While fishing is usually thought as a man's sport, the first fishing expert was really a woman. A printing of a hit of outdoor writing penned on parchment around fourteen twenty-five has been credited to a sweet little English nun named Dame Juliana Berners. Juliana was born of a royal family in England and did some fishing and hunting as a girl with some of her sporting cousins and friends. Later on, she entered a nunnery at S Albans and wrote the first known works on fishing. Juliana wasn't any slouch concerning the art of angling For instance, here's how she recommends making a fishing rod. First you cut a smooth six-foot staff of willow or aspen.

Heat it in an oven, get it good and straight, and let it dry for four weeks The next trick is to get a piece of plumber's wire, heat it red hot, and burn a hole clear through the staff. Then store it in a smokehouse for a while. Now you take a stroll in the woods and cut a slender slip of hazel the same length. Soak it thoroughly, straighten it out, and let it dry in the smokehouse too. The next step is to trim the hazel whip so it can be inserted into the butt section. Now, fashion a metal pin to hold the two together, and you have a two section fishing rod.

ring to those who picked Mathis to do it a third time. Frazier said. "People weren't fighting Mathis, I was. I knew I would win. I couldn't predict the round because then Mathis would have been ready."

Now recognized as champion in New York, Massachusetts, Maine and Illinois, the 24-yearold Frazier said he was ready to settle undisputed possession of the heavyweight title taken
