Last Time: Sanford, 1963

'When I Saw Mom, I Remembered...'

By JANE CASSELBERRY Herald Staff Writer

For 14 years Maureen Hall Sitton thought her mother was dead.

This Christmas Maureen knows better. Maureen had lived with her father, traveling from one state to another, never knowing that her mother was alive and had never given up her search for her The last time Maureen saw her mother was at age four when the family, living in Sanford, split up. Then, by quirk of fate, an aunt went to Bayfield, Colo., where Maureen, 18, was living with her husband. "She didn't know my married name, but because Bayfield is such a small town and she had heard we were living here, my aunt came for a surprise visit, inquired around about a Hall and found me,' Maureen told a Herald reporter by telephone. It was Maureen's aunt who told Maureen ber mother was still alive. Maureen and her relatives gave this account of the incident, picking up the story from 1963 in "The family was living in Sanford at the time and my parents were going through a divorce." Maureen explained. Her father, John Hall, took her to Kentucky to visit relatives while her mother remained in Sanford with her eight-month-old brother, Curtis Martin Hall, she said. "I was the last one of our family to see Maureen." said her 82-year-old great-grandmother, Lettie Allen, of 2422 Orange Ave., Sanford, who was then living in Winchester, KY.

After the visit, John Hall and Maureen just dropped from sight. Mrs. Allen lives with her daughter, Helen Padgett, Maureen's great-aunt. Mrs. Padgett said that young Hall had kept in touch with his father, who had never revealed his whereabouts. She said Maureen's mother had tried in vain to find her ex husband and daughter. At one time,

Curtis Hall told his parents Maureen had died in Nova Scotia. But there was no record of the death at the Bureau of Vital Statistics. Maureen said her father had told her that her mother and grandparents were dead, and that her mother, "never wanted me anyway. That is what always hurt the most when I was growing up," she

She said to avoid being traced, her father kept them on the move and they lived in "Wyoming, California, Wisconsin, all over. My dad remarried and he and his wife were together off an on for four years," she said, "but they are separated now." "My aunt came to see me last summer and that's when I found out about my mother," Maureen said. "My aunt had not seen me since I was six. I asked birth records and everything else for several months, but she had remarried and I did not know her last name. Later I found out her new name was Helen Bennett and she was living in Jacksonville, but that is a big city and the schools would not release any information." In desperation, Maureen wrote letters to the Evening Herald and to a newspaper in Winchester appealing for help in locating her mother. Within hours after the letter appeared in the Winchester paper, she received a phone call from a man who said, "I am your Uncle Bill," she said "I was so shocked when I found out I had aunts, uncles, a great aunt and a great-grandmother."

"I tried to locate her through Social Security.

'I was so shocked when I found out I had aunts, uncles...'

> Maureen said. Soon, she was talking by phone to her mother in Jacksonville and other relatives in Sanford. Later, Maureen flew to Jacksonville for a reunion with her mother and brother, Cutis. Shortly after there was a reunion with relatives in Sanford. Curtis had been adopted as a child by his stepfather, Preston Bennett, who was the only father he could remember, she said. Because of her brother's close resemblance to his father, Maureen said when she first saw him she was shocked because she momentarily thought it was her father.

NEW YORK (UPI) - A cry of "censorship" was voiced

NEW YORK (UPI) - There's no provision for an official protest in pro football as there is in baseball, which is an injustice in one way but a pure blessing in another because what would they do with an official found to have cost a team a key ball game

The Calls Keep Coming In

hang him from the nearest goal post? Anytime a protest is upheld in baseball, the game in question either is resumed from the point of dispute or replayed entirely. Such cases are rare since baseball protests are upheld about as often as Egypt and Israel get together at the peace table. In football, there's no practical way to replay a game already finished or resume it from the point of contention. That doesn't necessarily mean football officials never make mistakes. They're human, the same as anyone else. Certainly they make mistakes although on balance, they don't make that many. Only a few years ago, the Los Angeles Rams were given five downs during the same series. The referee lost count of the downs and for doing that, he and his entire crew drew a suspen-

All this comes into sharper focus now due to the uncommon furor continuing over Sunday's contest in Baltimore where quarterback Bert Jones of the Colts fumbled away the ball near the Patriots' goal-line with less than three minutes left, but the referee rul a he had whistled the play dead, and Baltimore immediately took advantage of that break to beat New England, 30-24. for its third straight AFC East Division championship. A New England victory automatically would have given Miami the division championship title under the National Football League's tie-breaker rule, but when the Colts won, that finished the Dolphins for the season. Up at their headquarters on Park Avenue, the NFL people haven't heard the end of it yet, nor are they likely to for some time They put one man on the phones especially to handle all the the angry calls coming in from Miami and the New England area Monday. All the callers were incensed over what they felt was a sheer outrage. Everybody calling in was mad. Although the Patriots already had been eliminated from the playoffs before Sunday's game, their supporters are burned up because a victory was "stolen" from them. The Miami fans are boiling because they feel their team was jobbed out of the division title, and Dolphin Coach Don Shula, who was watching the game on TV, is steaming because he isn't sure whether the referee blew his whistle accidentally, prematurely or arbitrarily. "I don't know what the ruling was, whether the whistle had blown or whether they (the officials) just didn't see the play." Shula keeps saying, "but it was evident that Jones fumbled and New England recovered."

Fred Silva was the referee in Sunday's game. He's no rookie, having officiated in the NFL II seasons. For working Sunday's game, he got $575 plus a lot of heat. Jones says he doesn't know if he fumbled before the play was over or not. If Silva was guilty of whistling too quickly, it could've been he was being overprotective of Jones. Consciously or otherwise, most referees don't like to see quarterbacks absorb unnecessary punishment, particularly quarterbacks of Jones' ability, so they sometimes become a bit overprotective. Regardless, it was purely a judgment call on Silva's part and as such, all those irate Miami and New England fans have no solid judgement, but who's to say their own judgement of him is right. That goes for Don Shula, too. He wasn't exactly a disinterested witness watching that game. If it's any consolation, Fred Silva draws some support from Lee MacPhail, President of the American League.

"In this particular case, there couldn't be any protest in baseball, either, because it was a judgment call," says MacPhail. controversial play on their 6 "The only time there can be a protest with us is when a rule is p.m. shows. interpreted improperly. Cardinal: From 2-Car Garage To 26 Acres

Herald Staff Writer If Cardinal Industries' projections are on target, the work force at the Sanford plant will triple by 1981.

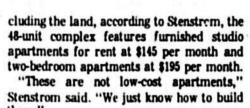

Occupying 26 acres at 3701 S. Sanford Ave., the firms employs 100 persons for its assembly-line production of apartments and motel units. Julian Stenstrom, public relations director, said the firm hopes to employ 300 persons when the plant reaches peak capacity.

They are presently producing two of the units each day with plans calling for four units a day in 1978, Stenstrom said. Peak capacity is in the neighborhood of 12 units a day, he estimates.

The Sanford plant is the second founded by Austin Guirlinger, who started the business in a two-car garage. By 1971 his plant in Columbus, Ohio, was producing 10,000 apartments and motel units annually. Guirlinger purchased the Sanford property, originally built by Texas millionaire H.L. Hunt, in 1974. It took two years of modifications before work could begin locally, Stenstrom said.

In 14 months since the start of construction, the plant has produced 600 units and completed 11 projects. Stenstrom said 22 projects are on the drawing boards for the coming

The local showcase for Cardinal Industries is the Sanford Court Apartments at 3301 S. Sanford Ave. Built at a cost of $800,000 in-

The four sides, ceiling and roof of each modular are constructed of wood and gypsum board on a jig and then carried on overhead monorails to the assembly line. Once on the assembly line, the six sides are put together and all of the interior work is "The modular is 95 percent complete once it comes off the assembly line," Stenstrom said. The modulars are lifted by a patented crane which lifts the five-ton units by four steel bands and puts them into place. All that remains is the foundation work. Stenstrom said a complete project, such as Sanford Court Apartments or a Knights' Inn motel, (the company has built 15 such motels in two states) could be completed in 10 to 12 weeks from groundbreaking Projects similar to Sanford court apartments have already been completed by the Sanford division in Bartow, Bradenton Plant City, Palatka, Gainesville, Palm Bay, Leesburg, and are under construction in Haines City and Ocala.

The city commissioner said the firm's fiveyear objective is 125 projects. Cardinal Industries already is a $55 million a year business. Stenstrom said, and is the largest apartment builder in the United States.

UPI Business Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Carter administration believes the 1978 economy will be good, if business shows some confidence. Business says it has no reason for confidence in a souring

The truth seems to lie - along with the hopes of consumers and aspirations of jobseekers - somewhere between. There is "ample reason for optimism," says Charles Schultze, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. Schultze quickly notes that 4 million people found jobs in 1977.

inflation is stable and the economy is expanding. But Albert Sommers, chief economist of the businesssponsored Conference Board, says financiers and industrialists have "grim" memories of the last recession. And a Gallup poll confirms the assessment: half suspect the next one is only 15 months

Schultze and Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal worry that the gloom might become a self-fulling prophecy. The President's top economic advisers say the administration's biggest problem is selling confidence. The economy expanded moderately (4.7 percent) in 1977 - although crankily with stalls in January, February and August. The consensus of government, business and academic forecasts is for only a slight slowing in the new year. But the drag could be reversed into a year of stronger growth, depending on how much of an income tax cut President Carter proposes and Congress accepts. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps has mentioned a figure of about $7 billion for business and $15 billion for individuals. This breaks down to $300 for a family of threat of a huge, arbritrary price increase by the Organization of four with incomes between $15,000 and $20,000. Bigger cuts of at least $25 billion are preferred by House Speaker Thomas O'Neill and General Electric Co. chairman Reginald Jones, who sits on three-member government-business-iapor committee that monitors inflation.

The expansion rate of the economy hinges, the forecasters all agree, on the production incentives to business and the increased spending money for consumers that will come from the tax cuts.

Surprisingly, in light of a year of controversy, energy is the other positive element for the administration. For the first time in

This fact coupled with solid retail sales and orders for new goods suggests that industry is primed for expansion. Art And Music

'It's Difficult To Separate

By JOAN MADISON Herald Correspondent

"Pisces people are busy people and the Pisces sign of two fish wimming in opposite directions is indicative of the creative forces struggling to be manifest in the individual," says Cordella Treece of Altamonte Springs.

Cordella reveals that she is a Pisces, and throughout her home the creative forces are visibly manifest in all art forms, especially painting and music.

"It's difficult to separate the two," according to Cordella. "If you're interested in art, you're also interested in music. Pisces often can start something and end up with something else." In the family room of the home she and husband Robert share but I don't think it has sharps and flats. Before amplifiers, there were a lot of Shaker chimes, but there aren't many left now - the cost is prohibitive." She continues, "I've had the chimes about 10 years, but had to hunt for them for 15 years." Next to the Shaker chimes is the marimba, a member of the xylophone family, with tubular metal resounders with each bar, if I get to heaven, there's one there! This is the fourth harp I've had - I wore the other ones out. I love the sound of the harp and could entertain for hours on it without a piece of music." Cordella explains that the vibra harp is a relatively new instrument, invented in the 1920's. It was then used only in jazz, but

To make her jewelry, she crochets with a very strong nylon thread with 24K gold metallic lame. She prefers this to chains because chains are sometimes heavy and tend to scratch dresses. All necklaces are designed with a point of interest bead and pattern repeats. A typical necklace might have 100 interest beads and 1200 stitches in gold or silver.

She laughs, "One time I did so many stitches that I burnt the bearing out of my crochet hook - the end fell right off!" When she left Toledo, Ohio, 10 months ago and it was 30 below zero, she thought she would "take it easy for a while" in Florida, but she found in Florida new challenging materials to work with.
