When Brook Bennett grows old, his grandchildren will be able to hear him tell the story of his mother and father pitching their tent near the shore of Lake Emma to clear their acre of land in the western portion of Lake Mary. It will be a story filled with the pioneering spirit. However, it will not be peopled with cowboys and Indians. The story's cast will be filled with health inspectors and Lake Mary City Councilmen.

Two motorcyclists became involved in a running dispute with the driver of a car. The incident began Friday at 8:30 p.m. as the two men or motorcycles, Mark Thilmony, 29, and Miles Thilmony, 23, both of Orlando were traveling south on Wekiva Springs Road east of Lake Brantley Road.

Patty Thilmony was a passenger on the motorcycle driven by Miles. The car involved was a yellow Camero driven by a man about 20 years old with a woman passenger Here's an account of the incident as provided by sheriff's department records: The Camaro came up from behind the cyclists nearly

GOP Boss 'Censored' Frey Material, Aide Charges

ORLANDO (UPI) - Phil Reece, campaign manager for Republican gubernatorial candidate Lou Frey, has accused GOP State Chairman Bill Taylor of "censoring our campaign material" by refusing to distribute a statement accusing Jack Eckerd's aides of campaign "dirty tricks."
Reece said Taylor refused to distribute an Aug. 29 statement accusing the rival Eckerd campaign organization of using four-year-old endorsements by national party figures given when Eckerd was the party's 1974 U.S. senatorial nominee. It also accused the organization of using a six-months-old en-dorsement of Eckerd by L.E. "Tommy" Thomas three weeks after Thomas was named state party campaign finance chair-

Dawn Of Fusion Age

A temperature of 60 million degrees was attained for one-tenth of a second recently in an experimental fusion reactor at Princeton University. A tenth of a second isn't long, except in the infant science of nuclear fusion.

This was enough for the U.S. Energy Department φ describe the Princeton achievement as a significant step forward in the search for the ultimate answer to the world's energy problem.

The list of steps yet to be taken is a long one, but cience is inching toward the harnessing of fusion s the successor to fission in the field of nuclear

At the end of the road are power plants using fuel s abundant as sea water, producing no adioactive waste.

Princeton has passed one milestone with its Soughnut-shaped chamber designed to sustain and contain plasma at the incredible temperatures quired for a fusion reaction.

Last February, San Diego, Calif.'s General Atomic Co. reported the first operation of its Doublet III fusion machine. Scientists in Naboratories from Livermore, Calif., to Boston, Mass., are following the various avenues of fusion research with federal grants totaling $500 million a Europe's Common Market countries are pooling funds for a new fusion research center in England. The Russians are well along in their own pursuit of fusion as an energy source.

Progress similar to that just reported at Princeton is encouraging, but even the most optimistic scientists warn that it may be as long as 30 years before anyone can expect to see fusion power plants producing electricity.

That means it will take more than a little bit of luck to manage the energy problems facing us in the meantime — such as an international scramble for the world's limited supplies of fossil fuels, and handling the fuel-reprocessing and waste-disposal demands of the nuclear fission plants that must provide an increasing share of our electricity until the fusion alternative is a reality.

But such immediate challenges are surely more manageable with the knowledge that there is relief on the horizon.

If the hydrogen atoms in one gallon of water can be converted into the energy equivalent of 300 gallons of gasoline — as fusion promises — then our spent nuclear fuel, and air pollution from coal-fired atility boilers can be relegated to the past. That's well worth the wait - and the investment in research and development that can bring the age of fusion with the dawn of the 21st century.

'Dirty' List To Clean

WASHINGTON - President Carter, who has had no more luck than his predecessors in reeding out wasteful federal programs, might do well to emulate a political tactic developed by the Environmental Action citizen's lobby.

mental Action has published its "Dirty Dozen" hit list — the names of 12 members of Congress the group considers to have the worst voting records on environmental legislation. Then it sets out to beat those congressmen at the polls.

In the four congressional elections held since the "Dirty Dosen" campaign was organized, the lobby group has had remarkable success. Thirtyone of the 41 members named to the hit list (some were repeats) are no longer in Congress. Twenty-five were defeated, while six chose to Despite a few conspicuous exceptions such as Rep. Samuel Devine, R-Ohio, who is going into his fourth straight election as a "Dirty Dosen" target, most members named to the list have found it a dangerous distinction.

Now a former Nixon-Ford administration official, Laurence H. Silberman, has suggested a similar approach for ridding the government of programs that no longer work or involve ex- SCIENCE WORLD

Writing in a new Republican Party quarterly magazine called "Commonsense," Silberman notes that almost every federal program, once initiated, "achieves instant immortality" because an "iron triangle" builds up among the congressional committees that developed the program, the bureaucrats who administer it, and the constituency that benefits from it."

Although the general public decries wasteful spending and unnecessary programs, the "iron triangle" alliance in favor of keeping a program going is always stronger, because it is intense and narrowly focused, than the diffused constituency for reform.

Suitcase A-Bomb Said To Be A Terrorist's Dream

Berald Services

WASHINGTON - For some time now political radicals in Europe and the Middle East have reportedly been shopping the world's black markets for an atomic bomb. But not just any atomic bomb. intelligence sources say the radicals want a small weapon, easy to handle, and relatively simple to detonate.

That apparently narrows the field to one very special device in the U.S. arsenal: the Army's obscure "suitcase A-bomb." Weighing as little as 100 pounds, and packaged in two-foot knapsacks, the embs are formally known as "Atomic Demolition Munitions," and are said to be omething of a terrorist's dream. The smallest of the suitcase bombs can be transported, set up, armed and ex-ploded by two people. That means, in the wrong hands, the devices could be placed anywhere, at any time, to blow up a block of a city, or to wipe out a corporation headquarters, and thereby spread panic through an entire nation. Pentagon experts say the smallest suitcase bomb, with less than a kiloton yield, could kill thousands if placed at the base of a large river dam. Likewise, s larger ADM, with up to two kilotons of grounds of the White House, and very likely blow that building sport.

Such prospects are naturally unsettling And as terrorists and terrorism acts have become increasingly bold, there has been a concurrent reevaluation of the wisdom of keeping ADMs around. Some intelligence officers say the risk of the ADM presently exceeds its stragetic worth, thus it should be done away with.

Actually, the worth of the ADM has long been in dispute. The bombs were created in the mid-1960s to be used for wartime Proponents envisioned squads of nightfighters hauling the explosives behind enemy lines to blow up bridges.

Critics said the idea would be passe during a nuclear holocaust. Still, the bombs were produced "in the hundreds," according to a Pentagon spokesman. And despite their controversy they are doubtlessly ingenious in struments. Says one service retiree, now a Pentagon weapons consultant: "Prior to this century, two men with suitcase A bombs could have won any war in the world history." An Army nuclear affairs specialist says there are two kinds of ADMs. One is the bag that is 13 inches in diameter. The second device is heavier (the exact size is classified), and according to photographs it looks like a 15-inch cylinder peched in a

A readily available field manual on the subject (FM 5-36) says "the ADM is basically similar to any other member of the nuclear family." Except that it's apparently simpler. In pictures, the bomb resembles the putterings of a safe cracker; firing components, for instance, are attached by plain wires and cables. This simplicity is of course part of the design. ADMs were conceived to be fired by frogmen and pathfinders, not buttonring scientists. ADM crews consist largely of enlisted men who have little or no nuclear training. In other words, during war, sergeants would deploy the awesomely destructive weapons. And if sergeants can learn to blow the combs, the worry is that terrorists could do it too. There is a secret code that must to FM 5-26, but it can be avoided by use of an on-site timing fuse. One former ADM officer says arming the bomb "is not really complicated."

ADM proponents concede the weapon is deny that it is any more a threat in the hands of terrorists than other atomic warheads. The Army nuclear specialist says some atomic artillery shells are even smaller than ADMs, and "may be just as easy to detonate !

Besides, the Army says terrorists would have to get an ADM before they could use it, "and that would be difficult." A spokesman explains that the bombs are stored (in America and Europe) under safeguards which surpass that for other nuclear weapons: "For example, they are never taken out for training exercises." Still, the spokesman admits the ADMs are not totally safe from theft. No weapon is. In this case, the bombs are perhaps most vulnerable when they are transported from place to place; the security convoys are sometimes light, and always fully exposed, conditions that one day may invite a successful hijacking.

If that day comes, the world may never be the same. Given the features of the ADM, terrorists could put a device in the trunk of a car, say, then park the vehicle close to the Capitol during a State of the Union Address. They could then put on the timer, and be out of the country when the

Raceway Closes Tuesday

Four is the magic number at the Seminole Haress Raceway as the track's most successful season closes next Tuesday night on a bright note. Track manager Neil Makin predicted at the start of the season a nightly mutuel handle, as a sound weekend will produce a figure of $95,000 - which is still well above the best previous average.

"It gets better every year, and we think next year will certainly follow the trend," said Makin the other night. "Considering the mechanical problems we had early in the season, we finished very respec-

Tuesday night's final performance will be fan appreciation night, with no admission charge. As one pari-mutuel plant closes, another just a stone throw down the road is set for opening.

The Orlando-Seminole Jai-Alai fronton begins its season Friday night. General manager Gordon Hulbert indicates there will be 10 new players on the roster, and Juan Bengoa is replacing Juan Arrieta as players manager.

Sanford's three professional baseball players David Wiggins and brothers Tim and Ned Raines are doing just fine, thank you.

Tim played second base for the West Palm Beach Expos in the Class A Florida State League. He hit .291, which is strong considering the FSL is a pitcher's league. Tim stole 39 bases, a club record and bats leadoff. According to club owner and general manager Bob Sowers, Tim "is going to be a good one, and has a chance of playing in the majors."

Both had pretty good years, with Wiggins showing the higher batting average, .305. They fly home Saturday night. Wiggins played right field, and was impressive enough to be invited to winter instructional league starting Sept. 13 at Phoenix, Ariz. He pitched just one inning of relief, and was most happy about making good contact most of the season. He didn't have many strikeouts, and reported good progress after batting instructor Hank Sauer changed his stance and got more of his body into the pitch. He was hitting .375 earlier in the season, but slumped slightly late in the season.

Sowers notes that Tim was selected to play in the winter instructional league in St. Petersburg again. Q. Which are used more i., major league baseball, glasses or satact leases ? - R.K., Hoquiam, Wash. There are no accurate surveys available right now. But with the development of plastic lenses, many more topnotch players are now wearing glasses because they pose no danger, and old prejudices against them have long vanished. Contact lenses are a little more trouble. I'd have to vote for glasses as being in greater

Q. Do you think Joe Diblinggio's record 85-game hitting streak will ever be broken? If so, by whom? — S.M., St. Johnsville, N.Y. After Pete Rose's valiant run at it, I'd never say "never." Yet of all the giamor records in baseball, I'd say it's the most invulnerable — not because today's players aren't as good but because travel, night achedules and the constant use of fresh pitchers have changed the games from what it was in DiMaggio's day and made it a lot tougher for hitters to sustain any kind of streak. I wouldn't even guess at a possible candidate to go after

Q. Having George McGinnis and Dr. J on the same team is like having two jeckeys on one horse in the Kentucky Durby. I have watched McGinnis since he played in 10-year-old leagues. He should play tackle for the Chicago Bears. He is "transactouser" in football. Right? — Old Col. Walt Charlesworth, Indianapolis, Ind. Yeah, but they don't pay the same kind of salaries in the NFL. Re his teaming with Dr. J: you won't have to worry about that any more because George will be playing mile high this fall and winter in Denver. The funny thing is that on a personal level, there was never any problem between George and Dr. J on the been super stars in any era because they had unique ability. But I think today's guys have it a little tougher because there's greater competition since baseball became truly democratic with the advent of Jackie Robinson, opening up a whole flood of new talent, even if it is diluted somewhat by 24 major league teams instead of 16. Figures aren't an accurate guide since betting averages were generally higher a half contury ago.

Q. For the life of me , I can't understand how the sports writers of America can so biniantly ignore the 1973-73-74 Oakland A's. Your selection of the 1975-76 Rods as the best of the modern ear might well be grounds for slander (I'll have to check with F. Loe Bulley on that one). I realise this latter is an exercise in fulfity, but how can a three-time world champion team he so everleshed? The A's had and did it all. — C.C. Wilson, Alameda, Calif. I wouldn't say the A's are overlooked. Just that as individual talents they didn't impress me that much. Or just check what Gene Tenace, Joe Rudi, Sal Bando and even the "great" Reggie have done since they went to greener (as in money) pastures. As for Balley, his betting average hasn't been so hot lately, either.

Withou him, Falcons can't hope for winning record. Strength is up front, where Warren Bryant and R.C. Jim Mitchell is class tight end, but wide receivers are just so-so and, unless Bubba Bean comes back strong from injury, there is no real threat in backfield, where Haskel Stanback is only reliable. Falcs have adequate field goal booter in Fred Steinfort. Overall speed is fair. Rating — C

This was major reason for team's improvement year ago and again is major area of strength, particularly up front where vet end Claude Humphrey and gang blend well with young talent like Wilson Faumuina. Linebacking, which was supposed to settled with such as Fulton Kuykendall, Ralph Ortega, is now vulnerable because of defections — unless couple of draftees come through. The secondary is fairly solid and joined by Ernie Jackson from New Orleans. Corner back Rolland Lawrence led NFC in intercepts and approaches all-pro class. Bennett's defensive concepts are sound. The punting game is excellent with vet John James, the return teams just fair. Rating — B

PREDICTION

The respectability achieved in just one year might work against them because now the Falcons won't catch anybody unaware. Scarcity in offensive skill positions makes them FOURTH in NFC West.
