology of a Communist nation already armed with nuclear missiles. Moreover, it is not inconceivable that, if the United States plays the China card too crudely, the Soviet Union would be prompted to make a pre-emptive strike against China before the currently favorable odds could shift.

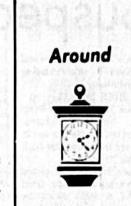

We wish the Carter administration's past performance could give us more confidence in its ability to play a good hand in the high-stake, dangerous game which it has just joined.

WASHINGTON - An overview of 1978 politics at this midpoint in the primary season provides striking evidence to suggest that traditional standards are increasingly inapplicable in predicting election

The record to date shows that candidates who not long ago would have been virtually assured of success - including incumbents, scions of respected political families and organizationbacked contenders - are being defeated at a surprising rate. In North Carolina, for instance, the putative favorite in the Democratic primary for a Senate seat was Luther H. Hodges Jr., whose father served as governor from 1954 to 1961 and remains one of the state's most revered BUSINESS WORLD

His principal opponent, state Insurance Commissioner John Ingram, mounted a disorganized, ill-funded effort. Hodges placed first in the primary, but failed to secure enough votes to avoid a runoff. In that second election, Ingram scored a stunning upset.

In Texas, incumbent Gov. Dolph Briscoe far outspent his leading rival, Attorney General John Hill, in a bid for a third consecutive term. But Hill won the Democratic gubernatorial contest.

In New Jersey, Sen. Clifford P. Case, a member of the Senate for almost a quarter innovative way. century, seemed unbeatable in his bid for the Republican nomination for a fifth term.

But State Senate Minority Leader Victor Atiyeh, a cautious, low-key politician, trounced McCall in the Republican gubernatorial primary.

In Mississippi, Gov. Cliff Finch was widely believed to have retained the enormous personal popularity that catapulted him from political obscurity to the state house only three years ago. Finch this year sought to mobilize his coalition of both black and white middle-class support in his bid for a Senate seat. But he finished second in the Democratic primary, then lost the runoff by a margin of almost 2-1 to former county prosecutor Maurice Dantin.

RONALD REAGAN Have We An Africa Policy?

If our Africa policy seems to make neither heads nor tails to you, think what it must seem like from inside the Carter administration. The conflicting advice President Carter is getting is nowhere more evident than in the administration's wild zigzags with regard to Africa. Considering the sudden shifts, from "hands-off" reticence to tough talk and back again, it begins to look as if our Africa policy depends, from one day to the next, on who las bent the president's ear. Among the prominent ear-benders is national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, who has gained a reputation as a "hard-liner" against oviet expansionism. Perhaps it was he who prevailed in the recent decision to answer Zaire's call for for help when Shaba province was invaded (last year under similar circumstances, it was a case of strictly "hands off" by the United States).

Brzezinski, after all, has successfully outnaneuvered Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in order to "play the China card" (a game which, if not played with great care, could provoke a other hand, is financed mainly by the federal Russian attack on China). government's Office of Economic Opportunity.

Vance, a mild-mannered man who believes it using restraint at all times, has his moments of influence, too. We have his recent testimony to that effect. In his speech on Africa the other day he said he is the "one with authority." Andrew Young, our ambassador to the U.N. sometimes seems to have the greatest influence over Mr. Carter on Africa policy. Take the Rhodesian situation

The previous administration had been leaning hard on Ian Smith to recognize the inevitability of black rule and to get on with developing a transition plan. When he finally did, with black leaders who apparently represent the great majority of the population, the Carter administration-along with the British-played dog-in-the-manger. wit couragement the moderate Rhodesians need for their plan to succeed.

More On Hospital

First, to establish my credentials - 1 am presently a patient at Seminole Memorial Hospital and during a period covering a total of approximately five years, my wife also has been a patient at this facility. In addition, I am presently, and for the past two years have been, the Chaplain of the American Legion Post No. 53 here in Sanford. In this capacity I have visited several other hospitals in Florida, some several times, listening to numerous comments regarding treatment received, etc.

Second, I would like to present another viewpoint that devolves at least from more statistically legitimate experiences than presented by Mr. Kelley, Sr.'s referenced letter of July 5, 1978. Mr. Kelley evidently draws his conclusion from his experience (one time) as a patient at Florida Hospita North and his later experience as a visitor to Seminole Memorial Hospital where his daugher was a patient.

Mr. Kelley's emotional state must have been quite different during each of these experiences, and I am certain the later experience especially would have some abnormal effect on anyone's reaction to human contactual experiences during such periods of emotional instability.

Very often in hospital work, employees are faced with visitors that exhibit characteristics and mannerisms much worse than - "sick people, people in pain." The sick person has a visible excuse that usually gains at least an empathetic reaction from those contactually involved.

Very often people reneive reactions from others that are a direct response to the aura exuded by the person making the initial aggressor action or criticism. I cannot help but wonder if Mr. Kelley was objective enough not only to evaluate his own contributions to his comparative analysis - but also to include his daughter's feelings regarding their "mutual" experience.

I agree with Mr. Kelley in one thing, he still has not learned how to make comparisons either legitimate. meaningful or fair. The Herald has headlined for the "world" to see, his lack of ability in this regard. I have met individuals, and I have heard others indicate similarly. that this or that individual was not proficient in his or her job and even cases where intense dislike, mutual and otherwise, has developed.

The least Mr. Kelley owes is an apology to those people he did not meet and whose broad brush he is unfairly covering with his venom. The best I can say is that Mr. Kelley permitted his emotions to overcome any innate sense of charity and politeness toward others he may possess

SISTER ses: ALL ABOARD! At the June 22 noon luncheon meeting of SISTER, Inc. it was decided that Sanford, Fla.-Train Town U.S.A." would be the year's project under President Ardelia Reitzel, who took office in May.

To familiarize new members with the slogan the following background was given: in December 1975 the theme was suggested, which would have put Sanford high on the list of attractions Nothing was done and the downtown area continues to deteriorate and regress. When the idea was presented in the papers there were calls from people throughout the area saying they liked the idea and offering to help. Sanford is a railroad center and has been since 1880 when the first track was laid from Sanford to Orlando. The 100th anniversary of the railroad in Sanford will be in 1960. Auto Train is an established asset to the community with its publicity and passengers with tourist dollars. Presidents of all three rail lines, Seaboard Coastline, Amtrack and Auto Train, have offered their

Altamonte All-Stars Go Into Action Monday Night

Ralph Cochran has a problem. And it's a good problem. The Altamonte Springs all-star Little League manager has so much talent on his 15-player team that some of the league's top stars are not even in the lineup for Monday night's tournament opener against Maitland. "It's simple," said Cochran before Saturday's practice,

"you go with your best nine hitters. Some of the Altamonte Springs all-stars who clubbed the ball at a terrific pace during the season have slacked off a little in all-star practice. And, by the same token some of the lesser regarded sticks have begun to show signs of thunder. Outfielder-catcher Jack Zablocki is a perfect example.

He hit only 185 during the season, but has been clubbing the ball at a steady pace in practice and has earned a starting job in right field in Monday night's 7:30 game at the Altamonte Springs Civic Center field.

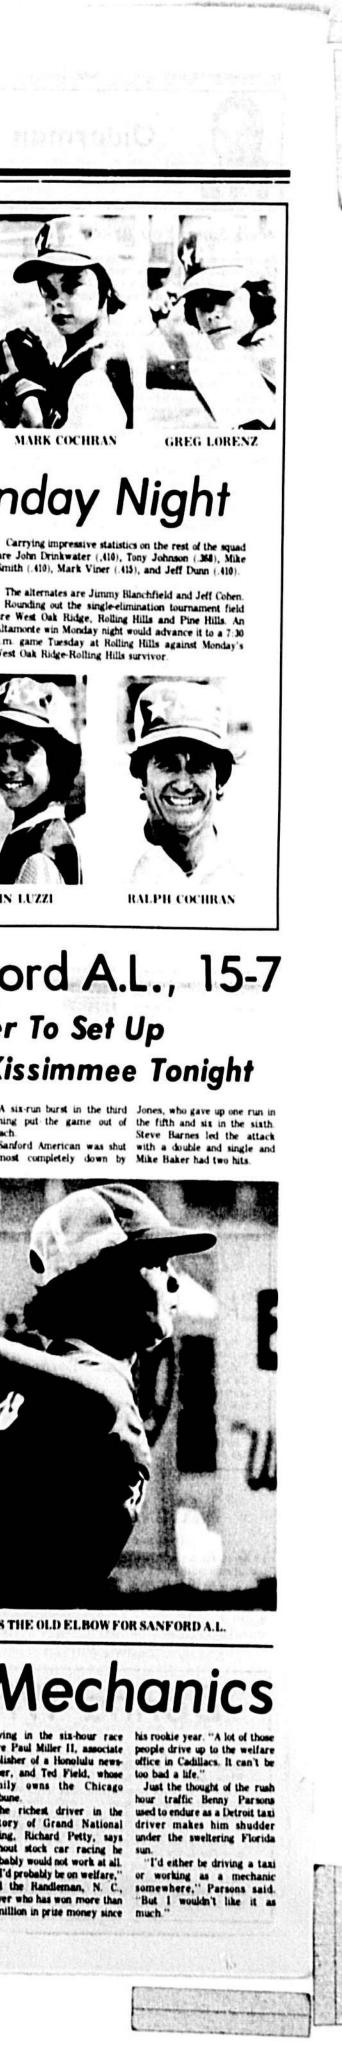

The other outfielders expected to be in the starting lineup are Craig Cochran (.460 and 8-2) and Troy Quakenbush (.410) The infield will likely include catcher John Luzzi (.430). Tom Perkins (.376) at first, Greg Lorenz (.440) at second, Mark Cochran (.510) at short and Van Golmont (.485) at EW YORK (UPI) — Everytume it's Neil Allen's turn to pitch down in the minors, the New York Mets keep their eyes on him, and oh, what his father would give if he was only able to do the same thing.

The last time he saw his son was 15 years ago. That's when Robert Allen went blind.

Neil Allen, a strapping 20-year-old right-hander with the map of Ireland on his face, pitches for the Jackson Mets of the Texas League and has one prime objective, to get to the big leagues as soon as he can.

"My main reason for wanting to get to the majors is to help my folks, the whole family, my father, mother and two brothers, all of whom helped me get this far," he says. "You never saw a baseball fan like my father," Allen laughs, his blue eyes twinkling. "We're from Kansas City, Kan., so he can tell you anything you want to know about the Royals, but since I signed with the Mets two years ago, he has swung over to them, "He became blind when I was five years old. Deterioration of the retina. He refuses to use a cane and doesn't want any sympathy, though. Every time I pitch, I call him up after the game and he'll tell me things to help me. When I get a win, it's like he won, too. He's so happy for me.'

Last Monday night, Allen beat Tulsa, 6-1, on a five-hitter. It was his first victory in a month and made him 5-9 for the season. His earned run record is a much more classy 2.03 and if you're wondering about the lopsided contrast between that and his wonlost record, the Jackson Mets score runs at about the same rate as the New York Mets. In Allen's last 11 starts, his ball club has gotten him a total of 13 runs.

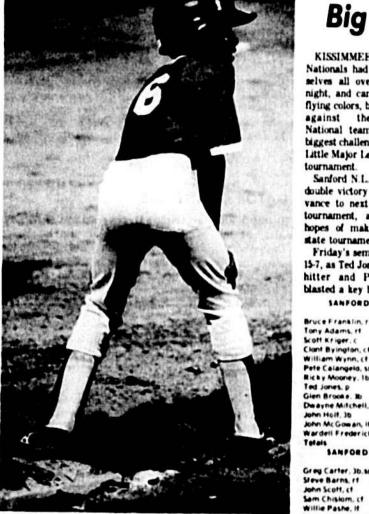

Last week, Allen dropped a 2-0 decision in Little Rock. It was a doubly tough one to lose because his father was on hand for the first time since Allen was signed by the Mets in 1976.

"He came to Little Rock with my mother and she told him I didn't look the same as the last time she saw me pitch or opening night in Jackson," Allen says. "That night, my mother and my girl friend, Karen, came to see me pitch and I struck out 15 and beat Tulsa, 40. In Little Rock last week, after my mother told my father I wasn't getting enough on the ball, I could hear him hollering to me, 'Throw hard, throw hard!' That little voice. It's funny how I could pick it out from all the others in the stands. It gave me more incentive."

Q. Did the Yanks at one time give up on Ron Guidry, their star left-hander? Just how big is he? - M.N., Elizabeth, N.J. Little more than a year ago, there was some thought of farming out the Cajun southpaw because he had experienced a miserable spring, and in six previous minor league seasons in the Yankee organization he had never won more than seven games in one year. been reduced from six to four, so that most of the players will still be playing 20 games, excluding playoffs, just as they have done in the past. They won't get more tired. There might be a greater injury risk, however.

Q. I believe the Greatest Baseball Team of all time would have to be the 1974 Oakland A's, unbestable in big games with hurlers like Catfish Hunter, Ken Holtzman and Vida Bine. They could not have long losing streaks, and they also had powerful sluggers like Sal Bando, Joe Rudi and Reggie Jackson. They slaughtered the Dodgers in the World Series and would have done the same to the old Yankees or the '63 Dodgers. What are your opinions on this? -Stan Roberts, Oakland, Calif.

I'll stick with '76 Cincinnati Reds, as noted in a previous column, as the strongest team of this era. The A's had wonderful winning chemistry, but if you've studied what has happened to the individual players since the team broke up, there were no real superstars in the daily lineup.

I think your facts are a little misplaced. Melton's career ac-tually was prolonged after he received the treatment. He and Carter are no longer active players, but their careers wound down naturally — they were each in their 30s when they stopped playing

Q. Can you explain the procedure in NFL football where they decide who plays who in the playoffs, and the tie-breaker system within a division? - Terry Wood, Roanoke, Va.

There are five playoff teams in each conference - the three division winners, plus two wild card teams with the best records (78 inaugurates an extra wild card team). The wild card teams play the week following the end of the regular season, then join tion winners in normal playoffs (team with best record plays the wild card survivor). The tie-breaker system within a division is too lengthy to detail here, but it consists of eight steps, from head-to-head results to a coin flip, if all else fails. ### Tri-County Library Offers

Large Print Books By Mail

People who have difficulty reading regular print have another option to open up the world of reading once again: Large Print Books delivered by Mail

Books By Mail has been a popular service of the Orlando Public Library System for three years, explains OPL director Glenn Miller. "Recently we have acquired 2,000 new books in large print. resident of the tri-county service area of the Orlando Public Library System, which includes all of Orange, Osceola and Seminole Counties except those who live within the city limits of Winter Park and Maitland. You don't even need a library card, Miller explains, you just have to live in the tax-supported library service area.

Requests for large print books can be made by telephoning the main Orlando Public Library, which is open seven days a week to accept such requests, or you can put your order in writing.

Robin Williamson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Coy Williamson of Casselberry, fell into the orchestra pit at FSU during a 'Tech' rehearsal and injured her lumbar spine which led to her studying and teaching dance therapy.

Lifelong Dream Shattered, But...

By JANE CASSELBERRY Herald Staff Writer

A lifelong dream of a career as a professional dancer was shattered as the result of an unfortunate accident, but Robin Williamson didn't let it get her down. Instead she has broadened her sights and is involved in a fascinating new career in dance therapy in New York City. "Dance was my love, my passion, my whole life," says 21-year-old Robin, who began dance lessons at age five.

All through high school she continued to study with Kip 'The pain was excruciating. It was and Patti Watson of the School of the Performing Arts in Fern Park and danced with the Performing Arts Company of Florida

Robin credits them for instilling a love for dance in her that removed the drudgery from the long days, nights and weekends spent in practice and rehearsal. "I didn't have much social life in high school, I even had to miss my senior prom because of dancing. I was a cheerleader for awhile, but it conflicted with dancing and I had to make a choice," said Robin. The summer of her senior year, she spent studying dancing in New York City and after graduating from Lyman High School in 1974, she enrolled as a dance major at Florida State University (FSU) in Tallahassee. "I never wanted to be a prima ballerina with a ballet company - I'm a little short, but my ultimate goal was

Broadway to dance and act in the theatre," Robin explained She had some experience in Edyth Bush Civic Theatre productions and at FSU in shows such as "Stop the World I Want to Get Off", "Oklahoma", "Bye. Bye Birdie" and "Godspell". "I wanted to be a total artist and needed to experience all aspects of the theatre," said Robin. It was during a "tech" rehearsal for a February concert at FSU that the lights went out. While trying to get off the stage Robin fell into the orchestra pit and injured her lumbar spine. "The pain was excruciating." Robin said. "It was frustrating, realizing that a dancer's body is her tool," she added. "I asked the doctor when I would be able to dance, but he answered, 'Dance! You'll be lucky if you can walk.'

But Robin was back in the studio only two weeks later in spite of her painful back and weakened muscles "It was the worst thing I could have done, it really caused meproblems," she said

"I'm not bitter." ut at first I was disappointed. I asked 'Why me? It's not fair!' When I decided to stop feeling sorry for myself, I began to see there is a world out there with other aspects. I broadened my horizons and opened up to other career possibilities " Robin met an anatomy professor at FSU and became interested in the subject in an attempt to understand her body, to be able to dance better and get her body back in shape. "When I said I wanted to study to be a dance therapist, they said 'What's dance therapy?' so I decided to write my own course of study." For one whole summer she went from department to department in order to figure out which courses fitted in with her program. She was only an undergraduate student so had to get special permission to take the courses she needed in the medical sciences. "I believe I can do whatever I set my mind to," said Robin, who said her job in the Department of Education as a student assistant helped her learn how to "cut through the red tape in order to have an interdisciplinary program." In spite of her hectic schedule of dance and piano

Robin Williamson, works with Katrina Dvorsky (upper and lower photos) at the School of the Performing Arts, Fern Park. Miss Williamson is taking a break from a New York play to come home and pass along some of the things she has learned about "anatomy for dancers" to members of her former dance company.

she said. She carried her good study habits into college and was able to manage her difficult subjects and graduate in 1977 "I first learned about Raoul Gelabert, when I picked up a textbook he had written on 'Anatomy for the Dancer' from the dance library at Kip's studio, Robin said. "It is a table for dancers with exercises for specific parts of the toody. She had read and clipped his articles on kinesioltherapy, which Gelabert describes as "preventative medicine for dance injuries."

of one of its 1978 Dance Awards describes him as "the pioneer in developing this field,". He has helped countless dancers and teachers all over the world to understand how to use their bodies properly, aesthetically and to avoid injury, the magazine states.

Gelabert evolved this method by combining scientific research and training with his own experiences as a dancer and the experiences of his students. His elite clientele numbers such famed dancers as Mikhail Baryshnikov, Gelsey Kirkland and Alicia Alonso. Looking for an opportunity to train as a dance therapist. "Basically, I went back to study and do my internship. I wanted to learn everything I could from him about kinesiology for the dancer. I have been certified by him enabling me to teach his course," said Robin. Robin is the only one interning with Gelabert and when he agreed to let her study with him, she said, "I cried. I was so elated I couldn't stand it." He told her that every year there are a lot of people who want to work with him, but he is not interested in "medical school people, because they are not com-

Dancers are stubborn as mules, they won't stay in bed," Robin explained. Gelbert, was also a dancer, who suffered an injury that redirected his career. Robin is both a pupil and patient of Gelaber's. ## County Man Doesn't Like Slimy Guests

By DENNIS FEOLA Herald Staff Writer

When it rains, Jack Ives worries about the snakes.

At his house, snakes and rain come together. Ives lives at 124 Fairlane Circle in Park Ridge near Sanford. For the past eight years, he said, during the heavy summer rains, the water backs up to the houses in the circle and floods the low lying areas behind his house driving the water moccasins to higher ground.

Since he has been unable to find any government agency willing to take responsibility for the flooding on his block, the snakes continue to come. During last week's rains, he killed four water moccasins, one in his kitchen, three in the carport. His house is on one of the first pieces of higher ground the he couldn't do anything about it I wanted a report." The report, filed by Deputy J.E. Alford, indicates the water wa 40 feet into lves' yard when the deputy arrived.

"He couldn't even get out of his car," Ives said referring Ives said he plans to take his case for having something done to leviate the problem back to the county commission

He said he has complained about the situation to county commissioners in the past with no results. He said he has also complained to the county zoning commission and roads department.

He said the single storm sewer in the area is blocked by mus and debris and serves no useful function. His biggest fear, Ives said, is the poisonous coming in contact with neighborhood children.

"You know these kids are going to play in the water," Ives said 'no matter what you tell them. Someone's going to get hurt."

Although the pledge will mention no other countries by name, the sources said it obviously will be aimed at such countries as Algeria and Libya, which have harbored air hijackers in the past.
