SANFORD — Deputy Sheriff Charles Frazier was injured Tuesday night in a hit and run traffic accident near Sanford.

According to sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough, Frazier was westbound on Orange Boulevard at approximately 10:40 p.m. when a small red truck with its lights out ran his patrol car off the road. The truck was said to be driving in the wrong lane.

The patrol car ran into a ditch as the truck fled from the scene.

Deputy Frazier sustained minor head and neck injuries. He was treated and released at Central Florida Regional Hospital.

The Florida Highway Patrol has assumed the investigation into the hit and run accident.

Kid criminals reimburse victims

SANFORD — Seminole County businesses are being enlisted in an effort to stem the increase of juvenile crime while crime victims receive restitution.

State Attorney Norm Wolfinger of the Eighteenth Judicial Circuit announced Wednesday he is expanding "Project Pay-Back" to Seminole County. Wolfinger launched the program, which is the first of its kind in Florida, in Brevard County.

About 70 juveniles are in the program. Seminole and Brevard counties make up the Eighteenth Judicial Circuit.

Speaking at the Sanford Chamber of Commerce, Wolfinger outlined the goals of the early intervention and diversion program to representatives of law enforcement and the business community.

Along with obtaining restitution for the victims of juvenile crime, Wolfinger said the program also makes juveniles responsible and accountable for acts they commit.

In many cases, little or no restitution is imposed by a judge on a teen offender because they had no job or one which paid only minimum wage.

"We have a study that shows one of the best incentives to prevent recidivism is to make juveniles pay restitution," the state attorney explained. "You make the kids pay, not mom or dad."

"Saying you don't have a job is no longer an excuse for not being accountable for restitution."

Magic in Lake Mary?

Sportsplex would house pro practice, family fitness center

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY — Lake Mary may be the home of the proposed Orlando Magic $30 million sportsplex, with the announcement Wednesday that a site near Lake Mary Boulevard and Interstate 4 is under serious consideration.

Lake Mary officials would not indicate any contact has been made regarding the proposal at this time.

Initial plans indicate the facility is being planned along with Florida Hospital.

The sportsplex is to include family-oriented health and fitness areas and a training area for the Magic and the new Solar Bears ice hockey team. It would also have a gym locker rooms, kids gym, classrooms and many other related spaces. The Magic home games, however, would still be played at the Orlando Arena.

Sportsplex plans estimate Florida Hospital would occupy approximately 39,053 square feet, with the Magic taking 30,960 square feet and the hockey facility occupying 7,500 square feet.

Killer apologizes to family of dead

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The man who brutally murdered his Casselberry landlady and her 8-year-old granddaughter nearly two years ago apologized to the victims' relatives but did not ask for mercy during a pre-sentence hearing Wednesday.

Eddie James, 33, pleaded guilty earlier this year to the murders of Elizabeth Dick, 58, and her granddaughter, Toni Neuner.

"I'd never have done this if I'd been in my right mind," 33-year-old Eddie James told the court. "I'm willing to pay and I need to pay for what I did, to give something back to the family."

Dick was bludgeoned and stabbed 23 times on Sept. 20, 1993. The little girl was strangled and raped. Toni's older sister, Wendy, was bound and gagged by James during the killings but escaped to get help. Two grandsons who were also spending that night at Dick's house were not harmed.

SANFORD — Ride 'em, cowboy, is a phrase generally reserved for rodeo riders but soon that old saw may apply to some Seminole County Sheriff's deputies as well under a pilot program launching a Mounted Patrol Unit.

On Tuesday, the board of commissioners approved a $1,950 expenditure from the Law Enforcement Trust Fund to outfit two horses for the new program. Money in the trust fund comes from confiscated property, primarily drug related.

Sheriff Don Estinger noted the horses are owned by Deputy Sheriff Cynthia Homstead and Sgt. Dave Smith who are donating the use and care of the animals during the pilot period. After the initial period ends, the horses will be leased, Estinger said Tuesday.

This unit will be deployed in a proactive manner.

Musical benefit aids ill man's family

By MARVA HAWKINS

SANFORD — The musical benefit for Johnny Golden on Saturday evening, July 8, saw over 300 people attending. Praises went up and blessings came down as the community came together with the family of their own Johnny Golden Jr., son of Cynthia Cassanova Brown. Golden was stricken with meningitis while away at college. He is recovering in a Virginia hospital.

Choirs and musical groups came to give praises through the gospel, contemporary and old-fashioned hymns of praise, and in thanks for God's blessings in the life of a Christian young man and his family. The First Shiloh Missionary Baptist Church was the setting of worship, praise and the giving of thanks to the families of Cassanova Golden Brown. This benefit to give spiritual and financial support to Golden and his family saw a community of Christians sharing and rejoicing in the true Christian spirit.

Crime breeds more crime

In just the past few days, there have been reports of criminal activities in areas known to be frequented by drug sellers. In these cases however, the crimes went beyond that level.

A woman who reportedly told police she had gone into a crack house to make a purchase, subsequently told officers someone stole her car keys from her purse and took her car.

Two men were shot in a known drug area. One refused to press charges.

A man was beaten and his car stolen by what he described as nine men Sunday night. He reportedly told police he had gone into the area to purchase crack at the time.

Then, looking back over the months and years, how many times have we read of shootings, robberies, muggings, beatings and thefts in what were considered drug deals that went sour.

Police also report making occasional arrests for prostitution in known drug areas.

Crime is breeding crime, and it has been and clearly continues to be growing. Drug sales, purchases and use are illegal. So are all of the other crimes mentioned above. Yet the numbers are increasing.

Sanford police and other law enforcement agencies are constantly asking for more officers with which to deal in the crime increase. Occasionally, they get a few more officers, but never enough, never enough.

We believe however, that there will come a day of reckoning. Law enforcement is only going to go so far before all-hell breaks loose. We can see massive raids in our drug districts, massive arrests, and a court docket so packed that people will be standing in line. Drug sellers and distributors will be forced out of business, and life will return to normal. Yes, we believe it. We also believe in flying saucers, Santa Claus, and the Easter bunny.

Law enforcement can't do this alone. They need government support. They need public support, and from everyone, they need cooperation, even if it calls for a tax increase with which to pay for additional officers and equipment.

Until then, we will continue to hear of crimes bringing about more crimes, and even more crimes.

Go, Magic

The Magic may have to wait until next year to win the finals, but they are already winners in my class. I am a kindergarten teacher at Goldsboro Elementary ("an at risk school") in Sanford. The Magic's participation in the finals provided us with many learning experiences. We used the Magic as examples of positive action — trying your best, not giving up, and believing in yourself. We used the Magic as examples for learning language arts — relating to a story we had read "The Little Engine That Could," doing a creative writing and drawing (project), and as an opportunity to have all children participate in a shared writing experience. We used the Magic in math by relating the shot clock to numbers we learn in kindergarten.

We had a Magic bulletin board complete with newspaper articles and children's drawings. We talked about the players and their names — sorry, one child confused Jeff Turner with Tina Turner. I was surprised how many players the class could name.

So you see, the players are truly winners. Learning for these children was fun, educational and inspiring. We invite the Magic to visit us anytime, but if players cannot, please know they've made a difference to these children and had a positive impact on their lives.

Thank you for a tremendous teaching opportunity. Go Magic!

In search of a GOP vice president

Recently in this space I pointed out that the conservative movement, for all the power it wields in the Republican Party today, is not united behind any one candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. Indeed, it may almost be said not to have one.

Instead, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas is far ahead in the race for the nomination, and he hails from the old economic-conservative crowd that dominated the GOP back in the days before there even was a conservative movement. But most "movement conservatives" will support him, however grudgingly, if he is nominated; there will be no attempt at a veto.

That raises the question of what to do about the vice presidency — a position that has often led to the presidency, and that is sure to seem especially important if Dole is nominated for president, since he will be 73 in 1996. Strangely enough, the conservative movement seems almost as short of ideas on the vice presidency as it is on the presidency itself.

Bear in mind that Dole, if he is nominated for president, will do the picking. If he is sensible, he won't even put the conservatives to the trouble of vetoing some "moderate" like Gov. William Weld of Massachusetts or Gov. Pete Wilson of California, let alone that pillar of Rockefeller Republicanism, Gov. Christine Whitman of New Jersey. The same probably applies to Lamar Alexander, whose conservatism is, suspiciously late vintage.

Dole will need a running mate from the social-conservative wing of the movement and party, or at the very least someone acceptable to them. He will also want somebody loyal to him, and not disposed to litigate in the media any disagreements that may arise.

That latter requirement probably rules out both Pat Buchanan and Jack Kemp, either of whom would almost surely be too outspoken for Dole's good. The same probably goes for Alan Keyes, an attractive black Republican whose obsessive pro-life views would make him difficult to get along with, and Bill Bennett, who is compulsively articulate on just about everything.

Strangely enough, the conservative movement seems almost as short of ideas on the vice presidency as it is on the presidency itself.

Colin Powell is not (so far as we know) a movement conservative, but his widespread popularity will undoubtedly put him high on Dole's list anyway, and conservatives might agree to settle for him if there were some evidence that he is not a die-hard "moderate." The chances are, however, that Powell is a woody apolitical centrist of the Eisenhower type, and conservatives would be understandably reluctant to see such a person next in line for the leadership of what they sincerely believe is a conservative revolution.

Another possible vice presidential nominee who, though not known as a movement conservative, is highly respected in the movement, and who would probably pass Dole's tests for loyalty and low charisma as well, is Michigan governor John Engler. At the moment he must be ranked as a hot possibility.

But there is another possibility for Dole and movement conservatives to consider. How about Cheney? I am not speaking here of Bush's defense secretary Dick Cheney, but rather of his wife, Lynne Cheney.

Iraq finally admits it has bio-weapons

UNITED NATIONS — The recent admission by the government of Iraq that it has produced enough biological agents to kill millions of people raises a number of critical questions that will be heatedly debated behind the closed doors of the Security Council.

The most critical question is whether Iraq's sudden admission — after four years of repeated denials — argues in favor of lifting the U.N. sanctions against this outlaw state.

The governments of France and Russia, anxious to develop and expand their nations' business ties with Iraq, claim that Saddam Hussein has now been fully forthcoming and deserves to trade with the world again. In the months leading up to Iraq's startling confession, French and Russian officials were pressuring their Iraqi allies into coming clean.

But Madeleine Albright, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and other American officials remain angry that it took so much proof to force the disclosure, and worry that parts of Iraq's unconventional weapons program may still be hidden from the West.

The Iraq disclosure finally came two weeks ago in a half-hour meeting in Baghdad with Rolf Ekeus, chairman of the U.N. Special Commission on Iraq. According to Rihab Taha, an Iraqi microbiologist who met with Ekeus, Iraq has produced 5,300 gallons of botulinum bacteria and 158 gallons of anthrax bacteria at the Al Hakam facility outside of Baghdad. If disseminated by air or water in a major city, the biological agents would be enough to claim millions of innocent lives.

Perhaps more troubling than the confession itself are the events that preceded it: A tired pattern by Iraqi officials of denying and concealing weapons programs until enough evidence is found to refute their claims. U.S. intelligence sources and U.N. officials gave our associate Dale Van Atta a convincing history (some of which is still classified) of the kind of evidence Western "prosecutors" had to accumulate before Iraq feigned up:

— Iraq's first move was a contract signed with the Paris-based Institut Merieux in November 1974. The French had agreed to help set up Iraq's first bacteriological laboratory, which Iraq claimed it needed to manufacture vaccines for agricultural and animal production.

— Iraq's true intent should have been clear to the French agriculture minister when, during a negotiating trip to Baghdad, he was invited to discuss the deal with the then-vice president of the Revolutionary Command Council — Saddam Hussein.

— The next big move came in 1981, when German firms began building a large biological facility at Salman Pak, a suburb of the city of Suwaira. It was supposed to be a facility for testing food for contamination.

But the Germans could not have been blind to the strategic importance it held for Saddam. According to noted Iraq expert Kenneth Timmerman, the Germans had to sign a two-page letter guaranteeing their companies had no relations of any kind with the state of Israel.

The German employees were closely monitored, accompanied even when they went to the bathroom. The German businessmen also built an expensive air cleaning plant — necessary for safe biological weapons production — at Salman Pak. They ostensibly swallowed the Iraqi explanation about their "environmental concerns," something Saddam was never noted for.

The most critical question is whether Iraq's sudden admission argues in favor of lifting the U.N. sanctions against this outlaw state.

DONNA BRITT

All the comfort she had is gone

WASHINGTON — This week, "the worst" got even more awful for Maria Washington.

Washington — one of thousands of women across the nation who've lost husbands, brothers and sons to urban violence — is a Washington, E.C., mother of five whose trauma over the 1994 slaying of her husband, Kevin, I wrote about.

Once she thought nothing could be worse than having held her hand over a gunshot wound in Kevin's throat, feeling his life flow from between her fingers.

Later, Washington decided the worst was going through the day, caring for the kids, and somehow feeling that Kevin was at work and would stroll through the door before it hit her, all over again, that he's dead. Sometimes the worst was waiting until 3 a.m. to go to bed and still finding that "I can't sleep. It's hard to cuddle up next to — nothing."

But the other day, while waiting to pick up dinner outside a Chinese carryout three blocks from her home — and near where Kevin, who had no criminal record and was a devoted family man, was shot — Washington discovered a stunning, new worst.

An acquaintance pointed at a man standing in the doorway of the store next door and whispered that he was one of the two men charged with killing Kevin.

The man identified as one of the accused killers, Washington says, was less than 10 feet away. Seeing him "felt like somebody had slapped or spit on me," she says.

When she called the U.S. attorney's office to find out how this was possible, Washington learned that Daniel Travis, 29, who with another man was charged with first-degree murder in Kevin's killing, had left jail Jan. 5, released by a judge to a local halfway house. And, Washington was told, he works at a store about a mile from her home.

"It's like the system didn't care that I could walk the street with this man," Washington says. "Why is he out here? ... Before, I could walk around freely, comfortable ... Now I know he's out and not far from where I live. My children play on the porch ..."

Travis, who is scheduled to go to trial Aug. 16, received a "stay-away" court order "absolutely" forbidding him to visit the immediate neighborhood, which includes Washington's home and the location where her husband was killed, says Cathleen Corken, of the U.S. attorney's homicide section, noting that her office "strenuously" objected to Travis' release. She said her office is investigating whether the man Washington saw was Travis and whether he is in violation of that order. Travis' attorney could not be reached for comment.

But even if the man she saw wasn't Travis, Washington can't fathom how a man charged with her husband's slaying — and who since his release has been charged with cocaine possession and the intent to distribute — is on the street, period.

"I mean, how much more does a person have to go through?"

For now, of course, Travis remains the accused. Because it hasn't been proved that he killed anybody, it was up to the judge to determine that he was a good risk not to flee, that he will show up for trial. If indeed Travis didn't kill Kevin Washington, as he claims, then he has been through his own nightmare.

But all Washington can see is what's before her, which mostly is pain. She and her children, who range in age from 2 to 15, talk about Kevin "a lot — we sit around, reminisce."

The memories aren't always sad. Recently, says Washington, everyone was sitting silently around the TV, when daughter Lashawn, 12, burst out laughing, gasping that she'd remembered how Kevin would remove his shoes to watch TV, and how "he had some of the ugliest feet you'd ever want to see," Washington says. "Suddenly, we were all laughing."

Still, "I hide from my children that I do a lot of crying," she says. "I'm so used to him being here, every day. ... You never really know until that person's gone."

She says that her focus is "all about my children now ... I had somebody to love, like Kevin, with whom I was number one. I've had that."

Now, thanks to her discovery — and to a judicial system that's increasingly puzzling to some of the citizens it serves — Washington has a new companion: fear.

Knowing that one of the men accused of her husband's slaying is on the streets, says Washington, is "a scary feeling. What really bothers me is that ... the people in the store where she thinks she saw Travis know who I am. I don't want them to point out to him who I am."

She pauses. "After they had arrested the guys, I felt good, like a load was off my shoulders."

Then she learned one was free. "And all the comfort I had was gone."

Once she thought nothing could be worse than having held her hand over a gunshot wound in Kevin's throat.

Report: Tobacco companies hid evidence of smoking dangers

By JAMES WEBB
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — Tobacco company lawyers tried to muzzle company scientists from commenting on internal documents showing nicotine was addictive and smoking dangerous to protect the company from lawsuits, a new report says.

The efforts by lawyers for Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. were part of a broader attempt to hide company research going back 30 years that showed smoking was dangerous, a team of five authors reported in the July 19 issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

The issue, devoted entirely to the tobacco documents, was released a week early.

Much of the information in the documents has been disclosed in media reports and congressional hearings in the past year.

The JAMA authors say their review of almost 10,000 pages of documents is the most comprehensive yet and provides new details, including how lawyers influenced policy at the nation's third-largest tobacco company.

Documents show lawyers labeled scientific reports and communications as "work product" or "privileged" so they would not have to be disclosed to anyone suing the company over health problems, the JAMA authors wrote.

"They've had an elaborate scheme to manipulate the legal system to avoid disclosing what they really knew about the dangers of smoking," said author Stanton A. Glantz, a professor of medicine at the University of California in San Francisco.

Brown & Williamson said Wednesday that the lawyers acted appropriately in defending the company's position in case of liability lawsuits.

In the documents, the lawyers even warned of discussion between tobacco industry colleagues, such as comments made at scientific conferences by researchers for B&W or its parent company, British-American Tobacco Co., the authors said.

One attorney warned Brown & Williamson's general counsel that such comments could make the difference in a liability lawsuit.

"The effect of testimony by employees or documentary evidence from the files of either BAT or B&W which seems to acknowledge or tacitly admit that cigarettes cause cancer or other disease would likely be fatal to the defense of either or both companies in a smoking and health case," the letter says. It goes on to say "employees in both companies should be informed of the possible consequences of careless statements on this subject."

The Kentucky-based tobacco company, which makes Lucky Strike and other cigarettes, has fought to keep the papers secret, claiming they were stolen in 1989. The documents include internal memos from Brown & Williamson and other tobacco companies, as well as research reports done for the companies.

About half the documents reviewed by the authors were sent anonymously to Glantz in May 1994; almost all of the other half were obtained from B&W by Congress.

The University of California began making the documents available on the Internet and in a university library at the beginning of July, after B&W's failed legal attempt to block them.

In an accompanying editorial, AMA officials said "the evidence is unequivocal — the U.S. public has been duped by the tobacco industry."

The editorial calls on politicians and researchers to reject funding from the tobacco industry, suggests "dramatically" higher tobacco taxes and says doctors and the public should support lawsuits to recover damages from the tobacco industry.

Once again, the mysteries of the grave call to the professor

By MIKE FEINBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Once again the mysteries of the grave summon James Starrs, this time to unearth the bones in the burial place of Jesse James to see if it is he who lies there.

Starrs feels a compulsion. Dig he must. And so he heads Saturday to Kearney, Mo., to lead a 15-member expedition in disinterring what remains in an old grave in the Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Seeing what remains is a normal summer's exercise for Starrs, a lawyer and scientist who likes to demonstrate what archaeology, anthropology, pathology, guesswork and spadework can tell about how history's notorious characters ended up dead.

It usually takes a court order to permit a disinterment and Starrs doesn't always get his way. He failed to win permission to dig up Lizzie Borden's stepparents, to see if she really gave them 40 and 41 ax whacks, respectively, as doggerel relates.

But six summers ago he hit pay dirt in Lake City, Colo., where he probed the common grave of five Colorado gold prospectors to see if they not only were done in but eaten up as well.

Scars on the bones, concluded Starrs, showed that they indeed, as legend insisted, had been the cannibalized victims of fellow prospector Alfred Packer, who in 1883 was convicted of having been their hatchman.

"Gully as sin," intoned the professor. "It is as plain as a pikestaff."

He said Packer must have been a ghoul of the first order. To eat the flesh of one man is to starve off starvation, he said. "But five is enjoyment."

Starrs is a professor of both law and forensic science at George Washington University here, a big-time bicyclist and a self-confessed eccentric.

He is a coauthor of "Scientific Evidence in Civil and Criminal Cases," a law textbook. He pads around in stocking feet, commutes by bicycle and keeps boxes of bones in his office. "People send me bones," he explains, stroking a skull that arrived from Oregon.

Ever since his service in the Korean War — sometimes in graves registration, somehow not surprisingly — he has been a man in a hurry.

So he simultaneously went to college by day and law school by night, while holding two jobs, as counterman at a frankfurter stand and an investigator of insurance claims, while helping to raise his three children, whose numbers have subsequently grown to eight.

Four times he has read the complete works of Arthur Conan Doyle, with an eye toward pathologic miscues by his character, Sherlock Holmes, and four times he has crossed the country by bicycle, with various of his children.

In the Jesse James expedition, he will try to prove that the remains are indeed those of the outlaw, said to have been killed on April 3, 1882, in St. Joseph, Mo., where he lived in the pose of a cattle buyer.

The alleged killer was Bob Ford, a renegade member of the James gang, seeking the reward money. But by some accounts Ford's victim was someone else and James lived on to father more children, whose offspring now claim to be his descendants.

After James, Starrs would relish having a look at the skull of Edgar Allan Poe, who was said to have died in a drunken stupor on the streets of Baltimore, but is sometimes suspected of have been done in. And he wants to search for the amputated arm of Stonewall Jackson in the pit where it was tossed and reunite it with the torso to see whether it was a Union or a Rebel bullet that finished off the Confederate general.

But his chief unachieved target is the remains of the former director of the FBI, J. Edgar Hoover, who had no known ailments, died alone, was never autopsied and, said Starrs with a grin suggesting mayhem, "had enemies galore."

When antacids are not enough

DEAR DR. GOTT: For the past eight years, my girlfriend has been plagued with chronic stomach pain on a daily basis. Her attacks happen suddenly and without warning and usually occur after eating or drinking. She finds temporary relief by taking TUMS or over-the-counter antacids, but everything seems only to mask the problem. She's been told she suffers from reflux, yet we can't obtain any information on this.

DEAR READER: Reflux is a common affliction, marked by the reverse flow of irritating stomach acid into the esophagus, where it causes symptoms that mimic peptic ulcer: heartburn, gas and indigestion. Ordinarily, the symptoms of reflux can be lessened by eating smaller meals, elevating the head of the bed, losing weight (if obesity is present), and using antacids when attacks of indigestion occur.

However, in many cases, these simple measures don't suffice. In such instances, prescription drugs (such as Prilosec) may be necessary to reduce the production of excess gastric acid.

Reflux is related to a problem with the sphincter that normally blocks a back-flow of stomach acid, and is usually diagnosed by X-rays or endoscopy (examination of the upper digestive tract using a lighted tube).

Your friend should discuss this issue with her doctor. With prescription medicine, her symptoms should disappear.

DEAR DR. GOTT: What causes ringworm? Is there any effective therapy?

DEAR READER: Ringworm is a contagious fungus infection that affects dead skin, nails and hair.

On the skin, it causes athlete's foot, "jock itch" or round, pink, scaly lesions. When the fungus affects the nails, it causes them to yellow, thicken and rise from the nailbed. Ringworm of the scalp causes the hairs to break off - again, in conjunction with a scaly rash. Ringworm is diagnosed by analyzing scrapings (of infected tissue) under the microscope. Fungus cultures are sometimes useful.

There are many effective treatments for this common condition. For example, Tinactin (a liquid or cream) and Nizoral (a cream) will usually eradicate the infection. More resistant, severe cases (of the toenails, for example) may require griseofulvin, a prescription anti-fungal pill that has to be taken for many weeks to produce significant improvement. Sometimes, the infected toenail has to be surgically removed.

MEDICINE

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

Herbert Spencer, the English evolutionary philosopher, wrote, "How often misused words generate misleading thoughts." (In my experience, "misused" should be "misunderstood.") In bridge, a psychic bid may mislead the opponents. During the play, though, you must mislead the opponents with actions - the cards you play - rather than words.

Changing the subject for a moment, you are on lead against a small slam with an ace in your hand. You lead the ace and the slam makes, whereas if you had led something else, you would have beaten the slam. Alternatively, you don't lead the ace and the slam makes, whereas if you had led the ace, you would have beaten the slam. Which is more likely?

English expert Terence Reese, whose opinion is respected, thinks the latter is more likely.

So, if in doubt, lead your ace at trick one. Here, West, an acolyte of Reese (that's a pun, the main bidding system in England being Acol), started with the ace and another club.

Now South had to play the trump suit without loss. He knew the odds: cash the ace and king, hoping the queen drops. That was about to work - until East threw a wrench-shaped card into the works. When the spade five was led off the dummy at trick three, East played the queen.

Against someone capable of finding this falacard, it is right for South to continue with his second top spade. But South, believing the queen was a singleton, continued with a low spade to dummy's nine. With the adrenalin flowing, East produced the 10 to defeat the slam.

Phillip Alder's new book, "Get Smarter at Bridge," is available.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osof
YOUR BIRTHDAY
July 14, 1995

A number of favorable shifts might be in store for you in the year ahead. It looks like you'll disengage from unproductive involvements and find new paths of promise.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Subdue the urge today to gamble on things about which you know little. The odds might run against you at this time, so use your best judgment. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences that govern you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $2 and SASE to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22, You might have to bend a bit more than usual today to appease a partner in a business arrangement. If you're inflexible, expect a similar response.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you are slovenly in your tasks today, don't expect co-workers to cover up for you. Instead, they might even squeal on you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Do not buy something costly today, thinking that you'll be able to sell it when you grow tired of it. That market might not be there.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Distinguish today between being assertive and being abrasive. If you can't make this distinction, you may defeat your purpose.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Let bygones be bygones today. If you attempt to even up an old score, it could make a bad situation even worse.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Upon occasion, you're too generous to the wrong people. This could be one of those days when you ignore the deserving and cater to the users.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Avoid doing things today that might cause companions to lose respect for you. Walk the straight and narrow and keep your charisma intact.

FISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today, if you feel someone has wronged you, try to forgive the offense. Harboring a grudge could cause it to grow disproportionately.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In an involvement with friends today, don't alter plans without consulting them first. Your move could complicate everyone's agenda, including your own.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Let an unresolved, volatile matter between you and your mate rest today. This issue has a short fuse on both ends and could explode at a moment's notice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Do not delegate assignments today to a person who has performed poorly for you in the past. This individual might cause you even more serious problems this time.
