Sailing Ships Still Used For World Commerce

CINCINNATI, July 17. (AP)—Four of Cincinnati's six major hotels resumed normal operations today after a seven-hour strike by 1,700 AFL employees paralyzed services yesterday afternoon and early evening.

Officials of the Cincinnati Hotels Association and the AFL Hotel Employees' council announced an agreement ending the strike shortly after 7:00 o'clock last night, and said a new contract would be signed today.

Under terms of the agreement, most of the strikers, including elevator operators, bellhops, maids, porters, bartenders, waiters, and all culinary workers, will work 40 instead of 48 hours a week, with additional wage increases.

The majority of the unionists, who left their jobs at noon yesterday at the Netherland Plaza, Gibson, Fountain Square and Sinton hotels, began working regular shifts at 11:00 o'clock last night.

Restaurants and bars in the four hotels were closed during the walk-out and room service was discontinued. No new guests were received and reservations were refused "for the immediate future."

Short Strike Ties Up Cincinnati Hotels

While the world fleet of sizable square riggers has been reduced to less than 10, fore and aft windjammers operate in more respectable numbers. Serving as freighters and tankers off both American coasts and in the Great Lakes are 48 schooner barges and 14 schooners, all over 500 tons.

One, the 623-ton schooner C. S. Holmes, still operates out of Seattle as a whaler.

Abroad, windjammers are used in feeder operations in the West Indies between small ports and harbors suitable for steamers. Up and down the west coast of South America, they transport guano and bulk cargoes and between the east coast and Capetown they carry timber and manufactured goods.

From Australia, there are still windjammers carrying wheat across the Pacific. They haul fish and lumber in the Baltic and coal, timber, salt and wool in the British coastal trade.

But the square-rigger finds it most difficult to hang on. Today, there are only three big square riggers left in American waters—the sailing ship Pacific Queen and the barks Scottish Lady and Star of India.

The oldest large sailing vessel still used in this country is the Star of India, built in Scotland in 1823, grossing 1,318 tons. She now sails out on scientific expeditions for the Zoological Society of San Diego.

The Scottish Lady, 79 years old and also of Scottish origin, hauls freight out of Seattle. The three-masted Pacific Queen, 61 years old and grossing 1,835 tons, used to make the India and Alaska runs. She once won a race from the Golden Gate to Chignik, Alaska, in 19 days. But now the Pacific Queen is anchored off Long Beach, Cal., the star of a harbor exhibition there.

The late war heavily reduced the number of all ships. No one was hit harder than 73-year-old Capt. Gustaf Erikson of Finland. Erikson had built up his fleet of square riggers to eleven, carrying nitrates from Chile, Swedish lumber from Australia, case oil for Fiji and guano from Juan de Nova,

Doctor Reveals New Way To Give Medicine

NEW YORK, July 17. (AP)—A new method of giving medicine, which he calls "aimed injections," where the drug goes mainly to one place or to one sick organ, was explained in the Third International Pediatrics Congress today by Dr. Rudolf Degkwitz, of Hamburg, Germany.

Used for humans. The Degkwitz method is like a game where balls of different sizes are rolled to stop in holes whose sizes also vary, and the size that fits stops a ball.
