Wonderful Canoe Trip On Allegash Is Described

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
 News Analyst

We packed in to the headwaters of the famous Allegash with canoes and full camping outfit which was chosen with meticulous care for we were going into a country so wild that if one had forgotten any necessity, that was very bad luck in that region, you know, if a ten-foot walk a quart of a mile off the trail and gets turned around, he's lost—parapsa for ever.

My youngsters—whose nickname of Major followed him into the forest primeval—and I struck a bit of raw fortune, for we were lucky enough to spend part of our memorable holiday in the company of three of Maine's most famous fish and game wardens, who happened to be going into the Allegash region in pursuit of their duties. There was Levi Dew, warden of northern Maine, "Cash" den supervisor for 700 square miles of northern Maine, and then Curtis Cooper—all old-timers, schooled in the ways of the woods and wies in the lore of boat, bird and fish. They are a grand trio, and from them the Major and I learned much.

The Allegash is the spot in east central Maine, and walls in numerous ponds and lakes as it makes its tortuous way northward until it joins the St. John, to slip across the border into Canada. There's magnificent scenery along its route.

Dangerous But Beautiful!
 At times the river works itself into a frenzy of rips, as they call the boiling waters which would be rapid if they ran a bit bigger and fiercer. There are the dangerous but beautiful Allegash falls. And as you slip silently down the broad, beamed stream in the canoe there open up vistas more lovely than any earthly dream. But I'm almost forgetting that I'm a fisherman and not a painter.

The Major and I covered most of our time in fly fishing with light rods, and we had, however, and it was in beautiful little Cliff Lake that I got the big tope on a red and silver spotted spoon. He fought well, but "Cash" well, too, for last night "Cash" Austen filleted him and grilled him with salt pork before an open fire next to the abandoned log cabin in which we slept. We had speckled trout, also, and boiled potatoes and corn bread. Boy, can "Cash" cook!

Then there was some fishin' which was just too good to be fun I mean that, too. For instance, we spent one day by the great dam at Round Pond, and you could take big trout out of the boiling waters below the dam as fast as you cast in.

We killed what we wanted to eat, threw back others which we had taken on small hooks without hurt, and then—believe it or not—called on down the Allegash with trout still rising. It reminded me of one day in Norway when I caught over a hundred trout on flies in a couple of hours, threw back seventy-five of them alive, and then quit because I was fed up with it.

Right Off The Ripe!
 The Major and I got the best sport in the ripe. Some of these we fished as we waded along the edge of the river and cast out into the white-capped waves. At other times we fished these near-rapids from canoes, held by men in the sterns. There's a special thrill in placing a fast-rising trout right off the crest of a rip, and then battling to get him up through the rough water to the net. By and by we found a small red and white Parnassosene bucktail popular with the fish, and I've had good luck with that lure in numerous other waters.

Well, in this manner we worked our way down the river, and always there was in my mind the thought that the real purpose of the trip was to give some fisherman a chance to get acquainted. And now could we help being drawn together? There's a real comradeship in such an adventure, where each member of the party has to rely on the other for the safety and well-being of all.

So the Major and his dad began to know each other. There were wonderful, happy moments in the evening as our little expedition sat about the campfire splashing yarns. There were long tramps on the wood trails, when we talked of the future, or marvelled at the tracks of bear and moose and deer. And finally when the long day was done and we two snuggled into our sleeping-bags, side by side, there was the "Good night, Daddy"—"Good night, old man" which meant a lot more than could be packed into a book of fine words.

End Of A Perfect Trip
 At last came the time when we

Summer Drop In War Production Is Over And New Peak Expected Soon

By ROBERT M. FARRINGTON

The summer level-off in war production is over and the torrent of guns, planes and other munitions is expected to increase steadily through the rest of the year.

This is not due to the elimination of some one single defeat in the production picture; it is a general improvement of a number of things which caused a plateau in May and June production and set leaders worrying publicly about complacency and absenteeism.

While these contributed to the unsatisfactory figures, they were not an important factor. Actually, there was no drop in production. We were producing a tremendous amount for (which were a five per cent increase over the previous month), but May's production was equal to April's and June's ten per cent more. July shows a considerable improvement and this upward trend is expected to continue.

Production Figure High
 Aircraft manufacture was less than the Army and Navy asked for but still a tremendous production figure. Some of the reasons that we did not reach our goal for planes were designed changes, faulty parts, manpower shortages, poor distribution of raw materials and failure of engine manufacturers to keep up with demand.

At the time that President Roosevelt spoke of our making 125,000 planes in a year, we had not tested our theories of plane design in battle. As we pitted our best against the Messerschmitt and the Zero, we found advantages and weaknesses in every American plane. Simple improvements were made quickly without interrupting the fast pace of construction. But when a radical alteration in design, or a new plane, became necessary, production had to suffer while the changes were made.

Weight Means
 Naturally, the specific nature of the changes in our planes which allowed production this summer is a secret, although it is known that a number of improved models are in the works.

Because it is unsafe to chart production of planes on numbers alone (A trainer can be turned out in a fraction of the time it takes to build a four-engine bomber) the War Production Board now gives volume on a weight basis—and is not too satisfied with that method.

For instance, in the time it takes to build 10 of the big, super-bombers perhaps 100 fighters could be made. But 10 of those monster ships in the right spot and just announced the company is in production with it. This engine and our P-51 fighters, some airmen believe, will be the super-champ of the air, absolutely unstopable in any language.

Cut-backs in requirements of such weapons as tanks, certain anti-tank guns, machine tools, etc., has been down the true production figures because none of these cut-backs were taken into account when weighting the actual production against schedules.

If the goal for tanks was set at 5,000, but the Army reduced it to 2,000, a production rate of 1,500, 25 percent more than the Army actually wanted, would figure as a 50 percent "drop", because actual production was only half the original schedule.

Now that some of the many cut-backs are out of the way and design changes fairly well settled, the process, production can pick up again and the succeeding months of the year will show encouraging increases, it is believed.

The answer will tell you.

When the Long Distance Service is busy, you will hear a busy tone. This tone is a signal that the line is busy and you should wait a moment before trying again.

Col. DeCottes, after outlining the main events of the war, starting with Hitler's invasion of Poland in 1939, predicted that even with the present surrender of the Germans, victory over Germany was still in the dim future. "We see no chance of victory over the Germans until the end of 1944," he said.

He told of the stand of England, when sorely beset, "she stood alone, unprepared, without a single ally, back in 1940". She lacked both trained and untrained personnel, seasoned soldiers and supplies, and was menaced, suffocated and almost strangled by submarines," he said.

"In the darkest days of the present war, England, standing alone, withstood the Luftwaffe and suffered the bombing and loss of life in London and other cities with fortitude. The turning point came in the Battle of Britain—but the days were still dark. Then Hitler sought to make a clean sweep by invading Russia, knocked at the gates of Moscow, and sent Russia reeling on her heels. Africa was menaced then by Rommel," he stated.

He then contrasted the present situation with that of those dark hours, but warned against over-optimism by Americans as to a quick and easy victory. He told of the intricate problems of logistics and preparation necessary to an invasion, particularly the huge amount of gasoline necessary to fuel the fighting planes. Visitors at Kiwanis were: Carl and Mrs. Grubb, Mrs. DeCottes, Bill Johnson, Mrs. J. M. Mamberger and G. M. Snyder of Orlando. J. G. Patterson, a member, was welcomed back.

Out there is a submarine that is being blown out of the water with rockets of spray pointing upward . . . or a soldier lying beside a bullet-riddled helmet spreading his fingers wide as the pain goes through him. HERE are people quiet in their homes, or busy in their gardens, thinking of the dead in combat. There is war, here only the semblance of war . . . security away from the blood and the sweat . . . a safety in living . . . a moment waiting for Victory, being won on battlefields, changing your life with that of the man who fights for you. Spend your money wisely against the suffering. A big difference is made NOW—in the day you loan money—your money is put to work and your money is the money he's fighting for. Make sure he has more Bonds and sweat, that his life may be less than yours.

Porter Lansing then took charge of a platoon and illustrated the movements on a broader scale, advancing the platoon under enemy fire by short rushes, showing the use of hand signals and demonstrating the formation of squad columns in line.

Other companies giving demonstrations which received particularly high praise for their work included the Leasburg company which put on an exhibition of close order drill. The demonstration of spot control and dispersal of mobs put on by the Quetta-Mount Dora company was also widely commended by officers of the battalion and men alike.

Capt. C. C. Benz of Orlando assisted by two officers from the Orangeburg company stationed at the Orlando Air Base gave a lecture and demonstration on the use of hand grenades, demolitions and gas warfare. As part of his demonstration tear gas was used causing the men to put on their gas masks.

In explaining the work of riot control, Capt. A. G. Jeffries of the Quetta-Mount Dora company said that the purpose of this work is to maintain law and order and to disperse mobs without loss of life. But he emphasized the point that it is sometimes better to sacrifice one or two lives among dangerous mobsters than it is to show a weakness which might result in a free-for-all fight and the loss of many lives.

The Sanford men were complimentary of the camp and its surroundings which includes a lake where swimming and some fishing was enjoyed, and a parade ground where formal retreat ceremonies were held each evening as well as drills and demonstrations. The various companies were housed in screened wooden barracks surrounding the parade ground and except for the guard duty were not troubled by mosquitoes or other insects.

Among those attending the camp from Sanford were: Capt. John Galloway, Lieut. John Meisch, Lieut. Porter Lansing, 1st Sgt. C. W. Hill, Sgt. M. L. Ralston, Sgt. J. N. Hobson, Jr., Sgt. George A. Living Costs UP!

Electricity DOWN!

- Food, fuel and clothing are higher. But electricity is still cheap! Since August, 1940, the cost of living has gone up 22%. During the same three years, the average price of household electricity has dropped 9%!
- Today, electricity for the average household costs only about half as much as it did fifteen years ago. If your bill is a little higher than it was then, that's because you use a lot more electric appliances. And you're getting just about twice as much for your money!
- Why is electricity so cheap? Because the electric companies under experienced business management have done a better and better job of bringing the benefits of electricity to more and more families at lower and lower prices.

FLORIDA POWER & LIGHT COMPANY

DON'T WASTE ELECTRICITY JUST BECAUSE IT ISN'T RATIONED!

Present low rates are even more remarkable when you consider that the business-managed electric companies last year passed along as taxes over 24¢ out of every dollar you paid them—over 8¢ to local and state governments—over 15¢ to the federal government—a total of more than $628,000,000.

General Marshall is mentioned as the probable commander of the Allied invasion of northern Europe. After the invasion has been successfully carried out, political leaders will be talking of running him for President instead of General MacArthur.

The Titusville Star-Advocate is happy that this is one summer most of us won't have to recuperate from a vacation. On the other hand it is better to have to recuperate from a vacation than from overwork.

As has often been stated before when a dog bites a man that's nothing, but when a man bites a dog that is news. Well, we suppose when a snake bites a man and the snake drops dead, that's worthy of passing mention too.

The battle from now on is more social security, more federal aid and larger old-age pensions. The initial step has been taken in the setting up of these agencies and the fight of the future will be larger and still larger grants.

Pressure groups will play one candidate against the other and sell their vote to the one promising the biggest cut of federal funds.

Titusville Star-Advocate. And the manpower problem will not leave when the war is over. There will always be a manpower problem as long as a man does not have to work for a living.

Reports from Australia reveal that Mrs. Roosevelt inspected a U. S. The committee that was the cause of Prime Minister Churchill's resignation later visited an amphibious landing demonstration at the same camp.

World Language

This talk of a world language may be getting somewhere. Only the other day a committee representing the ministers of education of eight countries, meeting in London, recommended that English or French be chosen as the world language after the war.

While use of a common language might not contribute much towards international friendship, it would at least make it easier to do foreign business, and help scientists to keep up with what is being discovered in other lands.

No scientist now reads English, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Dutch, the Scandinavian and Slavic languages, as well as Hungarian, Turkish and Finnish. Yet worth while articles are published in all these tongues.

Esperanto and other artificial languages have been suggested as a solution. Whatever their merits, they simply have not caught on as their founders hoped.

A famous American naval hero is brought to mind again by the concluding volume, just published, of Charles L. Lewis' life of Admiral Farragut.

Farragut was the one Northern military chieftain appointed at the start of the Civil War who was good enough to hold his post throughout. On land there was a succession of unsatisfactory commanders: McDowell, McClellan, Burnside, Pope, Hooker and the best of them, Meade.

Best remembered for his well-known but still thrilling order at the battle of Mobile Bay, "Damn the torpedoes! Full steam ahead!" Farragut has ever since been an inspiration to the American navy.

Dick Wakefield is baseball's latest loss. The most publicized rookie of the year, this University of Michigan graduate has more than justified the $52,000 that Detroit paid for his contract.

Now, when Detroit needs him most, with second place in sight, Wakefield has been reclassified I-A and joined the naval aviation cadets.

Skills are one of the compensations. Unskilled or half-skilled young men go into the army, and skilled mechanics, engineers, painters, carpenters and other trained young men come out of it.

Employment agencies of one sort and another are beginning to take cognizance of the fact that the demobilized men will have skills they did not have before, and planning to take advantage of it in placing men in jobs after the war.

Fail Of Benito Mussolini Is Seen As Personal Triumph For Anthony Eden

By E. C. DANIEL
AP Feature
LONDON, Sept. 5. Benito Mussolini's fall was a personal triumph for the tall slender man in a shiny blue suit who holds Great Britain's second highest war-time job.

The man, Anthony Eden, is familiar—but not the suit, which is often his working garb as Britain's Foreign Minister and Leader of the House of Commons. The suit, (unlikely attire for the fashion plate he was once supposed to be), the man and his job make up the personality most likely to succeed Winston Churchill as prime minister.

"Anthony Eden," said one of his friends recently, "is one of those rare men who decided to make a stand on principle and was vindicated 100 percent."

Political Miracle
Millions of Britons shared his principle of not supporting dictators, and the political miracle of his vindication made him their messiah.

Eight years ago this summer, Eden led the forces of democracy in their effort at the League of Nations to impose economic sanctions on Italy for its attack on Ethiopia. Public revision against the Hoare-Laval treaty, which would have given British and French consent to the Italian conquest of Ethiopia swept 32-year-old Anthony Eden into the Foreign Office as Britain's youngest Foreign Secretary in 40 years.

His distaste for administering a member of the House of Commons, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's appeasement policy became more obvious, and finally, on February 22, 1933, he walked out of the government. He did not return to the cabinet until Britain had taken up arms.

Before the House convened at 11 A.M., Eden usually has done half a day's work at the Foreign Office. Just before 11, he walks bareheaded from his office to the House.

"Sartorially, the news about Eden today is that he has no hat," said one of his assistants. "Rather, he has one for more formal occasions, but the rarely wears it" (Although he set an international style five years ago with a black homburg).

Diplomatic Speechmaking
When not at the Foreign Office or in the House, Eden may be engaged in the proceedings of any of several government committees on which he serves. Or he may be making a speech—the task he detests most. His voice is as slender as his form, his delivery unspontaneous, his platform manner retiring, although he is engagingly talkative in private.

It is the results he gets, not the speeches he makes, that have lifted him to the top in public estimation. Churchill placed great reliance on him, and has put him forward more prominently than any other potential successor. As a member of the House, Eden is making war cabinet, Eden is intimately with the prime minister in deciding the closely guarded military strategy and diplomatic policy.

Although a Conservative, Eden is regarded as a progressive and often more popular with the Labor party than his own.

When he resigned from the government in 1933, it was the Laborites who introduced a motion of censure against the government for its conduct of foreign affairs.

Met With Hitler
When Eden and Sir John Simon went to Berlin 10 years ago on a fruitless disarmament mission, Hitler as usual delivered a two-hour harangue to his guests, expecting them to all respectfully at attention and refrain from smoking.

In the middle of the harangue from a grammar school, who stretched his long legs, leaning against the ash of his chair, and yawned. But Eden's policy has gone beyond denouncing Hitler and yawning. It is based on what the Foreign Office calls the "four cornerstones": Great Britain, the United States, Russia and China.

Eden's talks with Stalin were, he said, the most exhaustive ever attempted between two nations. Not only did the British and Soviet spokesmen discuss the treaty, but they also discussed his later talks with Secretary Hull and President Roosevelt, which he considered to be somewhat in the nature of a military strategy.

Eden's attitude toward Russia, he said, was that ideological differences should not be allowed to interfere with amicable relations between the country and his. With the United States, he proposed in strengthening Britain's traditional bond of friendship on the basis of mutual self-interest—not on the less solid foundation of mutual language, culture and inheritance.

The British, he said, don't regard the American as a rival. Eden himself has been a friend of Walter P. Reuther.

As a tonic, it often perks up appetite, increases flow of gastric juices, thus aiding digestion and helping build resistance for those most needed. A 63-year record says: "Try CARDUI"—Adv.
