Governor signs bills mobilizing local law enforcement, schools

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Community programs designed to keep youths out of trouble will provide the lasting solutions to the increasing juvenile crime problem according to the governor who signed a series of bills in a $237 million dollar package dealing with juvenile justice.
Gov. Lawton Chiles signed the bills Wednesday that create a juvenile justice system designed to get tough on young violent offenders and help at-risk youngsters turn away from delinquency.
"Too many of Florida's children are students of crime, learning a violent trade early in life," Chiles said as he signed the reform measures in a Tampa courtroom.

"This does not solve juvenile crime," Chiles said of the measures. "The lasting solutions are going to be found in communities through aggressive aftercare programs."
Programs like P.A.L. (Police Athletic League) and D.A.R.E. (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) help forge bonds between youths and law enforcement.
Seminole County created the P.A.L. program two years ago which focuses on fun and learning activities between, primarily, middle

At a glance

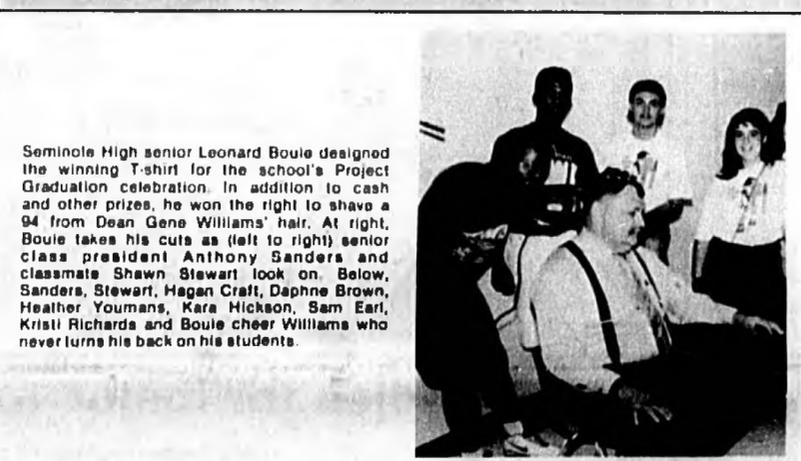

Florida's juvenile justice system is bigger and tougher under a $237 million reform bill Gov. Lawton Chiles signed Wednesday. The legislation and a companion measure tackle the problem of teen-age crime with several provisions:
● more adult prosecution of hard-core teen-age criminals
● longer stays in detention centers and residential programs
● after school programs at middle schools, alternative classrooms and more school police officers
● greater court authority to order parents of delinquents to attend hearings, enroll in parental skills programs and do community service
● a new department to focus on teen-age criminals, who are now handled by the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

● an additional 30-cent fee charged to auto tag renewals
● a $30 Save the Children specialty plate
● expansion of residential programs to hold 7,647 more beds in residential programs like boot camps and other facilities
● expansion of detention centers to hold 316 more beds
● creation of a new, more intensive residential program, where teens will be kept under 24-hour watch for up to three years
● more power to judges to punish teenagers who mouth off, threaten them or ignore court orders by sentencing them to detention centers.

Waterfront committee gets its first look at UF design concepts

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Members of the Waterfront Master Plan Steering Committee got their first look at initial design drawings for the lakefront development yesterday. The drawings were made by students of the University of Florida Architecture Studio Project, hired to handle initial plans and concepts. The students and Professor Peter Prugh have been studying various areas of Sanford's waterfront for several weeks.
"We were surprised at how much they have learned about our city and the waterfront area," commented committee Chairman Larry Strickler. "Some of them might have even learned more about us than some of the committee members."

In the dozen sketches presented, no specific plans were formulated. "This was only the initial concept," Strickler said. "From here, the students take our comments back with them and work on more detailed plans. This was just the first stage so they could see in which direction we wanted them to be moving."
Several of the plans showed an expansion of what is presently the Monroe Harbour Marina. It includes another docking area out on Lake Monroe to the east of the present site, which would be bridged to the current northern area. Additional expansion would also be made toward Memorial Park.
Some of the plans showed a

Animal shelter delayed

Humane Society caught between county, Sanford

By J. MARK HARFIELD
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — The groundbreaking of the new shelter for the Humane Society of Seminole County faces new delays in the confusion over whether Sanford or the county will provide water and sewer to the facility.
"We're not sure which way to go next," said Ron Hardee, society building chairman.
Hardee says the county development officials were agreeable in September to allow the city to continue to provide water to the new $350,000 facility to replace the shelter destroyed by fire in April 1993. But since then, Hardee says he's learned the site lies fully within the city's utility service area.
Society president Steve Mason has appealed to county commissioners to intervene. The scheduled May 14 groundbreaking has passed and no new date has been set, said Hardee.
A portion of the society's 3 1/4 acres at County Home Road near Flea World lie within the city. The new shelter will be built upon land in the city boundary, but the parking lot and other improvements will be in the county jurisdiction. The site is currently served by city water and a septic tank sewage disposal system.
The society has been ordered by the state to discontinue use of the septic tanks because animal hair prevents them from operating properly. Looking for alternatives, Hardee said architects found a county line runs close by the shelter property along County Road 427, but Hardee said the nearest city sewer line is north of Flea World.
To extend the city line requires time-consuming approvals from the Florida Department of Transportation.

Should two businesses in same center serve alcohol?

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY — Lake Mary commissioners tonight will discuss what to do about two businesses serving alcohol in the same strip shopping center, a breach of city codes.
At the present time, Victoria Square Shopping Center contains two businesses which serve alcohol: Kelsey's Pizza and Gator's. Kelsey's Pizza was licensed and opened first.
When Gator's applied for an alcohol license, it was mistakenly approved. No consideration was given to Lake Mary city codes calling for a minimum separation of 500 feet between the entrance doors of businesses that sell alcohol for consumption on premises.

The two entrances are only 135 feet from each other. The entire strip center in which the two are located has a total length of 305 feet.
After the city staff discovered the error, the commission voted to allow the businesses to continue operation, which they have done.
Now however, the matter has returned to haunt the commission. The owners of the shopping center want to replace Gator's with a similar business. They have asked for a variance to reduce the 500 foot separation

Haitians rally for Aristide

WEST PALM BEACH — Hundreds of members of South Florida's Haitian community clogged Interstate 95 in a miles-long caravan of cars demanding President Jean-Bertrand Aristide be returned to power.

"No Aristide, no peace," chanted the 500 people who traveled from Miami's Little Haiti neighborhood to the West Palm Beach Auditorium to celebrate Haiti's Flag Day on Wednesday.

"The solution is solving the military crisis in Haiti," said Miami physician Yves Renaud, who led the caravan.

"The solution is not to open the doors to Haitians," he said. "We want to stay in Haiti."

The group attended a special mass at Delray Beach's Our Lady of Perpetual Help Roman Catholic church before heading to the auditorium.

When they arrived, they were greeted by a sign: "President Clinton, remember your promise."

In his campaign, Clinton vowed to restore democracy to Haiti and the presidency to Aristide, who was ousted by a military coup in September 1991.

Former diplomat sentenced

MIAMI — A former Colombian diplomat has been sentenced to 33 months in federal prison after pleading guilty to money laundering charges in February.

Gustavo Enrique Pastrana Gomez, 40, at the time of his 1993 arrest in North Miami Beach, was Colombia's assistant consul in charge of commerce and culture relations in Montevideo, Uruguay.

He pleaded guilty to a single count and was sentenced Wednesday to the smallest possible amount of time, despite complaints from prosecutors who wanted Pastrana sentenced under stricter guidelines.

Pastrana was arrested by the DEA after a three-month undercover investigation, which involved Argentinean federal police and DEA offices in Montevideo and Buenos Aires, said Drug Enforcement Agency spokesman Jim Shedd.

Gas company settles complaint

MIAMI (AP) — A gas company accused of not hiring women to read meters or collect on past due accounts has agreed to pay $150,000 to settle a complaint brought by the U.S. Department of Labor.

In a routine audit of hiring practices by federal contractors and subcontractors, the Department of Labor found that the hiring practices of Miami-based Peoples Gas were discriminatory, said Carol Gaudin, the department's regional director.

In the settlement, the company agreed to pay women who applied for the position but were not considered and were qualified for back pay. About 30 women who applied for the jobs between 1987 and 1989 are eligible to receive a portion of the settlement, she said.

Five of the women will also be hired.

Orlando plans annual 'JustParkIT' event

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Randy Means is used to driving his car to work.

But on Friday, Means will be climbing into his 17-foot kayak for a commute through a chain of lakes to his job at the Orange-Osceola state attorney's office.

Means is one of hundreds of downtown Orlando workers who plan to row, walk, bus, car pool, skate or bike themselves to work as part of the city's third annual Just ParkIT event.

The event is intended to encourage downtown workers to consider commuting alternatives that use less fuel, cause less highway congestion and produce less pollution than driving to work alone.

Last year, an estimated 550 downtown workers participated in the event.

Organizers hope to exceed last year's number, said Tricia Moore, a spokeswoman for the Downtown Orlando Transportation Management Association, which is organizing the event.

Shirt off his back final payment

TAMPA, Fla. — Perhaps the chiropractor felt his ex-wife had taken him to the cleaners.

The man wrote his final alimony check for $182 on the back of a white dress shirt with blue pinstripes and sent it to his ex-wife's attorney.

"Here it is — the shirt off my back!" he scrawled on the shirt. Joyce A.G. Evans, the woman's attorney, was surprised. "No one's ever paid by shirt before," she said.

She took the wrinkled cotton shirt to the Bank of Tampa to see if it could be cashed. No problem as long as the particulars — names and account number — are exact, bank officials told her.

After she got a cashier's check from the chiropractor's bank, Evans was given back the shirt.

"They gave the shirt back to me as a memento," Evans said.

Suing cigarette makers

Anti-tobacco groups laud legislation to sue

By ADAM YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — As Gov. Lawton Chiles prepares to consider legislation that would make it easier for Florida to sue cigarette makers, the debate over the issue is getting louder.

The legislation would allow the state to sue to recover the costs of treating poor people with smoking-related illnesses. It passed quietly in the waning days of the regular session, which ended in mid-April.

A coalition of anti-smoking groups Wednesday urged Chiles to approve the bill, saying it would set a national precedent in the battle between smoking and anti-smoking interests.

Opponents argued that the measure would open an "avalanche of litigation" against all Florida businesses.

Chiles, who helped steer the bill to final passage, has remained tight-lipped about whether he would sign it.

"I don't know of any other product right now that's killing a lot of people," the governor said recently.

The bill's supporters say the legislation would allow the state to recover more than $1 billion a year in state dollars spent to treat Medicaid patients who have diseases caused by smoking.

Smoking costs the state $4 billion a year in health care costs and lost work productivity, or about $300 per resident. The bill would add up to $4 to the price of a pack of cigarettes, supporters estimate.

"The citizens of Florida and our businesses have passively been paying for billions of dollars to care for medically indigent patients while the tobacco industry has been filling their own deep pockets," said Eliza Perry, a member of the Florida Tri-Agency Coalition on Smoking Or Health. The group has members from the American Cancer Society, American Heart Association and the American Lung Association.

"It is exceedingly stronger than any tobacco tax that we ever thought of," Perry said. "That's why it's being looked at all across the nation as landmark sort of legislation."

Opponents said the bill would affect other industries in addition to cigarette makers.

"This is neither a simple bill nor one which will affect the tobacco industry alone," the Tobacco Institute, which speaks for the cigarette industry, said in a statement. "All Florida business will be negatively impacted and needlessly burdened with an avalanche of litigation."

Associated Industries of Florida and the Florida Chamber of Commerce have lobbied fiercely against the bill. They say it would hold liable all types of businesses that sell products or services to Medicaid recipients.

"We believe that neither the governor nor the majority of the Legislature fully understand its probable impact" because the bill was never debated, the tobacco institute said.

The bill would allow courts to impose judgments against companies based on their market share and the use of statistical evidence to prove the state's claims.

Sentenced to raise funds for ACS

Miami readies for major tourism convention

By EDDIE DOMINGUEZ
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — It's Miami's chance to shine, as more than 5,000 travel industry executives, tour operators and journalists begin to arrive for the single largest annual tourism trade show in the world.

The Greater Miami Convention and Visitors Bureau has been planning the event — which begins Saturday — for years, often taking the time to brag that The Discover America International Pow Wow is coming to town.

It has sent inspectors into local hotels, stepped up a taxi cab hospitality program, put together an orientation program for hotel workers and run radio ads telling Miamians to be on their best behavior.

"You are hosting the individuals who are responsible for about 90 percent of the incoming visitors to the United States. You are hosting the individuals responsible for nearly 70 percent of package tours that come to Florida," said GMCVB spokesman Mayco Villafana. Hundreds of millions of dollars in bookings will be made during the three-day conference, and while these bookings are for destinations all over the world, Miami is still the convention showcase. And Villafana said that over the three years after the conference the host city usually experiences a $150 million boom in tourism business.

Tours, parties, a concert, a street festival and assorted other special events are being planned to convince tour operators and media that Miami is for them and their clients.

Overall visitor numbers have remained stable, while Europeans are showing indications that they are starting to shy away from Miami. Many say safety seems to be the biggest perception problem the city faces, after highly publicized tourist murders and robberies.

But GMCVB officials are quick to point out that crime rates in the city have dropped.

The recent hijacking and robbery of a hotel courtesy bus carrying Norwegian tourists and the gruesome slaying last year of German tourist Barbara Meller Jensen before her children, however, have tarnished the city's fun-in-the-sun image.

GMCVB officials concede there's not much that can be done about random crime. But two recent fiascos remind local tourism officials how bad it can get.

Race riots broke out after a fatal police shooting during the week of the 1989 Super Bowl in Miami. Logistical turmoil marred the American Booksellers Association meeting in 1993, when half the city closed down early on a Friday because of fears of another riot when the officer in the 1989 shooting was acquitted of manslaughter charges in the deaths of two black men.

But the city's recent performance for the National Association of Television Program Executives, seen by many as a test, went off without a hitch.

So Saturday, the parties will begin and Miami's public relations machine will begin to grind, as local leaders watch and pray that all the careful planning doesn't go up in smoke.

Villafana said there is too much going on to sit around and just worry. "We're certainly not sitting here wringing our hands, hoping that something doesn't happen here."

Toll of natural disasters increases

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG
AP National Writer

UNITED NATIONS — Natural disasters are more than twice as likely to inflict a heavy death toll now as they were 30 years ago — and more than four times as likely to cause catastrophic economic harm, a U.N. study suggests.

The major reason is probably an exploding world population and the increasing tendency of people to settle in disaster-prone places, such as flood plains. But environmental degradation may also play a role, U.N. officials said.

It's also possible that the increase has been exaggerated by improvements in global communications — that recent disasters have simply been better documented.

The author of the study, Charles Kerpelman, conceded that might be the case. Still, he said in a telephone interview Wednesday, "You can't avoid the conclusion that the number of serious disasters is increasing."

North America bucked the global trend, however, with a sharp decrease in deadly disasters and a very slight increase in disasters causing substantial property damage, Kerpelman said.

Kerpelman is a consultant in Geneva who formerly worked for the U.N. Disaster Relief Organization there. He said he was "surprised and upset" by the conclusions he reached after crunching disaster statistics in his computer.

"It's an enormous problem that has to be dealt with," he said.

His study is being released next week at a U.N. conference in Yokohama, Japan. A summary was released at a briefing in New York.

The study does not argue that nature has become more violent in the past 30 years. Neither Kerpelman nor officials at the U.N. briefing believed that global warming or other climate changes could explain the increase.

"There are no more hurricanes, no more earthquakes than in the past," insisted Claude de Ville de Goyet, chief of emergency preparedness and disaster relief for the Pan American Health Organization.

Goyet said a growing population was the major reason for the increase. But Kerpelman's study says the number of people affected by disasters is growing at 6 percent a year, three times as fast as the global population is increasing.

U.N. officials speculate that environmental tampering might be one reason for the faster rate.

Peter Hansen, U.N. undersecretary-general for humanitarian affairs, used the example of development in the Himalayas that has poured silt into rivers in Bangladesh, raising riverbeds and increasing the likelihood of flooding.

Hansen and Goyet both stressed the need for greater disaster prevention and preparedness, especially in developing nations.

Kerpelman said he relied primarily on statistics compiled by the U.S. Agency for International Development. He analyzed disasters in four-year blocks between 1963 and 1992.

Between 1963 and 1967, he found 89 disasters that caused 100 or more deaths each; between 1988 and 1992, there were 205 such disasters, an increase of 130 percent.

By two other measures, the increase in disasters was even greater. The number of disasters causing significant property damage rose by more than 300 percent. And the number of disasters affecting a substantial number of people — 1 percent of a nation's population or more — rose by 256 percent.

While Kerpelman said there had been a sharp increase in deaths from epidemics, including malaria, cholera and yellow fever, he did not consider the impact of the disease that had by far the sharpest increase during the period studied — AIDS.

Jacqueline Onassis leaves hospital; family rushes to her side

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Family members gathered at Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis' side after doctors granted her wish to go home from the hospital where she was treated for serious cancer complications.

"I think all the members of the family are distressed by the medical reports," her brother-in-law Sen. Edward Kennedy said Wednesday after flying in from Washington.

"All the members of the family love her very deeply. We wanted to be here this evening. She's resting comfortably."

The 64-year-old Mrs. Onassis, who has non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, a cancer of the lymph system, was released earlier in the day from New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center.

Mrs. Onassis had been admitted on Monday "as a result of serious complications of her malignant lymphoma," the hospital said in a statement. "In accordance with the patient's clearly expressed wishes and with the concurrence of her physicians, she has been discharged home."

Hospital spokeswoman Kathy Robinson refused to elaborate on the complications or treatment. Mrs. Onassis' spokeswoman, Nancy Tuckerman, did not return a call.

About 1½ hours after Mrs. Onassis returned to her Fifth Avenue apartment, paramedics arrived carrying covered equipment that appeared to be oxygen canisters, the New York Post reported.

Sen. Kennedy and his wife, Victoria, visited her, as did Mrs.

Onassis' sister, Lee Radziwill Ross. He said Mrs. Onassis' children, John Kennedy Jr. and Caroline Kennedy Schlossberg, also were at the apartment. Both live in New York. Other visitors included Mrs. Onassis' niece Maria Shriver, the Post said.

Mrs. Onassis also was hospitalized for surgery on a bleeding ulcer.

What do we do to save area?

Back in the early part of this century, this area of Central Florida thrived on cattle and timber. As development got underway, more and more land was taken, and trees were felled. The people shouted, "What will we do to save our economy?"

The answer was celery. We became the celery capital of the world.

Then, with problems caused by a severe freeze, our land could no longer handle celery. Citrus became one of the major crops. Again, with weather problems and even more development, this area ceased to be a major citrus growing county.

Again, the cry went out. "What can we do?"

This time, the answer was tourist development. Along came Sea World, Walt Disney World, Universal Studios, and many other attractions. Tourism bloomed to such a point where a half dozen other major attractions are presently considering locating in this Central Florida area.

Now, we take a look at the decline in tourism, and perhaps it's time to, once again, question what we are going to do.

Some may believe casino or riverboat gambling will be the next attraction to bring our economy up. Others however, are opposed to this, and the question of whether or not it could be beneficial is being strongly debated.

We are also not thoroughly convinced that the drop in tourism can be blamed on crime. We refuse to use that as an excuse.

We believe there are two reasons for the decline in tourists. First of all, other states, seeing the success we have been having, are going all-out to develop their attractions. Case in point is Branson, Missouri. Several years ago it was just a small town. Today, it's rated as one of the biggest attraction areas in the nation.

Faced with ever-growing competition, the second reason we see is the sky-rocketing prices. Northern visitors know they will spend a great deal of their vacation money, for example, visiting the Disney attractions. They are often shocked however, to learn they are spending as high as $1,000 per day for an average size family. Other attractions are similarly high priced.

We would expect that as a tourist attraction grows, the cost of operating it would also have to increase. There must be a stopping point however.

There are more attractions to draw tourists than man-made entertainment complexes. State and national parks, nature preserves, zoos, Niagara Falls, beaches, and many others generally aren't so expensive one has to mortgage the house to take a vacation.

As stated before, we oppose spending tourist development dollars in a nationwide promotion campaign to lure more people to Central Florida. Before we even consider that, let us first look at what we are doing. We must control the rising costs which are prohibiting more and more families from paying us a visit.

If we don't, by the end of this decade, we'll be back to the same old lament. "What will we do to save Central Florida?"

Prayer in school

To pray or not to pray in our schools is more than a question; it is a burning, soul searing mantra. It is shameful that our politicians in Tallahassee lacked the courage to pass this bill.

Much more is involved than "Freedom of Speech" and the bulwark of our constitutional guarantees. At stake is our national character and our future as "One nation, under God, with liberty and justice for all."

Are we toying with the notion that we may not want freedom of belief shared by all our citizens?

While prayer is a personal dialogue between an individual and his God, it can also be a public expression of consensus between a group of like-minded individuals and their God.

Should we be ashamed to give thanks for what we have or to ask for the continuance of a blessing? Our way of life is still unique and a beacon that shines out, a real promise of freedom in a bountiful land.

If our Constitution's First Amendment needs shoring up in order to keep our government separate from our religions, i.e., make no laws either restricting expressions of our personal beliefs or imposing a state-ordained religion, then this legislation should have been proudly and publicly supported by all our citizens and passed by our political representatives.

Let us pray for another chance and that our politicians receive an injection of courage.

WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Postwar conservatism's prophet

With the death of Russell Kirk on April 20 at the age of 75, American conservatism has lost one of its true giants.

Prior to the middle of the 20th century, by far the most powerful conservative force in the United States was the tradition we now call "classical liberalism" (to distinguish it from the group of collectivist and redistributionist impulses that hijacked the word "liberalism" for itself a few decades back). Classical liberalism was grounded in the Enlightenment's celebration of the freedom of the individual, and derived from that source the twin concepts of political democracy and a free-market economy.

First in the United States and Britain, then ultimately all over the world, these concepts have constituted an immensely successful strategy for liberating the energies of humanity and furthering its happiness. In "The Road to Serfdom," published in 1944, Friedrich Hayek brilliantly restated the principles of classical liberalism in the teeth of the socialist doctrines then threatening to sweep the postwar world.

But mankind needs more than a strategy, however grand; it needs a purpose. One group of classical liberalism's critics, proclaiming the "death of God," had defined humanity's happiness as the ultimate purpose, and set about planning this -- thus spawning this century's plague of totalitarian states. Another, more popular in the democracies of the West, had seized on the concept of "liberty" as the ultimate good, and were slowly degrading it into the undisciplined, hedonistic license we see around us today.

That was the state of affairs in 1953 when a young professor at Michigan State University published "The Conservative Mind." Russell Kirk was only 34, but in this enormously influential book he almost single-handedly rooted American conservatism in the rich loam of the ancient Judaeo-Christian tradition, and thereby gave it the philosophical heft of a world-view. He also gave it its name: Not even Bill Buckley, defending many of the same principles two years earlier in "God and Man at Yale," had called the amalgam "conservatism."

It would take years before Kirk, Buckley and scores of other writers could anneal the various components of American conservatism into the fighting faith it eventually became, and even longer before their new alloy could be hammered into a political weapon capable of dominating American politics. But Kirk never wavered. Year after year the books rolled from his pen: "A Program for Conservatives," "Academic Freedom," "Roots of American Order" and dozens more. He lived to see himself honored as one of the earliest and greatest prophets of the conservative dispensation.

By coincidence, the April issue of the American Historical Review carries a perceptive and important article by Professor Alan Brinkley of Columbia University entitled "The Problem of American Conservatism." The "problem," according to Professor Brinkley (who carefully disavows "any personal engagement with or sympathy for conservative politics"), is "finding a suitable place for the Right -- for its intellectual traditions and its social and political movements -- within our historiographical concerns."

But mankind needs more than a strategy, however grand; it needs a purpose.

MARTIN SCHRAM

Gender wars descend into absurd

Slowly, and clearly reluctantly, the distinguished former jurist and the ever-courteous network anchorman venture into the uncharted, surely fetid, waters that are becoming the new mainstream of media and politics.

Former federal judge Robert Bork, a legal scholar of eminence and onetime Supreme Court nominee, begins by making a cautious observation on CBS News' "Face the Nation." He says the sordid sexual harassment charge filed by ex-Arkansas state employee Paula Corbin Jones against President Clinton bears some resemblance to the case celeb involving rock star Michael Jackson -- "because she alleges physical identification."

Anchor/moderator Bob Schieffer follows up: "We know what happened in the Michael Jackson lawsuit. (The court ordered photographs of the rock star's genitals after a young complainant described Jackson's unusual anatomical characteristics.) Are we going to have the same situation here, where some judge is going to order the president to be photographed?"

Bork: "It could well happen. Because that's part of her proof -- that she knows something that nobody else knows, because she saw him in the condition the public hasn't seen him in."

Time out! We are talking in all sobriety and seriousness now -- on network television, news pages, and even columns of high punditry -- about whether a court of law is going to photograph and examine the genitalia of a president of the United States.

We are doing this because Ms. Jones has filed a federal civil suit filled with allegations of lurid details of sexual harassment that she says happened three years ago -- details forcefully denied by Clinton's attorney, Robert Bennett, who says she seeks fame and fortune, and has been steered by Clinton's political opponents. She says that she and the then-governor made eye contact at an event at a Little Rock hotel and an Arkansas trooper then escorted her to Clinton's room, where she alleges Clinton made a pass and dropped his pants, exposed himself and requested oral favors. She says she refused and left.

The popular wisdom both inside and outside Washington's beltway is to sagely observe that the truth will now be determined through the proper forum of the American judicial system. But of course, that's not really right. Even if the case does go to trial, and even if a court does go to the wrongheaded extreme of ordering such photographic evidence, and even if it depicts what Jones describes -- that still may not prove the most lurid details are true. Conservative activists who have gleefully championed Jones' cause (led by Clinton's longtime Arkansas political enemy, Cliff Jackson) could have obtained physical descriptions of the Clinton anatomy from any of the women with whom Clinton may have had a mutually consenting sexual encounter. They could have then passed the info to Jones, who could then be providing descriptive accounts, whether she'd seen anything or not.

Think of it: In order for Paula Jones' allegation to be true in all aspects, we must believe not just the worst about Clinton -- that he would behave so crudely as to expose himself to a woman he'd just met -- but we must believe some rather bizarre conduct by Jones herself.

If her allegation is entirely true, we must believe that she was highly shocked and offended when, as she alleges, Clinton exposed himself -- yet she did not avert her eyes in disgust but instead gave the governor's anatomy the kind of close scrutiny necessary to three years later provide a court with a listing of distinguishing characteristics. And that is hard to believe.

So too, it is hard to believe that we have evolved into a nation that may require presidential porn as a burden of proof. Indeed, that point did not escape our Sunday morning video-analysts. "Where are we here?" said CBS' Schieffer, clearly dismayed that such topics must now be part of our consideration.

"We're at the end of Western civilization," replied Judge Bork, with characteristic understatement. "That's where we are."

Time out! We are talking in all sobriety and seriousness now.

JOSEPH SPEAR

Mr. Stupid comes back for more

If you keep up with the news, you have heard by now that the Comeback Kid is on a roll.

No, not the Man from Hope. I refer to that other boomer, the Harebrain from Huntington, J. Danforth Quayle.

You're right. I am not being fair and I should restate that. I refer to that humble offspring of the heartland, a peach of a guy whose only major flaw was to be offered up to the American people before he was completely ripe. Mr. Dan Quayle.

He has published a new book, "Standing Firm," which he apparently hopes will serve as the launchpad for a rocket trip to the White House. The "memoir" has been excerpted in Newsweek. He has been on the big talk shows. He is now on a 36-city tour.

I believe in redemption and therefore am fully supportive of Dan's effort to demonstrate there is much more to his persona than we've been told about until now. There are a few things you should bear in mind, however, as you watch him bounce back.

He was raised in a newspapering family and should have a pretty good idea how the business operates. But he keeps making the same mistakes over and over. It's enough to make a person think the man is a slow learner.

When he attacked the unmarried, flititious Murphy Brown for having a child, the papers were filled with "screaming Murphy headlines." When he misspelled "potato," it was "the perfect gaffe from four years of the press's patrolling for them." When stories about his book emphasized critical things he said about fellow Republicans, the media unfairly focused on these rather than on the complimentary things he had to say.

One more time, Dan: News is defined as that which is important, unusual, different. Your alms are news; your sweet nothings are not. And those quote marks ("") that reporters put around certain sentences? They indicate that someone else said something and they are merely reporting it. They didn't mock Murphy; you did. They didn't misspell potato; you did.

"Standing Firm" does little to restore confidence in Dan Quayle's competence. It is a lightweight book, and lightweight books are usually written by lightweight authors. Quayle wrote it himself -- they are all "my words," he proudly proclaimed on the David Brinkley show -- so draw your own conclusion.

Quayle clearly wants us to think he is a person of gravitas, and his efforts to convince us of this are sometimes ludicrous. "The ground war was now scheduled for Saturday, and I spent the day as calmly as I could, finishing Robert Hellbroner's classic book, 'The Worldly Philosophers,' about the great economists from Adam Smith to John Maynard Keynes."

Quayle says his book is the "personal political story of how I weathered unprecedented abuse and succeeded." His wife Marilyn echoes his sentiments. The way Dan has been portrayed is "painful," she told a Washington Post reporter, then added: "The Washington Post is genetically incapable of being fair to us."

I've said this before: There is a foolproof way to relieve the pain and that is not to run. Stick to golf and memoirs and fundraising speeches and few will care. Nobody gives a hoot about the gaffes of a retired politician living in Indiana, but everyone wants to know every minor detail about the foibles of someone who lays claim to the presidency.

I refer to that other boomer, the Harebrain from Huntington, J. Danforth Quayle.

U.S., Japan reopening trade talks; deficit figures awaited

By MARTIN CRUICKSHANK
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — Top negotiators from the United States and Japan are seeking to end three months of stalemate over a contentious trade dispute that has soured relations between the two countries.

The battle between the world's two largest economies has rattled financial markets and sent the dollar skidding earlier this month to a near-record low against the Japanese yen.

Because of the unease in financial markets, the U.S. side has toned down its hard-line rhetoric. But the administration insists it has not retreated from its goal of achieving numerical benchmarks for measuring progress in opening Japan's markets in such areas as autos and insurance.

The U.S. aim in prying open Japan's markets is to restrain America's trade deficit, which has been widening dramatically.

The government was releasing the March trade report today and many analysts were forecasting it would show a sizable deficit of $8.5 billion as American exports continued to be battered by weak economies overseas.

Meanwhile, U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor and a Japanese delegation led by Deputy Foreign Minister Sadayuki Hayashi were to open talks today aimed at restarting the framework negotiations that broke off in acrimony on Feb. 11.

U.S. officials said they were cautiously optimistic about a possible breakthrough in the talks. The talks have been initiated by new Prime Minister Tadamitsu Hata.

"I'm sure we will get past this period of non-negotiations and at some point will soon get on to restarting these talks." Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman said Wednesday in an interview on CNBC.

A senior U.S. trade official said there had been a narrowing of differences in preliminary discussions although he said Americans had no idea what new offers Japanese negotiators were bringing with them.

"It is clear there has been movement, how much movement remains the question," said the official, who briefed reporters Wednesday on the grounds that his name not be used.

President Clinton and then-Japanese Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa negotiated the framework accord in Tokyo last July with a deadline of February for reaching market-opening agreements in four areas — autos and auto parts, medical equipment, telecommunications equipment and insurance.

However, Clinton and Miyazawa's successor as prime minister, Morihiro Hosokawa, failed at a Feb. 11 summit to bridge sharp differences over a U.S. demand that the Japanese establish numerical benchmarks for measuring progress in each of the four areas.

The Japanese have repeatedly labeled such targets managed trade while the United States has insisted the targets are necessary to ensure the Japanese live up to their commitments.

The senior official briefing reporters said the United States was not backing away from its insistence that market-opening agreements be reached, but he suggested the timing could be flexible. He said the initial agreements might well come in areas other than the four originally scheduled to be resolved in February. Some of those, particularly autos and auto parts, have proven to be particularly contentious.

Laura Tyson, the president's chief economic adviser, was quoted as saying it might be time to ease pressure on Japan to reach numerical targets in certain key industries in light of the pressures facing Hata's minority government.

The matter was brought before the Lake Mary Planning and Zoning Board in April. P&Z recommended denial of the request by a unanimous vote. They said there was no evidence of a hardship to grant the variance of the distance between the two establishments.

According to City Planner Matt West however, the shopping center owners claim that over $100,000 in damages would be suffered if the matter could not be resolved.

To date, West said, he has received no evidence or documentation of such expenditures and losses that would be incurred by the shopping center owners. He commented that he was under the impression that the owners of Gator's made the capital investments and not the shopping center.

West points out the application for the variance submitted to the commission is not from the owners of Gator's.

The matter is scheduled for consideration during tonight's meeting of the Lake Mary City Commission, beginning at 7 p.m., in the commission chambers of City Hall, 100 N. Country Club Road.

meet with kids in a positive way. In a non-threatening environment, if you will."

In the after school programs, volunteer officers have open gyms and play basketball, do some tutoring and computer instruction, Harriett said. Indian Trails also has a PAL wrestling program.

"It is a way of channeling this energy in a positive, healthy way," Harriett said. "And beyond that the informal relationships that are established between law enforcement and these young people is invaluable. It's just a social experience. A bond develops between the law enforcement officer and these kids, who may otherwise be involved in some kind of criminal or mischievous activity. And so once they feel this welcome and genuine sincerity on the part of these officers and deputies, they are encouraged to attend. It has been successful thus far."

Harriett said the program may be expanded into all the middle schools. There are about 40 individuals involved in sponsorship of the PAL program, including deputies, officers and private citizens. The Orlando Magic basketball team is a major supporter of the PAL program. Generally, the after school programs run from 3 to 6 p.m. but the length of time is not as important as what takes place.

"The hours or how long we are there are not as important as what we do with the time when we are there," Harriett added. "To make it truly a quality experience. There is a genuine display of concern and affection for these kids and they sense the heart of the volunteers who are working."

Willie Holt, coordinator of middle schools for the Seminole County school board, said policies will be formulated after the written documentation is received and school officials determine what is required under the law.

Florida was the focus of worldwide attention following 10 fatal juvenile attacks on foreign visitors during a 13-month period.

The defendants in most of the cases were teen-agers, one as young as 13. Many had numerous prior arrests.

In the most recent attack,

Gary Colley of Great Britain was killed during a botched robbery at an Interstate 10 rest stop near Tallahassee last September.

The laws provide for tougher sanctions on repeat offenders, allow more kids to be tried as adults and provide money for more boot camps and other correctional facilities.

It also has crime-prevention measures such as an after-school program that targets middle school youngsters in danger of delinquency.

The law lets prosecutors transfer teen-agers who have turned 14 into adult court. That transfer power used to be limited to 16- and 17-year-olds, although a grand jury could move younger teens into the adult system.

Juveniles, regardless of age, will be treated as adults if their rap sheets include three felonies and three stays in detention centers.

"We are going to have safe streets, safe homes, safe schools, credibility in our criminal justice system and programs for at-risk kids to keep them from going into the system," Chiles said.

ment of Transportation and the additional expense of boring tunnels under Flea World entrance roads, said Hardee.

Hardee said county development officials were agreeable to providing sewer to the site last year. The society asked county commissioners to waive sewer connection fees in June, but was rejected.

In December, Hardee said he learned for the first time the site was located wholly within the city's service area. In a Dec. 22 staff report, county reviewers wrote a city waiver was needed for the county to provide service to the site.

But City Manager Bill Simmons said that permission can't be granted.

"We have bond covenants," says Simmons. "We were willing to bypass certain steps, but this we couldn't do. We came up on this in the 11th hour."

Simmons said he accepted the county's construction approvals, even though the construction will take place within the city. But the city's finance commitments prevent it from providing only water or sewer. Hugh Sipes, county utility manager, said the county can't split service either. "That's the latest position," he said.

Sipes said the county has tried to be accommodating to the society, but must defer to the city because of agreements granting the city service rights to the area.

screened public pavilion to be added to the present shoreline at the extreme northern end of Palmetto Avenue. Others depicted a traffic circle at the intersection of Palmetto and Seminole Boulevard, with small shops circling the area to the north.

"The one thing which drew one of the strongest consensus votes from the committee members," Strickler said, "was that Fort Mellon Park remain a greenspace, and not be commercialized."

Strickler said he personally brought the item up for a consensus to avoid any wasted work on changing the park in future designs. "It's one thing to have high density housing in a downtown area," Strickler said, "but unless you leave open adequate green space, it's like living in a closet, so we can't allow that to happen."

"The committee is really pleased with what the students and Prof. Prugh have come up with so far," he said. "The next step will be for them to take what they learned from yesterday's meeting with us, fine-tune it, make more explicit drawings, and meet with us again on June 1st."

The meeting yesterday afternoon lasted approximately two hours with most of the time taken up by the drawing presentations. At the June meeting Strickler said plans are to schedule the entire meeting time for plan discussions.

Average Americans: Slow the economy? Why?

By FARNELL KRAMER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Dan Dennehy, out walking his dog Lava Wednesday morning on a quiet Manhattan street, reflected on the prior day's increase in interest rates — and couldn't make heads or tails of it.

The Federal Reserve had kicked up two key interest rates, reasoning that the move would slow the economy and keep inflation in check.

Slow the economy? For Dennehy, a 47-year-old unemployed building services worker, the thing couldn't get much slower.

"I just finished my unemployment, I never collected in my life. I went through my one year with it. Trying to get back into my job isn't easy because they're trying to cut down staffs."

"That's just my job. Other jobs are the same thing. How can they say the economy is growing too fast?"

Dennehy makes a good point. For average Americans, those of us tilling every week for a paycheck and looking forward to a nice dinner out every once in a while, the Fed's argument that the economy needs to be slowed seems a little off.

After all, wasn't the recent election about getting the economy out of recession? Weren't we until recently reading almost every day about large-scale corporate job cuts? Aren't those reductions still going on?

(Computer maker Digital Equipment Corp. announced just two weeks ago it may cut another 20,000 jobs within the next two years.)

How can the Fed say the economy is growing too fast?

"This is a Wall Street-Washington melodrama, and Main Street is still focusing on more basic issues," said Stephen S. Roach, co-director of global economics at the investment firm Morgan Stanley & Co.

The issues, of course, are jobs and whether a recovery — the same recovery the Fed worries is moving too fast — is even under way.

The problem with the Fed's move is perspective. The interest rate increase Tuesday, the biggest in more than five years, followed three other increases, on Feb. 4, March 22 and April 18. All were designed to head off the inflation that normally comes with an accelerating economy.

Of course there's been little inflation, and the economy isn't boiling. But the Fed apparently believes it might.

The central bank, led by Chairman Alan Greenspan, is stepping in ahead of time — some would say way ahead of time. In the past, it waited until trouble hit before it slammed on the brakes.

"They almost always acted too late — and so they want to do things differently this time," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist at the banking company Norwest Corp.

"I think that's laudable and commendable. But at the same time it creates another risk: What if you're wrong in terms of inflation?"

What, indeed? Then auto loans, home mortgages and credit card rates go higher, making life in general more difficult, and the economy slows to a crawl.

So who says the Fed is right?

Following the central bank's move Tuesday, the Dow Jones average of 30 big-name stocks jumped almost 50 points. The price of the key 30-year Treasury bond surged, sending its yield, a barometer of inflation, down to its lowest level in three weeks.

Did the financial markets approve of the Fed's move, or were they just happy the Fed was through messing around for a while? *

"To me, it's becoming mind-boggling," said Dennehy, as Lava waited patiently at the end of his leash.

Dennehy's not the only one who's a little perplexed.

Odds of being audited by IRS are shrinking

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A taxpayer's odds of getting audited by the Internal Revenue Service are shrinking even as the total of uncollected taxes continues to swell, a congressional report says.

Between 1981 and 1992, the chances of getting audited fell from one in 56 to one in 110 for individuals and from one in 20 to one in 33 for corporations, the General Accounting Office said.

Even those numbers may be misleadingly optimistic, the watchdog agency said, because "IRS classifies certain taxpayer contacts as audits when in fact taxpayers' books and records were not examined."

Over the same 1981 to 1992 period, the annual estimate of uncollected taxes mushroomed 67 percent. It went from $76 billion to $127 billion — an amount that could have sharply reduced the record $290 billion deficit in 1992.

The gap represented 18 percent of what taxpayers owed the government, IRS Commissioner Margaret Milner Richardson, who has been in the job a year, has vowed to reduce that to 10 percent by 2000.

But Rep. John W. Oliver, D-Mass., who ordered the GAO report for the House Appropriations subcommittee that has jurisdiction over the IRS, said the service's current initiatives probably won't enable it to accomplish its ambitious goals. A special $405 million appropriation for improved enforcement requested by Richardson for 1995 is just a start, he said.

"Voluntary compliance is not improving. It more likely is getting poorer," Oliver said. "A very substantial number of people are either paying no taxes or substantially less than they owe because ... compliance and review have become very lax. That's extremely unfair for the vast majority of Americans."

IRS spokesman Frank Keith said the compliance rate should start improving noticeably within several years as the IRS brings more modern computer equipment on line and completes research that should better identify taxpayers who are most likely to pay less than they owe.

But the GAO noted that Congress has been funding stepped-up enforcement efforts since the late 1980s, with little result.

"Enforcement staffing has been declining since ... 1988 and is about what it was in ... 1987. Because of overall budget shortfalls, IRS has reallocated funds from compliance initiatives to nonenforcement efforts, such as returns processing," the GAO said.

The compliance and enforcement staff declined from 57,470 in 1988 to 51,305 in 1992.

As the IRS modernizes processing of returns, it plans to retrain its staff for compliance work. But the GAO said the IRS doesn't yet know how many displaced staff members can be retrained.

Gene-engineered tomato headed for store shelves

By JOHN HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

DAVIS, Calif. — Coming soon to a store near you: a $20 million tomato that will stay fresher longer than Mother Nature ever intended.

"Calgene Inc., a biotechnology company, got the go-ahead Wednesday from the Food and Drug Administration to sell a genetically altered tomato that looks like the garden variety but is meant to last up to 10 days longer."

"People love them. It's what they want," Roger Salquist, chief executive of Calgene.

It's the first time the FDA has approved a whole food produced by biotechnology. In 1990, it approved chymosin, a milk-clotting agent used in making cheese.

The FDA said that the new tomato, dubbed Flavr-Savr by Calgene, is "as safe as tomatoes bred by conventional means."

Calgene said the tomato — eight years and $20 million in the making — will be offered at prices that are competitive with those for regular tomatoes, and should be in grocery stores in the West within two weeks and reach the East Coast in the fall.

Each fruit will bear a sticker saying "MacGregor's Tomatoes grown from Flavr-Savr seeds," and brochures will tell about the development process.

The tomato's genetic changes enable the grower to let it stay on the vine longer, "get redder and more flavorful and still have time to ship it long distance," said Laura Tarantino, an FDA scientist.

Normally, tomatoes are picked while still green and allowed to ripen on their way to the supermarket.

"It's a good-tasting tomato," Calgene spokesman Jeff Bergau said. "Folks are not happy with the quality and taste of tomatoes currently available. We are offering tomatoes that taste the way tomatoes should."

Some people, however, aren't so sure Flavr-Savr is such a good idea. A group called the Pure Food Coalition said it would boycott Flavr-Savr.

Most of the dissatisfaction is not with the new tomato; in fact, Calgene was praised for voluntarily requesting the FDA to study it and promising to label it as genetically altered.

The Union of Concerned Scientists said the FDA's action mistakenly gives the public the impression that the government is overseeing the safety of all genetically altered food.

"It sends a wrong message to approve any product on an ad hoc basis before there is a policy for safety assessment and labeling of all genetically engineered food," said Jane Risler, a UCS plant pathologist.

The FDA said it had not found it necessary to require special labeling for Flavr-Savr "since it maintains the essential characteristics of traditionally developed tomatoes."

Nationally ranked again Greyhounds No. 2 in Umbro girls' soccer poll

By TONY DeBORMIER
 Herald Sports Editor

LONGWOOD — They did it again. Three months after they won the Class 5A girls' soccer state championship, the Lyman Greyhounds were honored with a No. 2 ranking in the Umbro Girls' High School Soccer Poll, conducted by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America.

Carondelet High School (23-0-1) of Concord, Ga., is ranked No. 1 in the first winter/spring season poll. Another poll will be released in June.

This is the fourth consecutive year that the Greyhounds (25-1) have been in the Umbro rankings. Two years ago, when the Greyhounds went 29-0, Lyman was ranked No. 1 in the nation. Last year, the Greyhounds were in the top 20.

"When you get into a ranking like that, without a common opponent, it's impossible to tell who is the best team," said Lyman coach Gary Barnett. "As far as we're concerned, it's nice to be No. 2. Two years ago, we were ranked No. 1. And we've been in the top 20 every year for the last four years.

"To win a state championship is a great achievement. To be recognized nationally four years in a row, you have to be blessed with good athletes and great support from the school and the community as well."

Lyman is the only school from Florida to make the poll and only one of six schools from the southeast to be ranked. Two schools from Virginia, two from Georgia, and one from North Carolina are in the top 20 or in the "receiving votes" category.

The Greyhounds' 25 wins is the highest total in the ranking. They are the only team in the top six with a loss (which came at Orange Park early in the season, when Lyman was without the services of Danielle Garrett and Danya Harris) and just one of three schools in the top 12 with a loss.

"For us to be ranked No. 2 in the nation even though we had a loss shows they take into account the strength of schedule," Barnett said. "They (the NSCAA) recognize just how strong the competition is in this state.

"As far as this area is concerned, that's a compliment to the rest of the teams. Otherwise, you wouldn't rank a team with a loss No. 2 in the nation."

Middle school meet returns at Lake Mary

From Staff Reports

LAKE MARY — After a two-year hiatus, the Seminole County Middle School Track Meet will be run again this evening at Lake Mary High School's Don T. Reynolds Stadium.

The meet was hosted by Lake Mary from 1982 through 1991.

"A group of parents approached me and asked me if there was a possibility of holding the meet again," said Lake Mary girls' coach Mike Gibson. "With the help of the other high school track coaches, we're going to do just that."

One change in the meet format is that it will not be scored; team trophies will not be awarded.

Competition will consist of two field events (long jump and shot put), four running events (100-meter dash, 1,600-meter run, 200-meter dash, and 400-meter dash), and the 4 x 100-meter relay.

Students will be divided into two age groups: 11-through-13 and 14-15.

The two field events will start at 5 p.m. with the running events scheduled to start at 6 p.m. Ribbons, which were donated USA Track and Field, will go to the top three finishers in each age group of each event, boys and girls.

Anti-oxidants: Do they really work?

MEDICINE
PETER GOTT, M.D.

Anti-oxidants are becoming the "magic bullet" of the 1990s. Proponents claim that these vitamins C, E and beta-carotene can prevent cancer, retard aging, and protect against heart disease. True or false?

One of the consequences of normal human metabolism is the formation of chemicals called free radicals. These substances rapidly burn (oxidize) in the body, causing cellular damage that may lead to disease and accelerated aging.

Normally, we all have natural defense mechanisms to neutralize free radicals. Such anti-oxidant chemicals, which disarm free radicals, become less efficient as we age. In addition, the number of free radicals is increased by air pollution, cigarette smoking, excessive exposure to sunlight, radiation, stress, and exercise. Thus, as we progress through life, our free-radical defense systems may become overwhelmed; cancer, heart disease and degenerative afflictions (such as arthritis) may appear.

Beta-carotene, vitamin C and vitamin E have been found to keep free radicals in check, even in the elderly.

Beta-carotene had been reported to protect against certain cancers, until a recent study in The New England Journal of Medicine proved that it is of no benefit whatsoever against lung cancer. The vitamin is plentiful in yellow and orange vegetables and fruit: carrots, yams and cantaloupe, for example, as well as broccoli. There is no recommended dietary allowance for this compound, but the U.S. Department of Agriculture suggests a daily intake of about 6 milligrams. There are no significant risks in consuming larger quantities.

Vitamin C is also widely available in fruits and vegetables; it is vital to many of the body's metabolic processes. The RDA is 60 mg. The vitamin is stored in many tissues and has been shown to protect against certain cancers. However, daily doses that exceed 1,000 mg are associated with side effects, including diarrhea, interference with pregnancy, prevention of copper absorption from the intestine, (harmful) increase of iron absorption, kidney stones, vitamin B12 deficiency, and other complications. Therefore, most experts caution against taking more than 500-1,000 mg a day.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

The second Pepsi International Youth Bridge Festival was held in Den Bosch, Holland, last January. Pepsi covered the costs of the tournament, but the expenses for each of the 10 teams from nine countries (the Dutch supplied two teams) were paid by restaurants in Den Bosch. What a simple and clever idea.

In the main team event, the draw for the semifinals was Netherlands 1 vs. Denmark, and Italy vs. Great Britain. The Danes beat the Dutch by two points, primarily because one Dane made a weak jump overall of two hearts over one club holding 0-6-6-1 shape. A moment later he made five hearts doubled, the side six-card diamond suit being a rude shock to the defenders.

Today's deal decided the other match.

Norths opening bid isn't recommended, even in England, the land of the light opening. When West doubled six hearts, South looked for a safe haven from the storm.

Now West had to lead. Nothing was inviting, with South clearly prepared for a spade. Eventually West selected the diamond four. To East this looked like low from an honor, so he put up his king! South, Jason Hackett, gratefully won with the ace and played on clubs, conceding a trick to West. The diamond nine was the lifeline to the dummy, and declarer claimed 12 tricks: one spade, one heart, five diamonds and five clubs.

As Britain moved into the final, West resolved in future not to double dead slams, and to lead partners suit.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
May 20, 1994

From time to time in the year ahead you might make major revisions in your plans. The changes you'll contemplate will be well thought out and could lead you to the success your old concepts might have denied you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Be careful today you don't do something thoughtless that could make a family member feel you're more concerned about outsiders than you are with your own kin. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences which are governing you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N. Y. 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your level of competency might be a notch or two higher than the level of co-workers today. This could create problems if they slow the production line down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

Early in the day you are likely to be quite effective and productive, but your self-discipline might diminish by the afternoon. Schedule critical tasks for the a.m.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) There should be ample material opportunities around you today, but there is also a possibility you might not fully appreciate what each one has to offer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) In your dealings with others today let your innate philosophy emerge. Sincerity wins respect from others, game playing won't. Don't pretend to be something you're not.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Be alert for an opportunity today where you could substantially profit in some manner from an arrangement another already has going. You can fit into this picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Associates who are in a position to further your ambitions might want to help you today, but don't take every promise literally. There may be certain things they can't deliver.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec.

21) There is a possibility you might not accomplish all you set out to do today owing to a lack of total resolve. Either work or play, but don't attempt both.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) One of your best assets today is your ability to win or lose with grace. Your behavior will be observed by friends who will admire what they see.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Today if you have the courage of your convictions and do that which you believe to be best, the end results should be to your satisfaction. It pays to be purposeful.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) The views and ideas of you and your mate are likely to be in harmony today, yet collectively you may produce little of value. Be sure both parties are doers rather than merely talkers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It isn't that you won't know how to make a good deal businesswise, your problem might come in not knowing what to do with it once you've got it.
