Ryan White: Not a normal child

Ryan White just wanted to be treated like a normal teenager. But White was not a normal child, and not just because he contracted AIDS from blood products when he was 13. In his long fight for public understanding of AIDS and compassion for those afflicted with it, the boy who was turned away from the schoolhouse five years ago in Kokomo, Ind., displayed a kind of courage, poise and dignity rare at any age.

White was not the only child with AIDS barred from school in the early days of the epidemic. But he soon became a national figure by deciding to go to court to battle the fear and ignorance that were keeping him from sitting in the classroom beside his friends. Even after he won his court case, he and his family were treated so cruelly by some in Kokomo that, finally, they moved to Cicero, Ind., where they were received more compassions talk.

Through all the controversy and through repeated illnesses. White maintained a faith that people around him would come to understand that AIDS could not be transmitted by casual contacts and that its victims about a part he matted.

mitted by casual contacts and that its victims ahould not be reviled.

Ryan White has lost his struggle with AIDS, but in his battle against hysteria and irrationality he won important victories. Although many people with AIDS still suffer discrimination and abuse, public understanding has grown. Where national leaders not long ago were mute in the face of the disease. President Bush now speaks out against discrimination against people with AIDS and in favor of compassionate treatment.

By White's calm example and by his efforts acount the nation to factor sufferentiang, he has contributed to true change or climate. No one can know what this quiet young man might have achieved had he lived a forg life; we all know how much he accomplished in the short time he had.

Ralph Abernathy

In life and in death, Raigh David Abernathy will forever be linked with Martin Luther King Jr. If King was Moses, Abernathy was his Asron. From the bus beyout in Montgomery, through the siege of Birmingham to the march on Selma, in Southern jais and on city streets. Abernathy was friend, cohort and loyal lieutenant. On the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphia, it was Abernathy who cradied the head of the dying King.

Rev. Abstractly died April 17 at the age of 64. Unlike the Biblical Aaron, chosen by Moses for his speaking ability, this earthy, plain-spoken Baptist minister was not as cloquent as his more filustrious colleague, He wasn't as polished. But he was a leader — by Abernathy slipped out of the public eye in recent years, until the publication last year of his autobiography. "And the Walls Came Tumbling Down." The book ignited a storm of controversy for its description of King's sexual liaisons on the last night of his life.

Abernathy's death is an appropriate time to refocus attention on more worthy considerations, including the weighty contributions of Ralph David Abernathy himself. His death should serve as a reminder — to Congress, to the White House and to the American people — that the work of civil rights, Abernathy's work, remains unfinished.

Tax fiasco Thatcher's latest woe

LONDON — "Margaret Thatcher is finished." the speaker said with obvious conviction. "It is as simple as that. Two years from now she will be forced to call new elections. She will do so announcing that she herself will not stand again. She will simply go off into a well-earned retirement."

retirement."

The sentiments were hardly unique, but what was interesting is that the statement came from a high-level member of the Conservative Party, a longtime supporter of Thatcher who has served in her governments. He asked for anonymity because, in his words. "I have to live with the lady for the next two years."

The British people have clearly turned on Thatcher.

The straw that broke the public's back was lier imposition of a "head tax" on the populace. In Britain, local governments — councils — provide many basic services. They have long been supported by real estate taxes, with wealthy property owners paying by far the greatest share.

Under Thatcher's new system, the real estate tax is replaced by a flat fee for local services in which everyone in the same council district — rich or poor — is charged exactly the same. Literally, the richest landowner will now pay the same as his poorest worker.

councils are con-trolled by the Labour trolled by the Labour Party. By imposing this new tax, That-cher and her advisers believed they would put Labour on the defensive — forcing it cither to make serv-ice cutbacks or take the blame for higher levies.

It turned out to be a classic miscalcula-tion. The decision has sparked riots and been universally condemned. Howev-er, Thatcher, historically incapable of admitting a mistake, has circled her wagons and vowed to make no changes.

Even before the tax flasco, Thatcher and her Conservative government were in trouble. In the last decade, much of Britain's physical infrastructure has deterio-stagnant, and the value of the pound has declined.

The most recent polis results tell the story. A little more than two years ago. Thatcher and the Conservatives won by a landslide. Now, in the most recent National Opinion Poll, 51 percent favored Labour, compared with 35 percent for Thatcher's Tories. The rest were divided among other minor parties.

Even more assettling for Conservatives, Britons who own their own homes — the backbone of Thatcher's support — now favor Labour by 44 percent to 38 percent. In the last election, the Tories carried this group by 27 points. Sixty-one percent of voters, including 57 percent who identify themselves as Conservatives, believe she should resign before the next election, which must, by law, come by June 1992.

In part, the polls reflect the success of Neil Kinnock's six-year struggle to rid Labour of far left elements and to reduce the influence of powerful unions. The polls now clearly show that, faced with a choice between Thatcher and Kinnock, British voters will install a Labour government.

Media hype and Earth Day II

WASHINGTON — "We are the world, we are the children..." The latter certainly is true. Witness Americas's sest for short-term crusades and cost-free weekend idealisms, as in Earth Day II. (It deserves Roman numerals, like a Super Boarl.)

crusades and cost-free weekend idealisms, as in Earth Day II. [It deserves Roman numerals, like a Super Bowi.]

"What are we going to do on Earth Day, daddy?" asks a nine-year-old girl of my acquaintance. If she has been rigorously conscripted and is marching in lock step with all of Americas's children (if she is not, it is an Earth Day II oversight), she will busy herself badgering her father about (these are the thoughts of Chairman Hayes — Denis Hayes, chairman of Earth Day III) "what kind of light bulbs do we use, do we have a flow-restricter on our shower head, are we having an appropriate diet, is our car the most efficient vehicle that meets our needs?"

Great. Egged on for so Hayes hopes) by her teachers, this daughter-as-commissar is going to pioneer new dimensions of pre-teen obnoxiousness. Does Hayes know what an environmental disaster a nine-year-sid is? The subject of her diet is not for the squeamish, she has never turned off a light, her complaint shout my cars is that the van does not have a VCR and, as for showers, don't get me started.

MTV is currently inoculating Americas's young with tamong many other things) the emphatic if vague injunction to "save the planet" (as Hard Rock Cafe sweatshirts also enjoin). This week the rest of the media have joined the serried ranks.

CNN forever, one restored a naturation journalism:

Joined the serviced ranks.

America now has saturation journalisms:
CNN forever, one network or another from before dawn until after midnight, all-news radio, and radio call-in shows, which are broadcasting's equivalent of letters to the editor. Saturation journalism is like a shark, unsleeping and inastiably ravenous for new subjects to devour.

When the media all jump feet first, on cue, into the coordinated manipulation of public opinion, as with this week of environmental "concern," they are doing something rather different than just covering the news. And one result is the reduction of complex issues to a pudding of trendy simplifications and synthetic anxiety and indignation.

Naturally, human progress puts stress on nature. The mission of modernity is to expand the dominion of humanity by shrinking the rule of necessity. However, the hidden agends of some environmentalists is to expand the dominion of some people's political will over others.

The current surge of environmentalism coincides with the thawing of the Cold War in a way that puts an exclamation mark at the end of a decade of electoral routs for the traditional agenda of the left. That agenda evolves over time but has one constant the expansion of state direction over society, and the expansion of control of the regulating state by a ciertay claiming privileged ineights into the folding future.

Hence the hatred - not too strong a word by some environ-mentalists for the mina symbol and servant of the individual discretion for the more direct route to the regulation of the masses than restricmasses than restrictions on consump-tion, especially energy and transper-tation. Thus the slogan of some European con-aervatives: The green tree has red ruots. This is not to say that any particular environmental argument is sub-limated politics, or timated politics, or otherwise permicions or minguidad. It is to say that some skepticism is in order when the media fall into line behind a political line, such as "The environment" (a noun that denoies rather a job is in critical lition and getting worse

Does Hayes know what an

To govern is to choose, usually on the basis of inadequate information, partly because of the pressure of events. Earth Day II will gin up pressure (evanescent, thankfully) for choices where information is especially problematic—in environmental sciences. Regarding a range of subjects from climatic change to global warming (they are not the same subject) to the dangers of asbestos, there is on today's fast-railing political bandwagon a high ratio of certitude in certainty.

Democrats hoping to ride the environmental wave into the White House should understand that it is an issue perfect for the brush-and-dash politics of the Bush administration. As with education, transportation, deficit reduction and other matters, the policy — style, really — is right-minded gestires, ringing rhetoric and pep taits; then a quick change of subject before the tacky matter of costs comes in Suchism is feel-good politics, adding self-antisfaction to the material comfort of the comfortable. It is highly popular and applica-ble to any issue, it feeds the media and makes for pleasant weekends of unexacting morelum. We are the children.

But then Bennett met with Brady and Darman. The drug caar "was persuaded that there were more efficient ways of funding the war on drugs." says Donald Hamilton, Bennett's spokesman.

Darman treats increases in the drug war budget with the kind of enthusiasm reserved for a root canal. In January, reports circulated of a tense exchange of insults between Bennett and Darman when Bennett asked for more money. Bennett lost.

That's not to say that the foderal government has been cheap. The drug war budget for this year is 80.46 billion, but it hasn't produced satisfactory results. Barely a dent has been made in the staggering drug trafficking that goes on right under the nose of Congress in the nation's capital.

After getting the official word from Darman and Brady. Besnett now has seen the light and considers the drug war bond ides to be a "revenue issue" dictated by the accountants. Officials in the Treassry Department and the Office of Management and Budget declined to tell us their position on the war bond bill. But traditionally both, agencies have opposed special interest bond issues.

Congressional sources told us that Darman and Brady think the drug war bands would be a logistical sightmare. Lewis reminds the critics that the World War II Victory Bonds were no picine to administer either, but they produced results.

Members of Congress such as Lewis and Wilson have tried to initiate creative schemes for the drug war. Even allowing for the fact that most of those schemes are politically motivated pie in the sky, the administration has been unnecessarily stodgy.
