Although the current stock market slump has when out over five billion dollars in American wealth in the day, over 25 billion since August, and is strangely remain mount of the crash of 1929 which insugurated the depute sion and the long lines of unemployed seeking jobs, there is no reason to believe that the country necessarily is on the rocks or that Sanford will feel, the effects of the market's reaction.

On the contrary the little jolt which millions of in vestors have felt during the past few days should suffice to convince them that this "managed economy" which the politicians have been assuring them was all that was not essary to provide them with the comforts of a permanent boom is not all it is cracked up to be. The government can of course make prices go up or down at its pleasure mere-ly by tinkering with the value of money, or scattering a few more billions of paper money around the country, but it can't make them stay there. It can't "fix" stock mar-ket prices any more than it can "fix" other prices, not permanently. There is no such thing as a "controlled economy" although that is what we have been experimenting with for the past five years.

Because the government has managed to raise prices in a sort of subsidized prosperity, there were many who took it as the real thing and assumed that the time was ripe for a little experimenting with the economic order in the hopes of providing a higher social level for the average man. The aim was admirable but the methods used were destructive. Evidently thinking that business in the United States had recovered sufficiently to stand anything, they are talking about both the politicians and the labor unions hammered away We hope that will help to which might have been expected to ruin any man's business.

It is to be hoped that the shock which the country has received during the past few weeks will prove sufiguring that Florids iman't ficient to convince agitators and extremists of all campa that business still needs a little nourishing. Personally we believe it will. We believe that the little setback we are now witnessing will have a most wholesome effect both in tions went on a sit down strike _____ now wither and in getting politicians alt down strike, and it was at to give business a real "breathing spell."
