To Conquer Tibet

The military significance of the rumored invasion of the rumored invasion of the state of the rumored invasion of the state of the rumored invasion of the rumored as relatively small. Winter winds already cut sharply through the passes of the bleak mountainous border country between Tibet and China, and if any invading army should achieve spectaguing gains before the summer of 1951 it would write new military history in doing so.

Consideration of the diplomatic significance of the inways of Communism. The status of Tibet has become a subvasion announcement only adds new mystery to the strange India. The latter nation has been showing a disposition to war that in the end it may be unject of delicate diplomatic maneuvers between China and India. The latter nation has been showing a disposition to befriend Communist China. India has taken up the cause of Red Chinese representation in the United Nations, and has shown other signs of willingness to be a friend at-court > India wants the peculiar political status of Tibet to be preserved. Both China and Tibet have long been content to let the nominal sovereignty of China have little meaning; Tibet remaining for all practical purposes independent. One fruit of this situation is a profitable stream of trade for India, since markets which can use Tibet's exports are more accessible in that direction than through the western too expanses of China.

Now, while India seeks to promote a peaceful arrangement between China and Tibet, it has been said by official Communist Chinese sources that Tibet has been invaded. It would appear that the Chinese Reds again have followed bad advice. In fact, it becomes more and more clear to outsiders that the advice they are getting is intended to alienate them from all possible friends except the Russians, Canthis conclusion escape the Chinese mind?

THE NATION TODAY

By JAMES MARLOW

WASHINGTON Oct. 12 op. Do you feel that you're living in a kind of world you never knew before, a kind of unreal twilight zone between war and peace. wondering which you're heading for? I do. I guess everyone does. All we seem to know is that we must be ready for war if war is necessary, hoping that we can DECEMBRIY.

I felt the unrealiness strongly this past week I spent the week on a vacation fishing in Virginia on Chickshominy Lake, near Richmond. The black bass are big and rugged there.

This great wilderness - miles of trees standing almost hare, a kind of ghostly watery world—looks as it has looked for a thousand years, except for a new house on the shore. And it sounds that way,

Unseen, the frogs make a long pained, rough, warm bellow like cows. A deer auddenly crashes through the trees, into a creek, crashes away on the other side.
And when the silence flows back again a great bass shatters it with a leap that drops him back in a shocking splash on the surface of the lake. Heetaoi etaoi taoinn look. Only the widening circles tell where he was.

This was the natural world free of men's troubles, although t has troubles of its own; the deer is fleeing from an enemy and the savage and hungry base made that racket lunging at a minnow. Still, it gave the illusion of most, far from war or talk of breakfast I read the papers from Richmond, 25 miles away.

That jerked me back to the world I lived in. There was the news of war in Korea, and preparations for war, if the big war romes. Nevertheless, reading those Richmond papers was a good ex-perience for some one like me who works the year around in Washington, covering news in the capital.

For in Washington all our time rot in varinging an our time taken up with the government Congress, the President, the Cabinet. Army, Navy, State Department, taxes, Democrata, Republicans, international doings.

THE WORLD TODAY By DeWITT MacKENZIE AP Foreign Affairs Anslys!

Britain's Socialist Government has set Feb. 15 for taking over the country's vast steel and iron

"weeping experiment of nationalizing England. Iron and steel, coupled with the huge coal industry which al-ready has been nationalized, re-present the keystone of the Socialist program. For it is on these three industries that the country has largely depended for its modern economic strength.

Thus it would seem that when iron and steel have joined coal in nationalization, the Socialist die will be cast.

The government will have taken a step from which succes ful setreat would be extremely difficult. True, the Conservatives under leadership of former Prime Min-ister Winston Churchill pro-posed to threw out iron and ateal nationalization and revert to priare returned to power. However, the backward trail would be mighty tough.

Therefore it will be with anxiety that not only Britain but her allies will watch the devel-opment of this politico-economic experients, especially since it is being carried out in the midst of world crisis. Of course this raises the question of whether it's the business of anybody outside England.

Well, that perhaps is a delicate point. However, Britain's allies probably aren't overstepping the bounds of prepriety in taking an interest in her great experiment. It mustn't be for-getten that their fortunes are pretty well bound together in the great international defense undertaking a major part. Chur-chill has argued that steel and chill has argued that steel and iron nationalization would greatly hamper national rearmament.

A highly interesting point in connection with this nationalization scheme is that it is being carried through by a party which has a majority of only sig in the House of Commons. The Conservatives have made much of the charge that the much of the charge that the government has no right to com-mit the country to such vital na-tionalization when the public is divided about fifty-fifty politi-
