Child's School Records: Open To Divorcees

A divorced parent now has the legal right to view the educational records of his child in Seminole County public schools even though he or she doesn't have legal custody of that

The Seminole County School Board ap-proved that right in an amendment to school policy Wednesday in order to comply with the state board rules and recent legislation on family rights and privacy, said Ralph Ray,

The federal law called the Family Rights and Privacy Act gave divorced parents without custody the right to view their child's records, Ray said. The Florida legislature passed legislation in 1978 to bring itself into compliance with the federal act.

Wednesday night's action was done to bring Seminole County public schools in compliance with both the state and federal standards for the viewing of education records by divorced parents, Ray said.

The Seminole County Public Schools maintains educational records on each student for use in planning instructiona programs, guidance, preparation of state and federal reports and for research, Ray said. as birthdate and sex to standardized test results, attendance records and health data. The policy also notifies the parents their child's records will not be seen by others except school officials "with a legitimate educational interest," Ray said.

"The policy outlines procedures for parents, who disagree with the content of the records, to challenge these contents," Ray said. "The policy places the responsibility for school educational records on the school principal and records not in the school on the Parents, guardians or adult students will also be informed they must give written consent to the school district for disclosure of personally identifiable information to other persons, Ray said. This consent must be signed and dated and must specify which records are to be disclosed, the purpose of the disclosure and the parties to whom the disclosure will be made.

Written consent, however, may not always be the key to releasing student educational records. The amendment states:

"The school will presume that either parent, the guardian, or the adult student has the right to sign the written consent for disclosure unless the school has been provided with evidence that there is a legally ning such matters as divorce, separation, or custody which provides to the contrary."

Student records, however, may be released without written consent to school officials, government personnel such as through the U.S. Commissioner of Education, school officials connected with financial aid, accrediting organizations and health and safety officials, Ray said.

A woman driving a white Datsun Saturday night damaged the gas nozzle at a Longwood service station when she left the station with the nozzle still in her tank, according to Seminole County The woman had pulled into the Phillips 66 Service station on state Route 434 and state Route 600 at the self-service island and placed the nozzle in her gas tank, deputies say. But when it started to rain, the woman quickly returned to her car and drove off with the nozzle still attached. An estimate of the damage to the nozzle was not available. No gasoline was taken.

About 625 students were evacuated (above) from Idyllwilde Elementary School about 1:15 p.m. Wednesday when a small fire erupted in one of the classrooms. The fire started when wax that was being melted on a hot plate caught an audiovisual screen on fire that was hanging overhead, said Principal Norma Ragsdale. The fire was extinquished before the firemen arrived and damages are limited to the screen which is valued at $12, she said.

United Press International In Washington, legislation for standby national gas rationing moved slowly forward Wednesday. So did the lines of cars backed up at stations in California, where motorists were getting their first taste of the real thing. California political leaders, led by Gov. Edmund C Brown Jr., were grumbling ever louder that the state, the only one forced to take such drastic measures, may not be getting its fair share of the national gas supply. Reaction to the first day of California's odd-even sales rationing was mixed, with lines reported shorter at some gas stations and just as long as before at others — but gas was no easier to find. The Senate finally approved a rewritten version of President Carter's standby gas rationing plan and sent it to the House, where a source close to the Democratic leadership predicted it would pass - narrowly - after

It's Business As Usual In D. C.

Despite reassurances from Washington, the American economy is now in the throes of a classic double-digit inflation, the rate of which has stunned even the economists, who no longer than 90 days ago were predicting an average price rise of only 7.8 percent. Although most economists agree that uninterrupted, multi-billion-dollar deficits in Washington constitute the chief fuel for this overheated economy, there is some disagreement over the unexpected price spurts during recent months.

Paul W. McCracken, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, believes a contributing cause is that sluggish rates of capital formation during much of this decade have meant less investment in new plant facilities. This in turn accounts for the sharp decline in U.S. productivity. American industry no longer possesses the modern, reserve capacity to meet increased foreign and domestic demand for goods. Prices are zooming because too many dollars are overrunning the supplies.

White House outbursts to the contrary, profits, the basis for new plants and more jobs, were cut by half during the last decade in real terms, when adjusted for inflation. The lack of normal profits and the resulting loss in productivity is just now making itself fully felt through soaring prices.

Meanwhile, it's business as usual in Washington. Measures recently introduced by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., and others to reduce spending have been beaten down by overwhelming margins. Congress plans to spend an additional $81 billion in the next fiscal year, to be financed partly by automatic windfall tax increases resulting from inflation pushing taxpayers into higher brackets. Even with billions of new revenue piling in from windfall taxes, the programmed deficit will be about $30 billion.

And because the Carter administration needs a scapegoat on inflation to distract attention from its own failure to balance, the budget, we may expect the private sector to be blamed for not hewing to the 7 percent voluntary wage-price guidelines. This, of course, could justify a quick fix through mandatory controls that have always failed, and with disastrous results, every time they have been tried anywhere in history, including the declining days of the Roman Empire.

Amidst all the economic complexities, this much is clear: Our devastating inflation will not improve until the federal government reduces spending, balances the budget and stimulates production through tax and fiscal policies that encourage capital formation and investment.

Shalom, Salaam

The cargo ship Ashdod, flying the blue and white Star of David flag at its stern and the Egyptian banner at its masthead, entered the southern end of the Suez Canal the other day, the first Israeli vessel to try to transit the canal in 25 years. It was a tangible benefit of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty now in effect. And peace was the byword. Ships in the canal blew their horns and whistles. Those aboard the freighter shouted,

"Shalom, Shalom," and Arabs lining the banks of the canal, called back, "Salaam"-their word for "peace." The 100-mile canal passage can be a scorcher in summer months, but this time of year the weather is spring-like—and the Ashdod, in a convoy of 32 ships, had a pleasant voyage. Its crew stood on deck, taking in the sight and waving to those The Ashdod was the first ship flying the Israeli flag to pass through the canal since Israel became a state in 1948. An Israeli ship attempted passage in 1964, but was seized by Egypt. "I never expected to see this day," said Carol Mendelovitz captain of the Israeli cargo ship. May the Israelis and people of all nations always have the right to transit in peace.

latest in the Johnny Carson situation?"

The Clock

It sounds like something out of a movie script for the "Lone Ranger." It could only happen in the movies, right?

The scenario is set. Two Sanford police officers attempt to arrest a woman who is apparently intoxicated but the small frame five-foot, four-inch tall woman belies her strength. Before the evening is over, she will injure four law enforcement officers, bitting one man so hard he must be treated at the hospital.

As the two officers are wrestling with the woman, another young woman sees the struggle, stops her car and helps subdue the woman. She then jumps in her car and follows the two officers over to the Seminole County Jail to make sure her assistance By SHARON CARRASCO isn't needed any more.

Then before they can thank her or get her name, the woman climbs in her car and disappears. It's obvious (to me anyway) she felt she was just doing her duty as a good citizen and didn't want a pat on the head. She didn't think it was anything special, but there's where we disagree.

People like this woman who perform these socalled altruistic acts are the adhesive that holds our society together. They are the ones we must trust and depend on in this world we sometimes refer to as "cold, selfish and unloving." Without intending to sound corny, I hope and pray this breed of human being doesn't grow extinct.

I'll never forget the time I was riding on a bus in Kansas City at the age of 16. I had $20 in my wallet and my new driver's license. As forgetful as I was (and still am), I left my purse on the seat. I didn't realize it until I reached home. Then it was too late. Someone probably pulled out all my money and dumped my purse in a trash can in an alley somewhere, I thought. Twenty dollars was just too much money to not tempt a stranger.

After a few cries of frustration, I got a phone call from a man who found my purse with all $20 intact. He came to my home, returned my purse, refused to accept a reward and quickly left.

I guess we've all been touched by a good Samaritan from time to time. The people who aren't rewarded, don't take any credit, aren't written about with Banner size headlines across the page. But yet, I don't know how this world could survive without them. I only hope we don't ever have to find

Free And Easy Oil Prices

WASHINGTON (NEA) - The good news (relatively speaking) is that the legal price of gasoline, heating oil and all other petroleum products is spiraling upward at a dizzying pace. The bad news is that the illegal price, charged by fastbuck artists willing to risk violations of federal law, is soaring even higher - but government efforts to apprehend and prosecute those criminals invariably are too little too late. The sorry state of the federal law enforcement program is vividly illustrated by two documents that surfaced here recently but went virtually

The Justice Department's first complete listing of all cases referred for prosecution by the Department of Energy (DOE) contains 22 separate allegations of criminal activity, many of them involving multiple defendants. only two exceptions, however, none of the criminal cases was even referred to the Justice Department until late 1978 or early this year. The oldest case on the list dates back to mid-1976, but it still hasn't come to trial. Another case goes back to late 1977 but wasn't concluded until last month, when four oilmen were sentenced to prison terms by a federal judge in Tampa, Fla. On the same day, a federal grand jury in Houston indicted four petroleum companies and five oilmen on charges of participating in a "daisy chain" scheme. The subject is sex, so if you offend easily don't say that at least you haven't been warned.

Specifically, it's the sex life of the cockroact and it happens to be of intense interest to Dutch and American scientists for reasons that have nothing to do with X-ratings. They have achieved a major research breakthrough, as reported by "Chemical and Engineering News", publication of the American Chemical Society, that could turn out to be bad news for the cockroach but very good news for all human city dwellers.

The story begins at laboratories in the Dutch city of Delft where no less than 75,000 females. virgins all, gave their all so that researchers could isolate a substance called periplanone B, a sex stimulant what subsequently has been reproduced artificially at Columbia University. To give you an idea of how stimulating periplanone B can be when a lady roach dabs a bit behind an antenna or wherever, a mere hundredth of a gram is sufficient to turn on 100 billion males weighing in at a total 10,000 metric

Guidry Wants To Play Outfield, No One Listening

Woody Allen wants to be Benny Goodman, Ron Guidry wants to be Nobody really takes Guidry seriously, though, and that bugs

He's got this thing about playing the outfield, and in his heart he feels he can make the same switch Babe Ruth did - from the pitching mound to the outfield - but he can't convince anyone

"Everyone thinks I'm kidding," he keeps saying. "I tell 'em I want to play the outfield and no one listens. I tell 'em I can hit and they don't believe me. They know I can run." "How well do you think you can hit?" a newsman asked Guidry

"Everytime I see him go after a ball near the fence, Ithink 'Oh, God, don't let anything happen to him," said Yankee President Al Rosen, who was at Wednesday's luncheon. Last October, Guidry went after one fly ball with such utter disregard for his own welfare before the final World Series' game at Dodger Stadium he ran into the right-center field fence out there and tore up his knee pretty good.

"I caught the ball, though," he beamed.

Graham To Sign Reforms Despite Panel's Objections

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (UPI)— Gov. Bob Graham has indicated he will sign a massive workmen's compensation reform bill even though an insurance advisory committee says the plan is dangerous and should be vetoed. Florida would become the first state in the country to adopt a wage loss industrial insurance system, with benefits limited to medical bills, lost pay and other expenses unless the worker's pay when he returned to the job is substantially less than before the injury. Graham has until Friday to veto or sign the bill CS-SB188 or it becomes law automatically. He appointed a committee of insurance experts to evaluate the proposal and their report released Tuesday criticized every major

The results of a one-month test of a single patrol car were released Wednesday. They were impressive in terms of percentages. Mileage improved 100 percent from 4.2 to 8.3 miles a gallon on the 1978 Dodge Monaco with a 400 cubic inch "police special" engine. The tests will continue for another six months, but so far "it seems to be performing better, with smoother idling."

Governor Warns Of Controls

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI)— If gas shortages reach 15 percent in Florida, Gov. Bob Graham warned in a speech Wednesday night, mandatory controls could be imposed.

"If the pattern of March of this year continues when gas consumption was stablized, then there will only be a 5 percent shortfall of gas this summer," he told the Florida League of Women Voters convention of 180 persons.

"But if gas consumption continues to rise as in other recent months, the gas shortage would be as high as 15

Life Or Death Bill Killed

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (UPI)— The House has finally killed a radical bill giving Death Row inmates the option of staying in prison for life instead of execution.

The option passed the House Corrections, Probation and Parole Committee Wednesday when a move to reconsider last week's favorable vote failed. Later, it was left to die in the criminal justice committee.

Saves Lives

A law that saves lives is a good one, most people would agree. The 55 mph speed limit law, however has become one of the most controversial pieces of legislation passed by Congress in recent years. Presently, there is discussion in several states about abolishing the 55 mph speed limit; at the same thime, arguments for maintaining the law are very strong. It saves fuel and even more important - it

Passed by Congress in 1974 as a temporary fuel conservation measure, during the Arab oil embargo, the 55 mph speed limit was made permanent in January, 1975. As a result of the legislation, the Federal Highway Administration estimates motor fuel savings at 3.6 billion gallons per year.

More significant, however, is that traffic fatalities dropped the first year after the law was enacted. Fatalities fell from 54,052 in 1973 to 45,196 in 1974. That saving of approximately 9,000 lives was maintained each an increase of 2,148 over 1976, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. Traffic deaths are slowly rising but people are still driving at lower speeds than they did before the 55 mph maximum was

According to the National Safety Council (NSC), in 1973 the number of vehicles exceeding 65 mph was 31 percent. This figure was down to six percent in 1974 and 1975. "The motorist who drove 70 or 75 mph when speed limits were 65 mph may be traveling at 60 mph now. He is exceeding the speed limit — as he was before — but he has cut his speed 10 or 15 mph," says an NSC spokesperson, "and that reduces accidents and saves lives."

To conserve gasoline, the 55 mph speed limit was selected by the federal government as the median energy efficient speed based upon its studies of wind resistance and engine efficiency factors. Studies by the Auto Information Council say there is a less of one mile to the gallon for syncy literates of five comb over 50.

automatic transmissions and located where you could lose Be Sure To Avoid Front-End Follies

No area of auto repair is fraught with more fallacy and misunderstanding than front-end alignment. More alignments are unnecessarily performed than are any other adjustment. Many mechanics do not know the basics of alignments when they are not called for. Often people assume an alignment is needed just because tires are wearing strangely. Or they think their car's alignment is wrong because the steering wheel isn't straight. That's not necessarily so.

Strange or uneven tire wear does bring alignment into question. But first check tire inflation. A badly deflated front tire, for instance, will cause a car to pull to that side, especially while braking. If the front end is realigned before checking the tire inflation, the car will be out of alignment again as soon as the tires are filled to the proper pressure. Every motorist should carry a tire-pressure gauge in the car. Use of the gauge can perform wonders for tire wear handling and pulling problems.

Sometimes a car's alignment changes when the spare tire is put on after a flat. That's because the spare may not match the other tires in size, especially if it is a recap.

Carrying heavy, unbalanced loads can also affect alignment. Most cars can compensate for normal load changes, but no front-end setting is perfect for every Worn shock absorbers, springs and steering parts also affect alignment. On some cers, adjusting the torsion bars to bring the vehicle to level position will bring alignment. back to specifications.

Approach Your Purchase Sensibly

Want To Avoid Buying A Lemon?

Many people are reluctant to buy a used car for fear of getting stung. But if the buyer approaches the purchase of a used car sensibly he can avoid the "lemons" and the less desirable vehicles, and can assure himself of getting his money's worth.

Let's assume that you have shopped at several reputable dealers and have found a car that fits your needs and your budget. What should you do next? First, inspect the car yourself. This should be done at the dealer's place of business.

Open the hood, trunk, doors, etc. Look over, under, around and through the car. Make notes as to anything you don't understand or anything that looks questionable. is there oil all over the motor? Is raw gas visible on top of the engine? If there are oil or fuel leaks where are they coming from and can they be corrected? Is the transmission fluid fresh or does it look and smell burnt? Is the cooling system full of coolant? Does the cooling system look like it needs to be cleaned and flushed? Does everything on the car work? Are the tires satisfactory to

Have the dealer or his representative accompany you during this inspection. If you have any questions he can answer them and he will tell you what the dealer is prepared to do to correct any flaws that you may find. Keep in mind that used cars are not perfect. You are looking for signs of major mechanical problems, not nitpicky little flaws. Safety and mechanical soundness are what you are after. If you are looking for perfection, buy a

If the car still seems like what you want, now is the time to get serious. First, agree on a price. Next, have the dealer write up a conditional sales order stating price, equipment and any repairs to be done prior to delivery. Put a deposit on the car with the stipulation that you intend to buy if the car is found to be in satisfactory con- to have those flaws corrected, or you may ask him to dition by your independent mechanic. Remember, you are adjust the price of the car to enable you to correct those going to take the car off the dealer's lot. You are liable for flaws yourself.

anything that happens to the car while you are getting it checked, and you should get it back to the dealer as soon as possible. Do not expect to keep the car overnight, as most dealer insurance prohibits lending cars out for any reason. Also, do not expect the dealer to part with his car if you are only willing to put up a $5 or $10 deposit. Usually $50 or $100 will suffice.

Take the car to a reputable mechanic. Do not take the car to your uncle Joe, your boyfriend, your flance or your little brother. Only a certified mechanic is qualified to do the tests that you now need, and a man who earns his living working on cars is going to do a thorough, impartial job. Have him do the following checks. Remove wheels and note condition of brake linings and drums. Take a compression check on all cylinders. (A 15 percent to 20 percent variance between cylinders is acceptable.) Put a vacuum gauge on the engine to determine condition of the valve train. Road test the vehicle to check for high speed shimmy, ignition miss, flat spots during acceleration. rearend noise and anything that appears out of the ordinary. Have him note in writing the results of his tests and take the car and the test results back to the dealer. If your mechanic found any flaws you may want the dealer

Your next best protection against getting stung is some form of warranty. Most used car dealers have a 12-month - 12,000-mile service policy available at extra cost. This is much the same as the extended service policies offered by the major department stores on lawnmowers, washers and dryers and other large mechanical items. It is usually a mechanical breakdown insurance agreement administrated by an independent warranty company.

Service policies protect the buyer against mechanical failure, usually with a $25 deductible clause. Service policies are available on used cars that have been inspected by the warranty company; are no more than five years old; and fall within the mileage limits set by the company. If a service policy is available you should definitely give it some thought.

On older, high mileage vehicles the dealer will usually stand behind the car himself. The most common policy now is called a "Free Service Agreement," wherein, for a specified period of time, the dealer will supply labor to repair defective parts and the purchaser pays for the parts. This is a fair arrangement. A good example of this might be a defective timing chain. The cost of the chain might be $20. Average time for installation is five hours. At normal labor rates the labor cost would be $60 to $75. but with a Free Service Agreement the purchaser pays only for the parts, or $20. Most reputable dealers will have something along these lines to offer the potential used car

Protection from getting stung is a combination of common sense before you buy, and having the dealer's promises in writing after you buy. Again, a reputable used car dealer will make sure that you are completely satisfied with your purchase, because a satisfied buyer

With Road STAGES OF INFLATION—
The cross-section upper left shows underinflation which causes extreme tire flexing and builds up excessive heat, running the risk of failure. It also causes rapid wear on the outer edges of the tread. Overinflation (upper right) causes tires to run hard and subjects them to impact damage and weakening of the carcass. It also causes excessive wear in the center of the tread. Proper inflation (lower left) shows the correct profile for full contact with the road.

At the heart of the energy problem is the precarious nature of our supply of petroleum and its cost to import. And one important aspect of that problem is the nation's thirst for gasoline.

Last summer, despite presidential pleas to curb gasoline usage, American car-owners consumed an all time record gallonage. (Of come comfort to the administration perhaps is the fact that consumption did not match the levels some experts predicted it would.)

From all appearances the American driving public stands on the brink of a situation that could threaten our freedom of movement.

Bridal Tradition Returns To Formal Wedding

designs are pared sleek, still the 1979 bridal picture is strictly lavender and old lace. Tradition and romance are the two key words to today's weddings, with resultant beautiful memories for all.

Today's couples have taken a serious look at the rich, beautiful ideals of the marriage vows. They want their weddings to reflect both the joy and the solemnity that will constitute their union.

If wedding trends are turning back to the romantic formalities of yesteryear, the reason goes beyond mere nostalgia.

Modern couples seem to have gained deep respect for the dignity of this traditional ceremony and wish to affirm the fact that a wedding is the symbol of of shared experiences. The new bride is gloriously romantic, but far from coy and fragile. She is truly today's woman, with the confidence in herself and her decisions to cast off her tailored suit and stylish "togetherness" for a delightful detour into the world of opulent satins and gossamer chiffons, seed pearl embroidery and rich layers of lace.

Fine Tableware Reflects Elegance Is Alive Again

Evening Herald & Herald Advertiser, Sanford, Fl.

Elegance is alive again in table setting styles. In selecting fine china and crystal, today's brides are responding to the trend toward dressier, more traditional at-home entertaining.

These young hostesses have moved away from the very casual trend in dinnerware in the 1960's, says Arlene Hirst, designer consultant, whose fine china and crystal head the list of most popular bridal registry selections. "Just as fashions have changed from blue jeans to skirts and classic suits, tradition and elegance in tabletop design are being favored by brides," she observes.

In lifestyle attitudes, Ms. Hirst explains, brides of the current generation are more traditional than their counterparts of the 60's. While some brides of the past decade married in unconventional ceremonies on hilltops or beaches, young women today are again choosing traditional gowns and all the fine trappings of formal

"In their buying habits, these women are more conscious of style and more sensitive to value than ever before. They want to invest in furnishings of lasting quality for their first homes, and fine tableware is one of these things," said the designer. One of the most popular fine china patterns among

Intruder On Pot Drop Lives Night Of Terror

By SHARON CARRASCO and TOM GIORDANO

A Seminole County man spent six hours in terror shortly after midnight Thursday when he was surprised by a group of gunmen at the former Osceola Airstrip, tied to a tree and held captive while the gunmen argued whether or not to kill him. That's what Seminole County sheriff's deputies said the man

Authorities believe the man inadvertently stumbled on a major drug smuggling operation at the old airstrip, now a county landfill, while he was unloading a garbage truck. Deputies declined to release the man's identity for fear his life still is in danger. Thus far deputies have arrested a North Carolina man in connection with the bizarre incident and they are looking for as many as 10 more suspects, some of whom may be from South Florida and other states.

John Spolski, spokesman with the sheriff's department, gave this account of what authorities know so far about the incident: "The man, in his mid-twenties, told us he was dumping a truckload of garbage at the landfill when two men came up to him and put a gun to his head," Spolski said.

He continued: "They told him if he kept his mouth shut and behaved himself, they wouldn't harm him. They tied him to a palmetto bush and put a pillowcase over his head and told him to

"From what we can tell, he figured there were about five or six men there that he knew of, but indicated he may have heard "Anyway, he told us while he was tied to the bush he heard the men talking about a drop from an airplane, supposedly a large marijuana drop. Apparently it never was, though, because the man told us he never heard a plane engine. He told us that throughout the entire six hours or so that he was tied to the bush, he kept hearing the men argue among themselves on the prospects of killing him. He said he would hear one man say, 'Let's shoot him,' but another kidnapper say something like, 'No way, man, we're not getting into a killing."

discussed several times as he lay tied against the bush with the pillowcase over his head.

When the kidnappers finally decided to leave, Spolski said the man told deputies they untied him, drove him by truck to a nearby

"He told us they ordered him to climb over the fence and not to turn around because they were all armed and watching him. When he climbed over the fence, he ran a short distance and found himself on a roadway. Just coincidentally, one of our deputys ' was riding by and spotted him. When the deputy drove over to him, the man gave him the whole story." Spolski said. Spolski said the man is married, but authorities don't know if he has any
