TEEN TALK

AP Newsfeatures
DEAR JUDY,
What does a young woman's fancy turn to in spring? You guessed—boys! At our best roost the other night the Jacksons were the big topic of conversation. One of the kids wanted to know whether girls let boys kiss 'em on the first date.

Some of the kids thought a little peck on the cheek didn't make a whole of a difference, and after all the boys expect it. The rest of the heps thought it silly to seem too eager to kiss a boy on the first date. And why kiss a boy your first evening pure you like positively promiscuous, they decided.

But the big problem is this, say the girls—what to do if the boy tries anyway?

If the girl is at a movie or on an early date near her home, this shouldn't be a problem. But teenagers who neck on parties, automobile trips or in secluded spots are asking for trouble.

Such situations may serve as a source of encouragement to a boy who may not be easily discouraged.

The kids also decided that you don't have to pet to be popular; boys who want to be wolves should be ostracized from the group; a boy can appreciate your liking him without being overly friendly.

Have you ever been to a zoo? It can be lots of fun. Of course the kids always have an excuse such as "I'm taking my little sister," but it's big sister who usually does the equalling—if you'd never really squiver—if you saw leopards, tigers, lions, black, chocolate and spotted mice; a talking crow; baby llama, lambs, ducks, geese, skunk, guinea pigs and pigeons.

Maybe this is animal season, because the kids have also adopted plastic button animals in the shape of squirrels, horses, fawns, cocker spaniels and bulldogs. They are wearing them on charm bracelets, bobby-pins and even earrings.

Now that the camping season is here, kids will have to be wary of clothes and blankets which may be burned—and more important than that of stray sparks which may burn them.

If all washable camping clothes such as shirts and overalls, dunnies, etc., are dipped in a solution of nonflammable salts and water, damage may be averted.

Here's the way: Dissolve ounces of borax and 3 ounces of boric acid (dry) in 2 quarts of hot water. Stir until borax is dissolved and then dip clothes which already have been washed. Make sure garments are saturated. Wring as dry as possible and hang in the shade to dry. If ironing is necessary, use a moderately heated iron. Non-washable fabrics—blankets and heavy wool clothes—should be sprayed with the solution. This finish will last as long as garments aren't washed or get soaked with rain. It must be applied again after laundering.

STRENGTH IN POCKETS
Diagonal stitching is a good ending for a patch pocket corner. A frequent tearing place on clothing worn during active work and play is under a patch pocket corner. When sewing this kind of pocket to a garment, one way to build strength is to end the stitching with a diagonal design at the corner, say textile and clothing specialists who have been testing designs for this purpose.

These tests, aimed particularly at improving serviceability of women's work dresses and children's clothing, have been made at Ohio State University in cooperation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics.

Almost any clothes closet provides an exhibition of varied endings to pocket stitching now in use. Five commonly used, and two less often used, designs or stitching pocket corners were compared in the tests. The tests were all made on one kind of fabric, using 14 stitches to the inch, and number 50, 6-cord unmercerized thread.

Markedly the strongest of the seven methods was stitching made in the diagonal design. The specialists chose this design for testing when seeking ways of stitching that would distribute the strain somewhat when a pocket is pulled.

The diagonal ending, rarely used at present on women's house-dresses, proved almost twice as strong as the boxed or rectangular ending. The boxed ending was strongest of the commonly used ways of stitching patch pocket corners.

The diagonal ending was found to be four times as strong as the weakest commonly used stitching, the retracted ending. This gets its name because the stitching is run

New Insecticides Found For Gardens

By ROBERT E. GEIGER
AP Newsfeatures Writer
BELTSVILLE, Md.—There's a new school of thought in insect control that simplifies bug killing and disease control for the home gardener.

Briefly, it's this:
Rotenone and pyrethrum will keep almost all of the backyard pests under control.
There also are scientific Johnnies-comes-lately, like DDT, the super killer that got its big test in the war as a slayer of disease carrying insects. Now the gardener may use it as a supplement for the two fundamental insecticides, rotenone and pyrethrum.

W. H. White, chief of the division of truck crop and garden insect investigations for the U. S. Department of Agriculture, recommends that home gardeners discard arsenical poisons entirely. He believes the arsenicals are too poisonous to use on food plants when rotenone and pyrethrum are available. And these two bug killers are expected to be in good supply this season.

In addition to these two poisons, White suggests home gardeners will forestall damage to their gardens if they broadcast poison bait to kill cutworms before the plants appear or are set out.

Poison bait may be purchased in most seed stores, ready-prepared.

Cutworm Collars
It should be used especially near tomatoes and cabbage plants. White says cutworms are almost sure to attack these vegetables if left unguarded. An alternative is to place cardboard of metal "collars" around the young plants.

Otherwise, he believes, insect control should be delayed until pests appear.

Gardeners, he says, should keep a careful check on their plants and at the first sign of the presence of harmful insects steps should be taken to kill them off.

Otherwise the job becomes a serious one.

In general, he says, pyrethrum is effective against insects that damage plants by sucking their juices. Rotenone is effective against those that cause damage by chewing.

White suggests they may be used against such common pests as aphids, beetles, including bean, squash and cucumber beetles, and lice.

He recommends using them in dust form. Rotenone dust, especially, stays longer on the plants than rotenone spray.

He also suggests that purchasers check the rotenone and pyrethrum packages to be sure they contain at least three-fourths of one percent (75 percent) of rotenone or 1 percent of pyrethrum. No less than that is effective against many pests.

Rotenone, he says, is particularly effective against the Mexican bean beetle, cucumber beetles and cabbage and broccoli worms. It also kills some aphids and plant lice.

Nicotine also is an aphid killer. As for DDT, now available to the home gardener, White suggests it is good for killing potato insects and cabbage worms; the tomato fruit worm and Japanese beetles. But it should not be used on cabbage plants after the heads begin to form.

It also kills insects that attack rose plants and may be used with sulphur to discourage black spot.

New Compound
Another new compound is being given a trial in greenhouses and in fields and may be offered the public later.

It is hexathyl tetraphosphate, nicknamed "het." In preliminary tests it has proved to be a powerful killer of aphids in greenhouses.

The weed killer, 2,4-D, may save back-breaking work, White says. But the experts warn amateur gardeners it cannot be used in vegetable and flower gardens.

Plastic laminated cotton is sometimes used to replace metal gears.

"Citrus fruit differs from pears, apples, bananas and other such fruits in that it contains no starch, and therefore does not become sweeter after harvesting," stated Dr. Harding.

In response to a question, Dr. Harding stated that most people can normally use highly acid fruits, but that in some people, and especially in infants, it is important to maintain a high standard, as their bodies sometimes cannot succumb up the acids, which would leave such an individual highly acid.

LATE TIN KING HAD FORTUNE OF $300,000,000

BUENOS AIRES, April 24—Simon I. Patino, eighty-seven, the Bolivian tin king, who was one of the world's wealthiest men, died Sunday at his suite in the Hotel Plaza here after a heart attack.

Cans Helped Build Fortune
Simon I. Patino grew a little richer every time a housewife opened a tin can. Though his name was not familiar to the public, he had a fortune estimated at between $300,000,000 and $500,000,000, and he controlled the output of at least one-fifth of the world's tin, an indispensable metal in modern life.

The tin king's power and fortune came to him comparatively late in life. At the age of thirty-five he was hauling firewood in the Bolivian Andes for a living. Ten years later he was earning $35 a month as a clerk in a general store at Pruro, Bolivia. One day the store owner came a Portuguese tin prospector asking for $85 worth of dynamite and grub on credit. When the store owner's son refused the grubstake, Mr. Patino guaranteed the loan in exchange for a deed to the tin claim.

According to the generally accepted story, Mr. Patino was discharged by the store owner for having given the grubstake. The prospector failed to find his tin, but assured Mr. Patino that it was there for anyone with the patience and funds to dig it out. Mr. Patino borrowed enough money to keep himself and his wife alive for a year and went prospecting himself. He found the vein, which he called the Negra mine, and staked out adjacent claims. By 1908, Mr. Patino, the humble Spanish-Indian wood carter, was rich. Once he started to sign a deed selling his claim to American interests for what was to him a fabulous sum, but his wife tore the contract up.

Fought Over Claims

He did not, however, keep his new wealth without a fight. A Frenchman with an old title to the Negra mine turned up. There was fighting, and men were killed. When the Frenchman's claim entered the courts the title record disappeared mysteriously from a train and was never found. In the end Mr. Patino's ownership was confirmed at law.

In 1911 he went to Europe for the first time. He took along his own chefs, a herd of his own cattle to be slaughtered for his meat, his own wine and his own chili peppers.

He began to buy more tin mines in Bolivia until he controlled two-thirds of the country's production. He built railways to carry his ore. When World War I was fought the price of his tin soared. He organized his Bolivian mines into a corporation in 1924, Patino Mine and Enterprises, Consolidated, bought major interests in British and Dutch tin corporations in Malaya and the East Indies and acquired a smelter at Bootle, Eng-

WHITNEY SHOW WILL BE TRIBUTE TO BLAKELOCK

By Gaston Coblentz

A great American landscapist, whose canvases sold for $20,000 in New York in 1916 while he was in an insane asylum and his family starved, in the Catskills, will be commemorated in an exhibit opening tomorrow at the Whitney Museum of American Art, 10 West Eight Street.

Forty-four of Ralph Albert Blakelock's paintings will be shown on the 100th anniversary of the year of his birth in New York, coinciding with the centenary of City College, where he was a student until he left without being graduated in 1866.

Blakelock's life is an object lesson that "we ought to recognize our artists before they go insane," Lloyd Goodrich, associate curator of the museum, said yesterday. "It's one of the worst artist stories ever."

Sales Start Too Late

Blakelock was driven to insanity by his inability to support his wife and nine children in Brooklyn by means of his art. In the 1880's he was selling his painting for as little as $17.50 apiece. Critics ignored or condemned him.

In 1899, a month after the birth of his youngest child, he was sent to an insane asylum. Almost as soon as he was confined, his work began to sell. In 1900 a critic wrote that "few Americans deserve a higher niche in the temple of fame."

For seventeen years following this praise, Blakelock occupied a niche in the Middleton State Hospital for the Insane at Middletown, N. Y. Mrs. Blakelock and her younger children lived in a bare one-room farmhouse in a ravine near Catskill.

In 1916, a Blakelock Fund was started in New York with an exhibition of his paintings at the Rinehart gallery. The artist was allowed a one-day visit to the city. He was accompanied here by a reporter of the New York Tribune. The paper announced his arrival with a two-column headline on April 12, 1916. He was described as a "child amidst the sights of the city," his eyes "shining with eagerness."

Thought He Was Wealthy

The artist's principal delusion when insane was that he was immensely wealthy. He once rewarded a friend for a small favor by sending him a check for $9,000,000.

Mr. Goodrich, displayed in his office a small leather folder containing three pieces of shut-cloth which Blakelock fashioned to the size and shape of currency bills. He gave them to William I. Cressmer, a Chicago collector, in 1916.

"Take this back to Chicago," the artist told Mr. Cressmer. "Don't spend it, but live off the interest." The "bills," preserved in their original condition, are landscapes painted to resemble currency. One of them is marked "$1,000,000." The paintings in this week's exhibition, which will continue till May 29, have been lent by twenty-eight museums and private collectors throughout the country.

Work Often Forged

With Albert Pinkham Ryder, Blakelock is frequently considered the leading representative in his generation of the romantic tradition in American painting. Shortly after he was sent to the hospital, forgery of his work began. No other American painter, the museum states, has been so extensively faked. Blakelock's art depicts twilight or nocturnal world, with little attempt at realistic accuracy.

Cora Rebecca Bailey, of Brooklyn, now ninety-one, co-operated with the museum in preparing the exhibition. She lives near Catskill, according to Mr. Goodrich, who said that five children also survive, none of whom lives in New York.

The depression of the 1930's failed to make more than a dent in his tin empire. To weather the slump he organized a world committee to stabilize tin prices and adjust production to world demand.

Cattle Roaming On Florida Highways Cause 31 Deaths

JACKSONVILLE, Apr. 24 (Special)—Thirty-one motorists and residents met their death in a collision with roaming cattle upon Florida's highways during the 5-year period, 1942-1946, when both travel and speed were greatly restricted owing to gasoline and rubber rationing, Florida State Chamber of Commerce reported yesterday.

During the same period and from the same cause 264 cows, pigs and chickens were injured many seriously, the chamber revealed. It was stated by the organization that property damage in excess of $50 was sustained in collisions reported by the State Department of Public Safety during that period.

Four hundred eighteen accidents came about as a result of direct collision with highway-roaming animals, and 208 took place in spite of efforts of motorists to avoid such collisions, it was stated.

In this latter category fatal cases and injuries were greatly increased, the State Chamber pointed out. In other words, it was possible that those motorists who tried to avoid collision with the animals who had no notice of impending trouble. Thirty-two of the 31 killed were motorists.

This portrayal is taken from the official records of the state of Florida, according to the State Chamber, and is released, frankly, with the hope that the lightfulness of the condition will be brought home to those having the responsibility and the authority to put a legal end to future episodes of this kind.

The State Chamber of Commerce is obligated to commend these factors which make a better Florida. Its obligation is to call attention to those factors which make Florida a more desirable place to live. Public opinion in Florida, if

Meeting Endorses Financial Aspects Of Education Plan

TAMPA, Apr. 24—(FNS)—Steering clear of the legislative duel between Governor Caldwell and the State Senate, the Florida Education Association at the closing of its annual convention last week adopted a resolution endorsing the financial aspects of the Citizens Committee on Education as the minimum necessary to provide a satisfactory program for all counties.

The resolution stated that any decrease in the citizens program would jeopardize the functioning of essential school activities and adversely affect teachers' salaries.

The association heard, without acting on, a message from Governor Caldwell proposing to restore the $3,200,000 cut he made in the citizens "minimum" program.

In response to telegrams from both House and Senate groups urging it to insist on a separate bill for school finances apart from educational reorganization plans, the FEA said in effect that it wanted the minimum program of the citizens' committee restored and that this was done in one bill of more than 700 separate provisions.

In other resolutions, the FEA called for a continued program to establish a $2,400 minimum salary for all teachers; asked the State Education Department to prepare plans for teacher recruitment; asked congress to pass the emergency appropriation for school lunch aid; urged expanded adult education recommended to Congress; that teachers' retirement payments up to $1,400 be exempted from Federal income tax.

We love 'em in December as we do in May

REMEMBER the day you first romped away in that Buick of yours? How those eight Fireball cylinders fairly floated you over the hills—how those road-steady two tons of lively car answered sweetly every light touch of your hand on the wheel—how you glided along with foursquare Buick oil springing smoothing every wrinkle in the road?

That's what your Buick was built to do. Years and years of that kind of driving are in it—especially when it gets the interested, informed car care this fine an automobile should have.

That doesn't mean just periodic lubrication, a body wash, battery check or bolt-tighten. It means thorough attention by competent Buick men—attention that keeps a Buick always a Buick.

Buicks are our babies. Even the smallest details are handled the way they should be for a Buick. We have Buick tools that do jobs better and sparker. We have men who know Buicks best. We have Buick-engineered parts that are precisely right for your car.

Put that all together and it's Buick car care.

Pretty clear, isn't it, that here is where your Buick will receive the best attention? After all, we love 'em heart and soul.
