Bresking the news to the Rumanians that their kingdom, already stripped of Bessatabia and nothern Bukovina by Soviet Russiz, must suffer further amputations, the premier insisted nevertheless that Hungary at most would get only a small strip of Transylvania.

This he described as just big enough to make it possible for all Hungarians to return home.

He intimated negotiations with Hungary would be long and biffer and advised both Hungary and Bulgaria—the latter a claimant for the return of southern Dobruja—to be moderate in demands as the best means of preventing trouble.

As to Hungary, he declared, the dispute "could be easily requisited" by the latter's acceptance of population transfers and "of economic collaboration. But, he went on, if Hungary insists on tarritorial cession from Runania.
