Good Whop Man
For Industry

Defense Commission
Price Hawk Likes
To Put Up A Scrap

By JACK STINNETT
WASHINGTON, Feb. 19. - (AP)
If the Administration had searched through all its million-employee force to crack the whip over industry and keep the price of defense materials down, it is doubtful if it could have found anyone who puts more "heat" into the job than Leon Han-derson.

It isn't that Handerson enjoys tailoring legitimate business.
He's too good an economist to feel that way about it. But he does love to see a man who, perhaps, what he loves most is a new job. And in the third place he probably has thought, talked and written more sense on the activities of controlled prices than any other government worker in the six years that he has been around Washington.

It was a scrap that led to Handerson's first government job. He was going along his own quiet way as professor of mechanical economics at Carnegie Institute of Technology when Gen. Hugh Johnson called him into an NYA conference.

If the general expected any kind of backbone to show up, and expounded in cultured tones and professional language he got the surprise of his life. In phrases almost as salty as the general's, Handerson created a new set of ideas, ideas that were not only new but also in a different way.
When the dust of battle had settled, Johnson hired him.

That was only one of a long series of "federal" jobs Handerson has had. He later became economic adviser to WPA. He was then a member of the temporary national economic committee that investigated monopolies. He worked for the Senate committee on the defense program. Even now, in addition to his job as chief of the defense commission, he is a member of the "War Relocation Administration" and "War Relocation Administration."

Handerson is a 37-year-old founder of the "War Relocation Administration" which is now doing a big job of helping Japanese-Americans. One of his big achievements was to get the price of war materials down.
He has done this by using his knowledge of the market and his ability to get the best of both sides.

Meanwhile from Shanghai came information that Japanese troop transports are reported—without confirmation—moving southward from Formosa, and Japan proper in a move which Shanghai sources interpreted as Tokyo's answer to the arrival of thousands of Australian soldiers at Singapore.

British sensational military notes in Singapore and elsewhere in southeast Asia are part of a joint British-American plan to "strangle Japan," and will be countered with "appropriate measures," Japanese spokesmen said today.

In broad outline, as the Japanese see the rapidly unfolding Far East picture, the "Anglo-American bloc" is seeking to force these ends: 1. To "gain the initiative" in East Asia and stifle Japan's plan to create a "greater East Asia Co-prosperity sphere" before it is too late.

2. To bolster the Chinese Nationalist government in Chungking so that it will intensify its "war of resistance" against Japan.

Sanford, Sailboat Center

Visitors to Sanford with few exceptions marvel at our advantageous location on a beautiful and navigable lake and usually the question is raised as to why greater use is not made of this body of water as a means of furnishing tourists greater amusement and recreation.

Recently a speaker at one of our civic clubs came out strongly for the re-establishment of a passenger boat line between Jacksonville and Sanford, and in glowing terms pictured the beauties of the St. John's River and what an appealing attraction such a service would be for tourists.

We believe the speaker was right and we think that a boat line between Jacksonville and Sanford, properly operated and advertised would open a great avenue for tourists to this city and would be the means of helping immeasurably to establish Sanford as a tourist center.

But over and above the possibilities of using our river and lake to bring in visitors, Lake Monroe offers many opportunities for providing pleasure for those people who come to Florida to enjoy the out-of-doors. Here is a body of water of such dimensions and suitable depth that it is ideal for sailboating. The popularity of this sport has grown immensely in the past few years and in many resorts along the New England coast it forms the principal appeal to summer vacationists.

Manufacturers have developed many types of inexpensive sailboats that are perfect for inland waters, and which provide all the thrills of the larger open-water classes. In our mind's eye we can visualize what a beautiful sight several scores of sailboats would make billowing with the breezes of Lake Monroe and we can picture the tons of publicity which would accrue to Sanford if it really became a sailboat center. Pictures of sailboats have an appeal which makes them "sure fire" in "getting by" the managing editor and into the columns of newspapers and magazines.

We believe that by exploiting the possibilities of sailboating, Sanford could capitalize on this one attraction to such an extent that hundreds of substantial winter visitors would come here annually to take advantage of the splendid opportunities which our location could offer the devotees of this sport.

The Glass Of Fashion

For some years designers of men's clothing have been trying to convert the male American to a livelier sartorial palette, with slow success. The recent preview of Spring fashions in New York, however, predicts an approaching "era of elegance" in men's attire in "jewel" tones, including twilight blue, Jap-i-blue, plum, wine, maroon and green.

For the man of affairs he will offer the "career costume." Casual as a stroll at Palm Beach, yet smart as a walk through the Bois de Boulogne before the occupation. Watch the contrasts roll in. Prosperity by day and popularity by night! "Choose the color that does things for you. We have it in spinach green, ice blue, coral pink and silver aqua."

What an "elegant era" it will be when the "blue-gray shadow" begins to take the lead!—Christian Science Monitor.

THE SANFORD FORUM

Editor The Sanford Herald, Sanford, Florida.

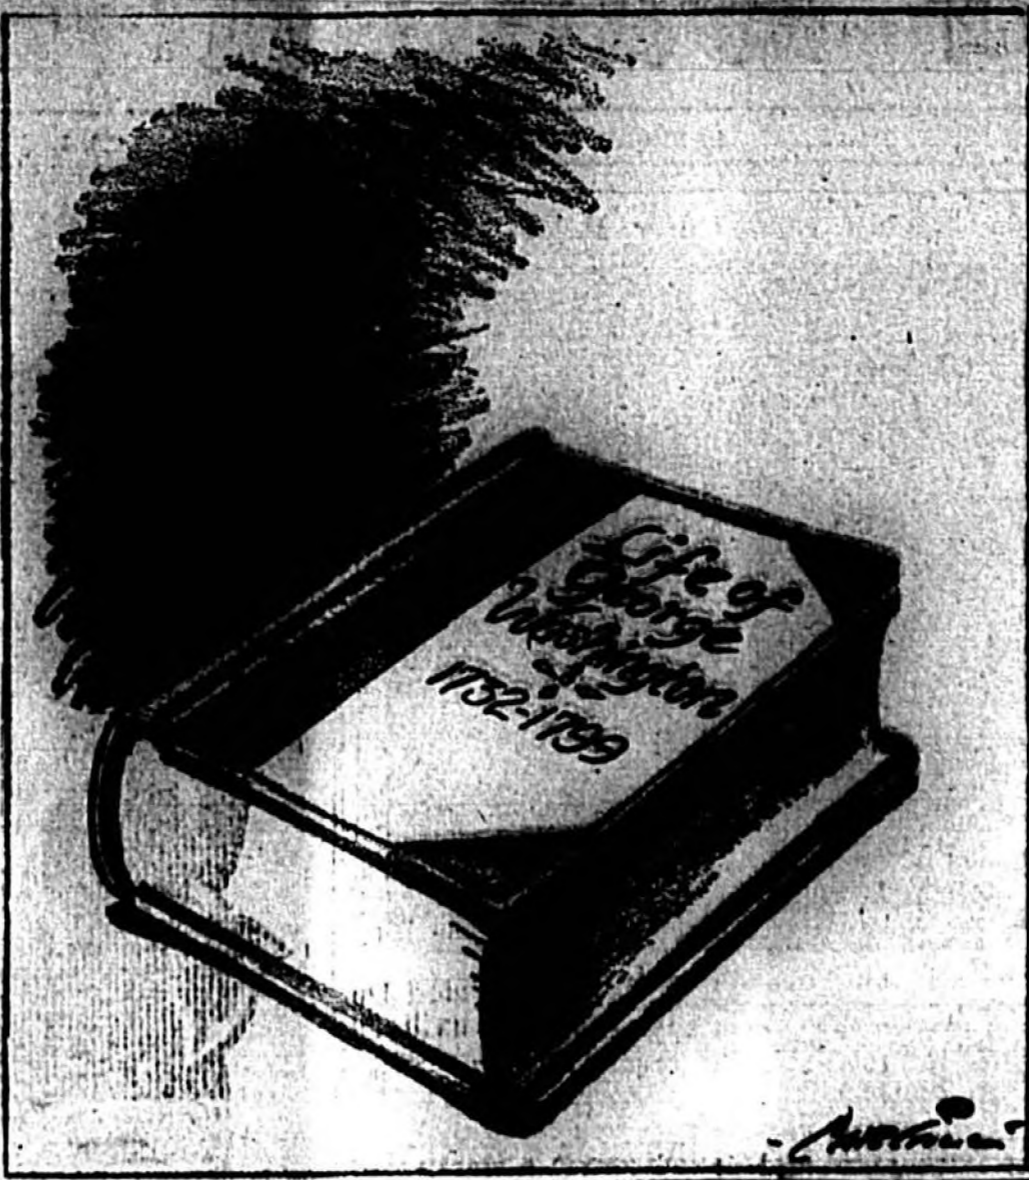

Dear Mr. Dean: On Saturday of this week we celebrate the 20th anniversary of the birth of the "Father of our Country," and I am sure that I express the sentiment common to every true American citizen when I say that February 22nd, 1782, was a fortunate and happy day for this great nation of ours, and we owe a debt of honor and respect to the memory of the man whose name is intimately associated with whatever befalls our country and its people.

His name will forever be pronounced with affectionate pride and gratitude by those in whose hearts there beats an American and whose hope for continued peace and human progress Washington stood at the commencement of a new era (not a "new order" in Europe) as well as the dawn of a new day.

It seems to me that we ought to be so affectionately remembered to all our friends and relations; and that you will continue to believe me to be your most faithful and tender friend.

Very truly yours, Niles ...

"TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY"

By RUSSELL KAY

Thirty-six years ago, in the little town of Stafford, Kan., four young men, all lovers of music, got together to form a quartet. They had no professional ambitions and sang as a group simply because they found enjoyment in doing so.

Your Income Tax

NO. 20 BAD DEBT—YEAR IN WHICH DEDUCTIBLE

To be allowed as a deduction from gross income, a bad debt must have been determined by the taxpayer to be worthless within the taxable year for which it is claimed and, where books are kept, it also must have been charged off within the same year. The necessity for this provision is obvious. If a debt could be deducted without the requirement that it be charged off the taxpayer's books, the possibility of its worthlessness would be open to question.

If a bad debt were allowed as a deduction without regard to the year when it became worthless, such charges could be accumulated to the year when the taxpayer there was a large income. The burden is upon the taxpayer to show that a debt claimed as a deduction was without value during the taxable year. A writer should be satisfied in the return showing the propriety of any deduction for bad debts. If in the exercise of sound business judgment a taxpayer concludes, after making every reasonable effort to determine whether there is likelihood of recovery, that the debt is of no value, deduction for such debt is allowable. Court action as proof that the debt is worthless is not essential.

It is optional with the taxpayer, in a year prior to that in which a debt becomes wholly worthless, to take a deduction for partial loss if partial worthlessness occurs. The provisions of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to bad debts and partial bad debt deductions are not applicable to a taxpayer, other than a bank as defined by the Act, where the debt is evidenced by bonds, debentures, notes, or certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness, issued by any corporation (including those issued by a government or political subdivision thereof) with interest coupons or in registered form.

Eight-year-old R. E. Roper, Jr., of Micco, Florida, founded a 6-foot, 6-inch sailfish which equaled his weight and nearly doubled his weight while fishing near Micco last week. This is a catch which many veteran anglers have never equaled.

Executive Powers Debate Fired By House-Lend Bill

History Proves That Public Opinion Is Strength Builder

By Morgan M. Beatty
WASHINGTON, Feb. 26—(AP)—The lend-lease bill touches the sensitive issue of the President's emergency powers.

Right from the start, the bill has been a lightning rod for the public opinion. The words "declare" and "declare" as they appear in the Constitution.

The past historians have been slow to put the President's emergency powers into the public opinion. The opinions and historians who have analyzed the President's powers, attributed to it the great powers exercised by a strong President.

The historian's point is earlier. All authorities agree that public opinion is the foundation of the President's powers, especially in emergencies. The approval of the lend-lease bill is a test of public opinion. It is the only question, which is first, the public opinion or the President's influence on that opinion. As a rule, most Congress usually acts merely to ratify the decisions made by the President.

The first act of emergency power by a President came immediately after the union formed. President Washington retained an emergency and sent out troops to quell the rebellious whistly rebellion. He was using arms to their loyalty of a new nation. As they saw it, they were not their grain to market. They were not their grain to market. They were not their grain to market. They were not their grain to market.

Others take a more cautious view. They assume it's the President's sworn duty to defend the nation, and his capacity as commander-in-chief of the army and navy gives him the power—in fact makes it his duty—to commit acts of war without consulting Congress. If there is a threat of war, he has an emergency power. He has an emergency power. He has an emergency power.

MARSHAL OTEY WALKER AT LEAST READS THE LOST AND FOUND ADS

For instance, when President Roosevelt declared an emergency last year, he (1) followed the Washington precedent but also, (2) by the act he put life into several laws that lie dormant until an emergency arises.

One of these is the preparedness law of 1916, which gives the President powers to mobilize industry, increase the size of the army and navy in the event of war or a threat of war. It's up to either the President or Congress to decide what is a threat of war. Either can declare an emergency.

Close students of basic laws tell me the Constitution can be construed as giving the President almost any power he can get by with exercising merely because it does not mention emergency powers.

Others take a more cautious view. They assume it's the President's sworn duty to defend the nation, and his capacity as commander-in-chief of the army and navy gives him the power—in fact makes it his duty—to commit acts of war without consulting Congress. If there is a threat of war, he has an emergency power. He has an emergency power. He has an emergency power.

Weygand's Army Wanders About; A Force No More

By EDMUND STEVENS
BEYRUTH, Syria, Feb. 29.—The sorry remnants of Gen. Maurice Weygand's once proud Near East Army roam idly about the streets and cafes.

Since the collapse of France, conjecture has surrounded these forces which, with the British, were to have played a major role in the Near East.

But they are an army no more. Demobilized under supervision of the "Mixed Commission for Control of Syria," composed of 21 Italian, British and German, almost all the reservists went home.

Today scarcely 20,000 remain of the force which, though its size was greatly exaggerated, in its prime numbered upward of 150,000 well-trained and well-equipped fighting men.

Had they wished, they might have played an important, even decisive role, in the Mediterranean and Balkan campaign, aiding Greece and backing up Turkey.

Instead, when the motherland collapsed, they, too, after much vacillating, elected to strike their colors and lay down their unused arms.

Therein lies the tragedy and futility of the French in Syria. A majority of the rank and file, and many of the higher officers, including a section of the High Commission, favored resistance. Today 150 officers are still imprisoned. Many others crossed over to Palestine and now serve with the Free French.

Gen. Henri Dentz, whom Vichy appointed High Commissioner of Syria in December to strengthen its authority in the mandate territories, was the commander of the Paris area during the tragic days of last June.

After the Government's departure it was he who decided to surrender the city without resistance, but with limited violence.

In a conversation with me he complained of the difficulties caused by the economic blockade and Arab unrest.

"Do you know," the General told me heatedly, "at a little Arab town I visited yesterday the local chief made an eloquent speech on Arab national aspirations. My good man, I replied, 'how can you bring up such a subject when the people of whole continents are starved and bombed while here, judging from the excellent lunch I have just eaten, you are still in the shade of the olive tree?'

General Dentz's job as he sees it is to keep order, sit tight until the war ends, and then follow in of no concern to him. He and his underlings, are like hollow men filling their emptiness with office routine.

They try to avoid broader issues or thoughts of the future by constantly talking themselves and those around them that everything is calm and peaceful. But there is no peace of mind for them. Each new British success in Africa causes a twinge of bitter remorse, for at least they are still Frenchmen.

Far more torn and contradictory are the feelings of those French who bear direct responsibility for the capitulation, but cannot independently make up their minds to join the Free French of Gen. Charles De Gaulle or shake off the instructions of anti-British propaganda. They detest the Germans and despise the Italians, but their admiration for Britain is not unalloyed with envy and inarticulate resentment that British moral fiber proved tougher than theirs and that the British still have something to live for while their whole world has turned to ashes.

This French demoralization profoundly annoys the natives. For the mandated area of Syria, despite its progress under French administration never developed loyalty to France among its active population.

As long as the government did not interfere with their habits and religion, and their taxes were not excessive, they were content, but now that the French seem to be losing their grip they recall their old grievances and want to be rid of them. They deeply resent having to suffer for a war that was not their concern. The tourist industry upon which thousands, especially in Lebanon, depended, is completely destroyed. All foreign trade is throttled by the blockade. No ship can leave or enter the harbor. Overland routes are virtually clogged. The handicraft industries languish for lack of foreign customers and foreign market.

A new version of "man bites dog" story cropped up at Delray Beach last week. The operators of a bait and tackle shop decided to dig a well to supply salt water for their bait tank. They dug a shallow one on the beach and obtained a supply of sweet, sparkling water. The tank is still being supplied a in tucket from the inlet.

Asales Trail At Mobile To Open Feb. 25

MOBILE, Ala., Feb. 20.—(Special)—Mobile's annual floral exposition, the 20-mile Asales Trail will be formally opened to the public March 2. It was announced here today by sponsors.

An unusually mild winter has already set early varieties in bloom along the trail and the seals are expected to be at the height of their beauty within a week after the formal opening.

The Asales Trail, which starts at historic Bienville Square in downtown Mobile and winds through residential sections, annually attracts thousands of visitors. Sponsors are expecting at least 125,000 to make the pilgrimage to Mobile this season.

Since last year the Trail has been lengthened by two and one-half miles with the planting of some 2,500 additional plants on city-owned property. The bushes came from a city-owned asales nursery. Hundreds of additional bushes have been planted also by individuals along the route.

Beginning March 19 and continuing daily for two weeks, Mobile's annual Historic Homes tour will be held before a backdrop of color provided by the Asales Trail.

strength concentrates in this City within striking distance of Sicily, Albania, Southern Italy, and Greece.

It means that the British Army of the Nile, controlling the North African Coast, can take part in the event of a German surge into Greece. With every important Libyan and Egyptian vital air base controlled by their forces, the British are masters of the Eastern Mediterranean.

Even if the coastline from Alexandria to Salenika, Greece, falls into the Axis, British planes fly in from the island of Crete in Palestine to Benghazi, dominating the Anatolian section which belongs to Turkey. Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's rapid advance has secured British possession of the region. Naval and air bases in North Africa threaten every move Adolf Hitler can conceive.

Bahari, in Egypt, with its sheltered bay, protected by the equipment in an ideal landing ground; Bahari has a strategic Greek; Tobruk a vital anchorage; Benghazi a perfectly located harbor and up-to-date air field. All these constitute a chain of jumping off points for a vigorous initiative on the part of the British in conflict staged in the southern sphere of the war arena.

Observers here are so imbued with sagacious confidence that they are more concerned to speculate on what surprise Britain, not Germany, is about to unleash next.
