An auction will be held on Sunday; time to be announced later. Admission is free. Proceeds from food and other sales will benefit the renovation of downtown Sanford.

Students write it right

TALLAHASSEE — Statewide tests of writing ability show Florida students have a way to go, Education Commissioner Frank Brogan says.

But teaching the basics has brought steady improvement since the tests began in 1993, Brogan said Monday.

"If you can find something they're interested in it helps," said Melissa Auter, a teacher at Sealey Elementary, where pupils markedly sharpened their writing performance.

Brogan visited the school to release this year's results of the "Florida Writes!" test of fourth-, eighth- and 10th-grade students' writing.

Graded on a scale of 1 to 6 — with 6 the highest — fourth graders averaged 2.6 on the 1996 tests, up from 2.0 in 1993. Eighth graders averaged 3.5, up from 3.0 in 1993. Tenth graders averaged 3.3, up from 2.9 in 1994 when that grade was first tested.

With scores in the middle of the 1-6 range, Brogan acknowledged, "We do have a ways to go."

"You're in a good strong writing category between four and six," he said. "We'd love to see more and more of our youngsters and more and more of our schools break into the four category."

Police chief resigns

Will city search for replacement or promote?

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Sanford police Chief Ralph Russell has submitted a letter of resignation. It will become effective on January 3.

Russell had previously announced that he would leave in April of next year. He would not immediately comment on why the date has been moved ahead, but said he and his wife tentatively planned to relocate in North Carolina.

Russell joined the Sanford Police Department on Nov. 20, 1985 as a street patrolman. He will be completing his 31st year on the force this year. He was elected chief on April 28, 1993, after moving up through the ranks, serving for several years as assistant chief, then acting chief following the re-

SANFORD—Vocational education may not be a dirty word, but the term may be banned, anyway.

As public schools race to keep up with the technological advances in the business community, vocational education has been replaced by applied technology education.

Bettie Hogle, director of applied technology education for Seminole County Public Schools, told the Sanford Chamber of Commerce business community Friday, "we can no longer afford two tracks."

Voters handle charter changes at two elections

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Proposed changes to the Sanford city charter will be voted on twice rather than once. The city commission agreed to separate two items from the overall changes, and have them voted upon at different times.

City attorneys Bill Colbert and Donna McIntosh gave a presentation of the proposed charter changes during Monday afternoon's commission work session. While many of the changes involve only a fine-tuning of wording, and deletions of articles covered by the state or other jurisdictions, there were two major changes. One would move city elections from December to March, and have certain commission terms extended for several months in order to fulfill the time.

The other was the transfer of supervision of the police chief and fire chief from commission control to that of the city manager. The proposed charter change doesn't deal specifically with those two positions, rather it says the city

Munchausen mom pleads innocent

FORT LAUDERDALE — A mother accused of purposely making her daughter repeatedly sick pleaded innocent to fraud and child abuse charges, hours after her daughter had feeding tubes removed.

Authorities say Kathy Bush, of Coral Springs, suffers from Munchausen's Syndrome by proxy, a rare form of child abuse in which an adult purposely makes a child ill to get attention.

Jennifer, her 9-year-old daughter, had three feeding tubes removed from her body Monday at a Cincinnati hospital, where she was sent by a Broward County judge for evaluation.

She remains in the protective custody of the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services since her mother's arrest last month.

Mrs. Bush is facing charges of aggravated child abuse and organized fraud in connection with her daughter's medical condition.

Mrs. Bush, 38, left the courtroom without saying a word, and her lawyer, Charles Jamieson, declined to comment.

Prosecutors and social workers say Mrs. Bush duped doctors and subjected Jennifer to dozens of surgeries and some 500 hospital visits.

Martinez not to be tried again

MIAMI — After failing to make a racketeering conviction of Michael Meyer Paul Martinez stick, federal prosecutors have decided not to try him a fourth time.

Jurors found Martinez, 47, innocent of a single conspiracy charge. They deadlocked on five remaining counts. Prosecutors reviewed the matter Monday afternoon, said U.S. Attorney Randall Coffey.

"We cannot further pursue the case," he said at a news conference. "We will not retry the remaining corruption charges."

If convicted of all the charges, Martinez would have faced up to 100 years in prison.

Martinez faced three counts each of conspiracy to racketeering and racketeering, the latter consisting of extortion and bribery charges.

"Of course, we are disappointed that he wasn't cleared on the counts. But we are glad that the jury in its verdict on the one count saw justice in this case," said defense attorney Jose Quinon.

Tornado kills man

ONECHOBEE — A 79-year-old man was killed when a tornado ripped through a trailer park in this small Central Florida town, scattering debris for miles and damaging 68 trailers.

The Rev. William Dickinson was killed Sunday when he was crushed underneath several pieces of furniture. He was conscious when rescue workers arrived, but he died on the way to a hospital.

The trailer park is used mostly by winter residents and only two of the damaged trailers were occupied.

Dickinson, a retired preacher, was in his trailer watching television when the tornado picked up his home and threw it 25 feet away.

Husband charged in murders

WEST PALM BEACH — A man charged with killing his estranged spouse and 10-year-old stepson allegedly slashed their throats after getting a note from his wife asking him to leave her alone.

The 47-year-old man was charged with two counts of first-degree murder in the slaying of Cheryl Welch, 28, and young Timmy Dorcas, according to Palm Beach County Sheriff's spokesman Ron Ferrell.

Dorcas was searching for Cheryl Welch's 18-year-old daughter, Nicole Dorcas, Nicole had run away from the family's suburban West Palm Beach home last Tuesday, neighbors told investigators.

A distraught Welch telephoned his sister and told her of the slaying at his home — then told her he was about to kill himself, Ferrell said.

Timmy was found in a back bedroom with his hands and feet tied with duct tape, Ferrell said. The child's mother's body was found Sunday in a hallway.

Ferrell said the word "where" had been carved on her stomach.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

CEO of Sunglass Hut is the top paid Florida executive

ORLANDO — The head of a company that sells sunglasses made $10.8 million last year, putting him at the top of the executive earnings list of Florida-based, publicly held corporations.

Chief Executive Jack B. Chadney of Sunglass Hut International Inc. in Coral Gables was several million ahead of other big money-makers in an annual survey conducted by The Orlando Sentinel.

Vincent J. Naimoli of Harvard Industries in Tampa was second with $6.74 million.

But they trailed Michael Eisner, chairman and CEO of the Walt Disney Co., who made $14.78 million as the best-paid leader of outside companies doing business in Florida in 1988.

Second to Eisner in that category in 1988 was R. Clayton McWhorter of Columbia/HCA

Healthcare with $14.18 million.

The 12th such survey found that differences in income and financial security between corporate officers and average workers widened last year over 1984. Current leaders of Florida companies earned 8 percent more in base salary in 1988 than the previous year.

That compares with an estimated 3 percent wage increase for the state's entire work force, according to the Florida Bureau of Labor Market Information.

Employees at Disney's three Orlando-area theme parks received 3 percent raises last year. Officials for Sunglass Hut International Inc. in Coral Gables would not say whether the chain's 6,000 employees received more money in 1988.

The huge disparities between executives and average workers draw strong criticism, especially at a time when many employees are seeing net losses in their spending power because pay increases lag behind inflation.

"It's not socially acceptable when the CEOs are lavishly rewarded and when other employees are taking it on the chin," said Dave Simmons, a principal of Towers Perrin, a consultant in Atlanta.

"Boards of directors will have to be much more sensitive to what we call 'harmony' in the pay schedule of the entire organization," he said.

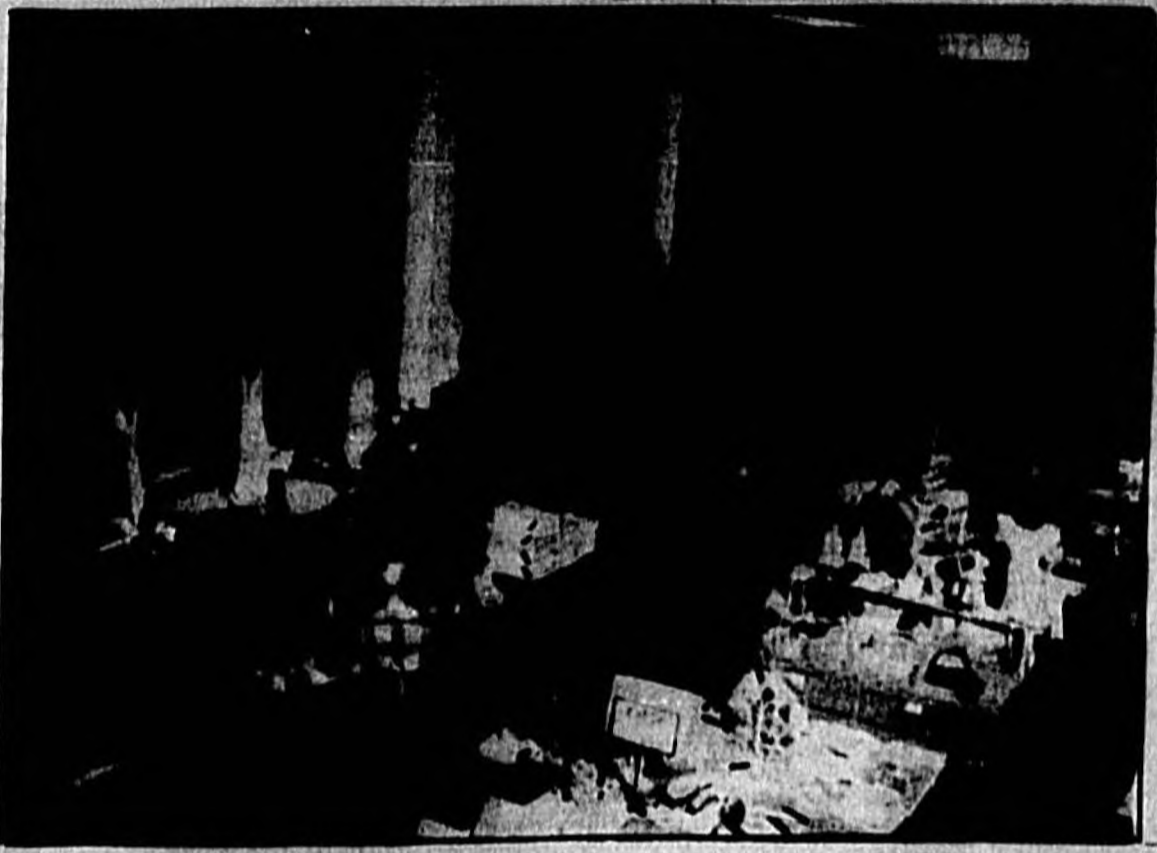

Other consultants say executive compensation is often at risk because it depends on improved sales, profit and stock prices.

"The executive's pay is leveraged based on performance. That leverage is huge," said Jane Rowwater, a principal of Hewitt Associates, another consulting firm in Atlanta.

Top selling FSU's plate proceeds raise funds

TALLAHASSEE — Most state universities devote most of their specialty license plate money to scholarships, but at Florida State — the top tag seller — the proceeds are paying for a major fund drive.

Florida State ranked first among the state's nine public universities in plate sales for 1988, collecting about $1.4 million.

But only 18 cents of every dollar Florida State raises is going directly to academic scholarships. The rest — 82 percent — will be spent on the fund raising drive.

The University of Florida, by contrast, puts 60 percent of its tag proceeds into scholarships and 40 percent into fund raising. Some tag buyers — like Carolyn Burns of Tampa, a 1989 Florida State graduate — with the 82 cents they spend annually on the school plates would go mainly for academic scholarships.

"With a school as large as Florida State I hoped they could put more into scholarships," Burns said.

And Florida State will do that in the future, said Beverly Spencer, vice president of university relations.

But the school has a $200 million fund raising campaign under way now and needs $1 million in tag money for expenses, Spencer said.

Expenses include staff travel and entertaining potential donors, she said.

Water managers want to buy farms to cut pollution

WINTER GARDEN — Regional water managers have $20 million to buy some of the farmland polluting Lake Apopka, but farm owners have united against any partial buyout.

Agricultural runoff from farms around the lake has been polluting Apopka for decades, and the state has been trying to buy up some of the pollution sources as part of a restoration program.

The Florida Legislature earlier this month approved spending the $20 million, but some farm owners around the huge Central Florida lake are reluctant to give up the fertile muckland which is a major producer of the nation's vegetables. The agricultural runoff has so polluted Apopka that it has come close to drying. High levels of phosphorus have caused thick growths of algae that turned the waters a pea green.

The 50-square-mile lake straddles Orange and Lake counties.

The St. Johns River Water Management District wants to purchase what it can for $20 million. The right tract could be used as part of a system to filter water discharged from remaining farms, water managers say.

Recorder could yield clues to plane crash

By CHRISTOPHER SULLIVAN AP National Writer

MIAMI — A police diver stumbled upon the data recorder of ValuJet Flight 590 while searching for human remains in Everglades muck, a discovery that could yield clues to the cause of the crash that killed 105 people.

"He stopped on it," Robert Francis, vice chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said Monday night, calling the find "extraordinarily fortunate."

Navy sonar failed to find either of the jet's recorders. The 30-pound data recorder, buried in the muck under a few feet of murky water, was sent to NTSB headquarters in Washington for analysis, shipped in a water-filled cooler to ensure against drying that might damage it.

The recorder was bent but in good shape, Francis said. The box on the 27-year-old plane recorded fewer details than those on newer jets. Older recorders measure only 11 functions, such as speed and altitude.

The search of the crash site resumed today. Francis said he began assembling at a stingy eight o'clock when the muck was just before dawn.

Francis said today's search would focus on finding the DC-9's other so-called black box, the cockpit voice recorder, as well as human remains and parts of the plane.

"We're optimistic that we'll be able to find the recorder. We can speculate on where we think it is," he said this morning.

Teams of divers walked side by side on Monday, searching the swamp inch by inch and accompanied by a sharpshooter on the lookout for alligators and poisonous snakes.

The searchers filled bags with body parts, including fingers, hands, feet, but nothing larger than a knee, said Metro-Dade police Cmdr. Al Harper.

"It would be traumatic for even the most seasoned homicide detective," he said.

Retired Dade County Medical Examiner Joseph Davis, who is taking part in the investigation, said some of the victims might never be identified. "I don't hold any hope we'll find any recoverable large parts of people," he said.

The divers have also been selectively collecting small pieces of the jet that could be considered "significant," Francis said, "and these may be a bundle of wiring, or a particular switch, or whatever it is."

The pieces could be "early indicators of what might have happened," he added.

Francis said the jet's engine, found Sunday, would undergo a thorough examination but that an early inspection showed no "catastrophic damage."

The Atlanta-bound jet crashed Saturday shortly after takeoff from Miami with 104 passengers and five crew members. The crew reported smoke in the cockpit and cabin before the tower lost contact. Before flying from Atlanta to Miami on its next to last flight earlier Saturday, the plane was delayed by maintenance problems, according to records reviewed by investigators. A worker had to replace circuit breakers for the plane's fuel pump twice before the plane was cleared to take off.

Francis said he couldn't "start to comment" on whether there was any link between the circuit-breaker problem and the crash.

At the crash scene, about 30 divers in rubberized suits to protect them from acid-erecting jet fuel walked through the water in shifts that lasted only

Officers cited for brave rescue

Two Sanford police officers were cited by the Sanford City Commission Monday night for heroic actions during a house fire on Oct. 25, 1985, at 201 S. Magnolia Avenue. Officers Gregory V. Baker, 30, and Wayne Bruce Smith, 34, were cited for their actions in saving the life of a 61-year-old resident of the home, who was unable to walk and escape from the flame-engulfed house.

15 to 20 minutes because of the conditions: heat in the 90s, swarms of mosquitoes and horseflies, razor-sharp sawgrass, and water 6 inches to 8 feet deep over the thick muck.

As the search dragged on, some relatives of crash victims were becoming frustrated.

"By the time they get out there, with these alligators and stuff, she'll be all ate up," said Raquel Perry, daughter-in-law of crash victim Wilhemina Perry of Miami.

The FAA said there had been reports of "chaffing found on the wire bundle" in an overhead control panel.

Daddies did it

There were many stories regarding Mother's Day in the Sanford Herald this past Sunday. They were what you would call "heart-warming," and in keeping with the tradition of this outstanding day of recognition.

On page 7-A however, was another story which we also found to be most worthy of our recognition and congratulations. We hope it wasn't overlooked. The photos with accompanying caption, were about what was called "Daddy-Do-Day" at Midway Elementary School. (Yes, Mama and teachers did the Do-Day too).

On Saturday, parents, faculty members and others gathered together to improve the school grounds. They spent most of the day weeding, mowing, trimming, planting, and cleaning up the campus area. They did an outstanding job.

Drive by the school and you will readily see the results of their efforts. They can be proud of their accomplishments.

We believe this project, people working together for the improvement of their children's school, is one of the finest examples we have seen in a long time of people helping a school, their neighbors, fellow-parents, and entire community.

Some may wonder why the parents and teachers found it necessary to work on school property which should be adequately maintained by the Seminole County School Board grounds department. There may be some reason to question why there appeared to be so many weeds around school buildings that should be properly maintained, but we will let that matter remain for the time being, in the hands of others.

On behalf of the school system, it should be said that the maintenance department does a good job at mowing and other basic outdoor work. Still, these parents and teachers wanted to do a little more, and, by George, they did it.

The focal point of this writing is to call attention to the people who participated in Daddy-Do-Day. We don't know who organized it or the names of everyone involved, but they know who they are, and have every reason to be proud of what they accomplished.

Congratulations, folks, you did an outstanding job. Now we ask, are their other parents with children in other schools who can also lend a hand and make improvements? If so, we urge them to stand up and be counted.

LETTER

Darts, laurels in Geneva

If you will allow a non-resident of your area to make a few observations, I would appreciate it.

I have visited the Sanford area for many years and in more recent years the Geneva area. Judging from the articles I have read in the Sanford Herald, you have about the same types of problems and concerns that we have in Palatka.

This brings me to the point of this letter. I would like to show a decided contrast in the commitment to caring and business ethics of two people in Geneva, Florida.

My sister, who is 66 years old, has resided on Harry Heights Road for several years. Quite some time before Christmas she had a person named Paul to give her a price on fixing plumbing in two bathrooms, the kitchen sink, paint the roof of the mobile home, and replace two doors.

And to say, she didn't get a written contract, and sadder yet, she paid the agreed-upon cost in full at the beginning. The kitchen sink has been fixed-period-that's all!

On my recent visit another businessman named Claude came on Friday, April 26. He made a list of needed materials and returned the next day. He completely finished the two bathrooms - at a very reasonable cost, I might add.

To me, that's almost unheard of - to get work done on a weekend without it costing you "an arm and a leg."

I wonder how many elderly people have had similar experiences. Our community is not immune to happenings such as this, but that doesn't make it right, regardless of the place it occurs or the excuses given.

I feel that my sister should be given an apology and a reasonable refund.

In conclusion, I would like to award "darts to Paul" and "laurels to Claude".

Teens take a new look at racism

You take your cold ball of hate, and throw that sucker...
Shape that ball into a big fat party...
Ain't no room for small, little parties
For we've only got one bus.
And the guy in the sky's got a big appetite
But he only wants one burger.
-Sucky Leo, 17

WASHINGTON - Because the poets were teens - kids, after all - I tried not to take their optimism too seriously.

Especially since what the 16 young people were being taught about was race. Especially since what they were trying to do - put themselves out of America's racial odors, apart from some measure of understanding - seemed so...
..Stupid.

So different from the cynicism we've all gotten used to.

The teenagers - four African Americans, three biracial Hispanics and eight whites - were participating in a three-day National Quarter Youth Seminar on race. Workshop leader Ernesto Mercer, a Washington, D.C. poet, had asked the high school juniors - who'd spent the past 72 hours rapping, laughing, staying up till all hours at the William Penn Guest House on Capitol Hill - to create a recipe that describes their feelings about race.

Sucky Leo, who's white, cooked up her comic burger. The poem by African American participant Travonta Reed, 17, a high school junior, asked, "Do salt and pepper make everything better?"...
Do we make up the mystery sauce, mixed together?"

Seventeen-year-old New Jersey junior Robert Conner's poem suggested a unique cure for racism: seduce prejudiced people with a plate of his Puerto Rican grandmother's rice and beans.

If their taste buds water for some more, and trust me, they will, they'll be trapped.

No one can resist my grandma's rice and beans.

Maybe I was resistant to the kids' hopefulness

We forget about the young people working hard to understand one another.

because the post-O.J. freesterm suggested that the "let's talk" approach doesn't work. Plus, we media types are more likely to notice gangbangers and skinheads - teenage fringe-dwellers whose hatreds assure us that things are as bad as we fear. We forget about the young people working hard to understand one another.

Senior organizers Shekema Bunkin and Dave Riffmann haven't forgotten. The 23-year olds are interns at the Penn House, which sponsors workshops exploring the nameless philosophy that "there can be no friendship where there is no freedom to speak freely."

Bunkin was inspired to make "understanding race" this seminar's theme on Oct. 16, when she awakened to the sight of hundreds of black men streaming past her window on their way to the Million Man March.

"The men looked so happy...standing up for what they believed in," recalled Bunkin, who's white. "I stood there, just crying. And I was inspired."

On Wednesday, so was Meredith Vaca, 17, the suburban Philadelphia junior, who's white, found her two days at the seminar "amazing." She said one workshop experiment - in which the group's white participants were briefly ostracized into a "WHITES ONLY" section - taught her how isolated minorities can feel.

Are things normal in Normal?

BOSTON - Of course not every worker at the giant Mitsubishi plant knew about the sexual harassment. For operators, 610 of the workers are robots. We may assume their innocence.

But the rest of the folks seem to have had more than an inkling of the norm in Normal, Ill. On April 9 when the EEOC hit the Mitsubishi fan with the largest sexual harassment suit in the nation, many workers defended their company by saying things like this:

"It wasn't that bad."
"They make us all look like perverts."
"Boys will be boys."

And then they told stories of their own. How bad was it? The "gross and shocking behavior," culled from EEOC reports, media interviews and a private suit by 29 women, ranged across the spectrum from infantile to abusive.

There were the pranks: plastic penises in the work buckets. There was the routine name-calling: "sluts, whores, bitches," etc. There were scrawled portraits of women's genitals with co-workers' names and numbers. There was the grabbing of breasts and butts, the analitis and threats, the air gun fired between a woman's legs.

Oh, there were also those photos from the sex party that some male employees held with paid female performers - photos passed around at work. But I'm not sure where they fit in the handy album.

As for the women workers? One who complained about being slapped on the buttocks was disciplined for her "inability to get along with co-workers." On her record it says that she forgot the principle of "wa," a Japanese term for living in harmony.

In truth there was lots of us around Mitsubishi if we translate us into Americans and call it male bonding.

The moment the EEOC case came down, management struck back. At a plant-wide meeting, general counsel Gary Shubin let it be known that the suit "affects their job security." In a "spontaneous" show of support some 2,500 of the 4,000 workers went on a company-sponsored picnic trip last week with free buses and free lunch to protest at the Chicago EEOC. The buses took attendance.

Meanwhile, back in Normal, many folks behaved just like family. Just like an abusive family, that is, when a member family blows the whistle. As reporters came to ask about a pattern of company-abetted harassment, many turned their embarrassment and anger against the harasser.

One of the women in the suit found this message of support on her locker: "Dis bitch! You'll be sorry." The part-time mayor of nearby Hennepin said, "We don't need the EEOC coming and damaging a company like this." It was as if the EEOC had put the plastic penises in the work buckets.

None of this is new. Nor is sexual harassment. But this time the hostility to the harassed wives, daughters and mothers has a distinct economic undertone.

A Normal town officer called Mitsubishi, "a good corporate citizen and an excellent employer." Why? Because the auto plant offers the classic good job at a good wage - up to $100,000 with overtime - at a time when such jobs seem irreplaceable. A time when workers are running scared.

Last year, Mitsubishi lost $308 million in the automobile business. Could it be that folks who can't manage a workplace environment can't manage an auto company? Yet they did manage to convince workers that the women were the danger to their jobs.

That's a scary suit or boycott could be fatal. As one woman said, "Where else can I earn $19 an hour?"

The implications are chilling. In an era of downsizing and economic insecurity, are we required to downsize moral expectations? Live by the lowest common denominator of labor standards? Trade off workplace safety for a high wage?

Pat Bennett, the Peoria lawyer in the private suit, says, "This is not a gender war. It's about whether workers have to endure abuse and discrimination to earn a living."

In the era, called, peace overture, the chair of the Mitsubishi corporation said from Japan, "... we have to admit that parts of the reports are true. It's a shame on us and extremely regrettable."

Regrettable indeed. While dozens, perhaps hundreds of women workers have been the subject of harassment at Mitsubishi, millions of women drivers have been the subject of Mitsubishi's sales campaign.

Now some of the women who were forced to work in a hostile environment have at last followed the advice given to the customers. They've gotten up. As it says in a Mitsubishi sales manual for the Eclipse: "Give Your Inner Child Something to Show About."

In truth there was lots of us around Mitsubishi if we translate us into Americans and call it male bonding.

She's my mom, not my baby

My mom broke her hip last week. No, at 66, she was not tottering around the house when she fell.

She's not the "slacking" Utah "hip" grand-daughter.

Over the last seven days, that statement has been met with gasps and disbelieving stares from everyone from acquaintances at church to physical therapists at the hospital.

One woman even asked me how I could let her do such a thing.

My mother is a strong, determined woman who has been ice skating twice as long as I have been alive. I didn't "let her" go skating. She went because she wanted to and because she enjoys it.

It's not like I decided that she should try out a new sport because my daughter wanted to do it. I didn't push her, on unsteady feet and wobbly ankles, onto the ice.

And, since when does my mother even ask my permission to do something anyhow?

Why do people expect that our parents become our children when they reach a certain age?

As long as people are mentally capable, why can't they be allowed to make their own choices even after they reach a certain chronological landmark?

Why do we take away their rights to make their own decisions because they are past a certain age? Why do we assume they are incapable of doing their own thing because they are of a certain age?

"What do you want your mother to drink?" a nurse asked me as my mother sat a few feet away.

My "ask her yourself" was met with a disdainful glare.

A physical therapist who knew my mother only as "the 66-year-old woman in room 64," came into the room 18 hours after the hip replacement surgery and asked, in a sing-songy voice usually reserved for babies, if my mother knew which was her "good leg."

When she answered correctly, the physical therapist was most pleased and held her hand in front of her chest.

"Now, as hard as you can, push my hand with your good leg," she said, again in that sing-songy voice.

"Are you sure?" my mother asked.

"Oh, yes dear, I just want to test your strength," she said.

My mother looked the poor girl ten feet back into a wall.

I don't think that young lady will make the mistake again of making assumptions about a person's strength based on age.

That morning, my mom took three steps with a walker. Three days past up, she took that walker several doors down the hall. Yesterday, she got up out of her chair and went down the hall, with her new friend the walker.

She should be able to get up out of bed in difficult thing when all the muscles around your hip are out and ripped and get around more or less on her own by week's end.

The new physical therapist says she'll probably be able to go on skating in about six months.

Am I going to let her? You try to stop her.

Goldsboro on the grow

Goldsboro Elementary School Principal Ron Nathan is shown, center right, with the blueprint for the renovation and expansion of existing facilities. John Lacey, Project Manager of Facilities Planning for the Seminole County School Board, explains the recommended Master Plan for the construction of buildings to make Goldsboro a first-class Seminole County Public School. New and renovated areas will include classrooms, food service, stage, multi-purpose room, music center, parking, and play areas. The renovation, says Principal Nathan, will enhance the school and the community around it. The estimated construction cost is $5,855,000, with furnishings and soft costs. Nathan says all of the new buildings will be properly sized and proportioned to provide a state-of-the-art teaching environment. The plans were prepared and presented by Richard Moss Design Associates, Inc., Altamonte Springs. Other firms contributing to the renovation and expansion project are Modern Professional Engineering (MPE); D.S. manager shall "...direct and supervise the administration of all departments, offices and agencies of the city."

Commissioner Lon Howell said he wanted the commission to maintain control of the police chief. "What if people don't want the commission to lose control over the police?" he said, "then the whole charter may be defeated because of just this one item."

Attorney McIntosh explained that the charter could be voted on in its entirety or separately.

"I want this matter by itself then," responded Howell. Commissioners Kerry Lyons and Whitley Eckstein agreed that it should be separated from the overall charter vote.

"I believe that's an insult to people's intelligence if we do this," observed Commissioner Bob Thomas. "People will know that it's in the charter and I believe we can depend on them to do what they believe is right. I'm all for leaving the charter in one piece."

Mayor Bettye Smith said she believed the city could launch into a public information drive and let everyone know what is involved in the budget changes.

City Clerk Jan Dougherty explained that anything on the ballot must be able to be answered by a yes or no vote. "We can't put the total charter and two separate parts of it as separate items," she said.

Commissioner Eckstein brought up the election change section of the proposed charter. "I believe that should be separated as well," he said. "I wouldn't feel comfortable having any term in office extended, even for a few months, to get to that new election date, without approval by the voters."

Following an extensive discussion of both matters, the commission decided on a consensus vote that the two items would be pulled from the overall charter. The matter of police and fire chief supervision and the change in election dates are to be voted on in September. (Presidential Primary election), with the results of the votes on these matters to be incorporated into the proposed charter, and the entire charter to be voted on during the December city elections.

"But if we do this," said Dougherty, "we would be required to hire our own poll workers because of some overlapping of city and county voting precincts, and some differences in polling places in September."

The commission agreed that while it would probably cost more, it would still support removing the two items for an early vote before the total charter comes onto the ballot.

ignation of Steve Harriett from that position.

The resignation was announced during Monday afternoon's Sanford city commission work session, and it launched a new conflict. Commissioner Lon Howell said the city should start a search for a replacement immediately.

City Manager Bill Simmons responded that it might not be required. "The city has a rule," he said, "that when a vacancy occurs and there is a person at the next junior level who is fully qualified, that person shall be appointed to the higher position."

"I don't like that one bit,"

Howell said. "I would prefer the wording said 'should be' rather than 'shall be.'" Simmons observed, "I can see where this rule possibly can hinder the city in hiring the best qualified people."

Next in line, and qualified to fill the present requirements for the job of chief is Deputy Chief Joe Dillard. While Dillard was on hand during the work session, no one asked him if he would be interested in accepting the position.

Following the meeting, Dillard said that he would not make any immediate comments on the situation, and would give it some serious thought before agreeing.

"During the work session, however, Howell continued to press for the city to take immediate action toward advertising for a replacement. "If there is any way we can begin advertising outside, we should start right away," he said. "I have problems with the police department, and the possibility of new outside leadership should not have to be withheld."

Howell asked if Simmons would discuss the city's rule with the city attorney and see what could be done.

Simmons acknowledged that it would cost "several thousand dollars" to become involved in a formal outside search for a chief, but said he would meet with City Attorney Bill Colbert and report back to the commission at the next work session.

asons so many older students in college today is that they might degrees for careers for which they were not well suited. For the rapidly changing workplace made their job skills outdated.

If Hogle has her way, Seminole County high school graduates will be better prepared. One of the cornerstones of the School-to-Work concept, which she promotes, is Tech Prep. Students enrolled in Tech Prep programs know upfront what they can expect in wages and have actual work-related experience in the area of their interest.

Seminole County Public Schools and Seminole Community College collaborate so that high school students can take appropriate classes preparing them for their major. Additionally, high school internships and college internships often give students a chance to earn while they learn.

The following are some of the Tech Prep courses available:

- Civil engineering
- Computer information systems analysis

- Respiratory therapy
- Legal assistant
- Architectural design
- Nursing
- Marketing management
- Telecommunications engineering
- Financial services
- Child development and education
- Environmental engineering
- Automotive service management

For more information about the Tech Prep programs, call 320-0076.

Hogle was referring to the traditional school curriculum which thought of high school students in terms of college-bound and those interested in vocational education.

According to Hogle, the business community had two major complaints about graduates joining the work force: They showed a lack of work ethic and they were so poorly prepared, they could not even complete a job application.

And, Labor Department statistics anticipate by the year 2000, 68 percent of all jobs will be for skilled labor. Only 20 percent of the jobs will be for professionals and 15 percent will be for unskilled workers.

"Reading, writing, arithmetic and relevance," Hogle said will now guide school curriculum. Seminole County's School-to-Work programs have earned national recognition, as well as state and federal funding.

In addition to $120,000 granted by the state of Florida, Seminole County was the only county in Florida to receive a federal School-to-Work grant. Tech Prep, a collaborative program of Seminole County Public Schools and Seminole Community College, is one of several programs which focus on giving students real work experience opportunities.

Monica Lukens, the Tech Prep coordinator for Siemens Stromberg-Carlson (international telecommunications company), said 13 students immediately qualified for the college internship program after completing a one-year high school internship.

"This is our third year, and yea, it went really well," Lukens said. She said the company prefers to offer college internships to the high school interns because they know what is expected of them.

Successful programs, like Tech Prep, are replacing programs which lead to nowhere, Hogle said.

Another result of the new focus is that all high school students will register for classes according to career majors. Lake Brantley and Lyman High Schools are the first to do so for fall term 1988. The other high schools will follow during the spring registration for fall 1987.

Wanda Kelly, executive director of the Sanford Chamber of Commerce, said, "Education is one of our hot spots. The School-to-Work program is an ideal program in which to get involved."

Teen neighbor's kindness saves cat's life, boy's tears

By Susan E. DUNN Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD—Superheroes really do exist. Just ask the Keatings, and they will tell you about the daring rescue of one of their family members, Snowflake.

Sandy Keating said she noticed last Thursday that Snowflake, the children's six-month-old kitten, was missing. She looked around her backyard and grew anxious when she found no sign of the kitten. After all, Rambo and Benny, a pair of 10-year-old Rottweilers, had killed the children's last cat in January.

Bruce Keating, 15, and her brother Sam, 4, were understandably upset over the death of the first cat. Sandy Keating recalled her son had cried. "That cat was my best friend."

With a sinking heart, the distraught mother walked toward the two guard dogs who were lying in the shade of a large oak tree. As she approached the dogs, looking for signs of Snowflake, she suddenly heard a plaintive meow. So did Rambo and Benny.

As the two dogs' heads shot straight up, Sandy Keating became frantic. Snowflake was stranded about 15 feet off the ground, caught between two branches of the tree. Sandy tried to rescue the cat herself, but the only ladder she could find barely reached halfway.

An urgent call went out to the Sanford Fire Department. They forwarded the call to the animal control center.

"They said, 'We don't climb trees,'" Sandy Keating said.

(Mike Salber, Sanford Fire Department, said they deal with stranded cats on an individual case basis. A representative from the Seminole County animal control department said they are not allowed to climb trees. They usually tell callers to clear dogs from the area and to place an open can of cat food at the base of tree.)

Four-year-old Sam was home sick and witnessed the entire scene. His mother's apprehension level grew. She was afraid the terrified kitten would lose its grip and plunge to a certain death below the large oak. She was afraid the dogs would kill the cat if it did survive a fall. She certainly could not hear the thought that Sam would hear his beloved Snowflake.

Sandy Keating desperately started calling all of the neighbors who might be home. She called good friend and neighbor Holly Palk and asked if her son Philip could come to the rescue.

"I was working on my truck," Philip Palk said, "when my mom said Sandy's cat needed to get out of the tree."

The Seminole High School senior took off as fast as his crutches allowed. Philip was recovering from a soccer injury.

When he arrived at the Keating residence, he could see the cat was indeed stranded and terrified. He said the cat was clinging for its life and could not be coaxed down. He set his crutches down and climbed the tree.

"When I was a kid, I was always climbing trees," he said.

As Philip reached for the kitten, she repeatedly tried to scratch him—a natural reaction of scared animals. Philip persisted in pulling Snowflake off the tree, and the two made their way down to the anxious eyes of Sandy and Sam Keating.

Sandy said she called the Herald because she wanted Philip to know how much she appreciated his coming to her rescue. She also wanted other people to know what a great person he is.

As for Snowflake, Rambo and Benny, Sandy Keating does her best to keep them separated. Although she realizes the kitten is still at risk, she says the family is attached to the dog, also.

She said her husband bought the dogs after their house was broken into about 10 years ago. Her husband is the third generation to live on the property.

As the 100-pound Rottweilers ran alongside the chain link fence, Sam said, "I like my dogs and my cat."

Rambo and Benny have killed one cat, fearing owners' fear that they might attack another.

Manatee die-off may be over

The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — A mysterious epidemic that killed 300 manatees in Florida this spring appears to have ended.

Scientists were cautiously optimistic Monday after 18 days without finding any additional cases of the now-mysterious die-off.

But U.S. Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt said Monday the deadly epidemic was a matter of national concern.

"A 10 percent die-off that is really cause for alarm," Babbitt said while touring the Florida Marine Research Institute, where scientists were testing carcasses to investigate the epidemic in Southwest Florida waterways.

"The long-term recovery of these gentle creatures is a priority for the Department," Babbitt said. "We have our best biological research scientists delving into this die-off with hopes of finding a solution to avoid it ever recurring." Extensive laboratory tests on scores of blood and tissue samples have not been able to determine a cause. Virginia Wetherell, Florida Department of Environmental secretary, said researchers are testing for a contaminant, an infectious agent, flu viruses and red tide, a toxic micro-organism that accumulates in shellfish. The manatees migrate from the Carolinas to Florida every winter and huddle in warm water when the temperature dips. In 1980, 300 manatees died, mostly from cold water stress and crashes with motorboats.

Magic can't maintain third quarter momentum; miss sweep

By Mark Krasnowsky
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA — Shaquille O'Neal looked for a bright spot in a dismal evening.

"Winning at home makes it sweeter," he said, looking ahead to Orlando's chance to wrap up the Eastern Conference semifinals against Atlanta with a victory Wednesday night.

Of course, if O'Neal could make a free throw every now and then, the series would have ended Monday night and the Magic could be resting up for the probable meeting with the Chicago Bulls in the conference finals.

Instead, Orlando faces another game with the peppy Hawks, who blew a 30-point halftime lead in Game 4, but held on to win 104-98. After losing the first three games, Atlanta managed to avoid a sweep in large part because O'Neal's old toughness — but shooting — reared up again at critical moments.

One after another, his shots clanked off the rim, most with not even a glimmer of hope of touching the bottom of the net. By the end of the night, he was 8-for-17, missing all seven in the second half when the game — and the series — was there to be won by the Magic.

"I've seen more games than I've lost at the end," said O'Neal, who had a good shot to wrap up the series but that shot "bounced" in the playoffs. "Tonight was my last. I don't think excuses for my play."

Atlanta's Steve Smith, criticized for not shooting enough in the series, seemed eager to change that perception in one night, setting a career playoff high with 38 points.

"I happened to hit a couple, so I kept shooting them and hit some more," said Smith, who was 7-of-14 from 3-point range and 12-of-31 overall. "I got more open looks."

The Hawks were brilliant in the first half, leading by as many as 28 points and maintaining a double-digit lead throughout the second quarter. Smith and Reggie Miller combined to set a series record for the first period, one after the other scoring 11 points, and the Hawks led 48-28 to set a franchise record for points in the opening quarter of a playoff game.

Atlanta extended the lead to 67-47 at halftime, but the Magic weren't dead. A 30-8 outburst in the opening 8:44 of the third quarter gave Orlando its first lead since the opening minute.

"You had to feel the game was slipping away," Smith said. "Orlando really came back, but we withstood their run and regrouped and got together to win this one. A game like this gives you a lot of confidence. We withstood their big run." The Magic led 85-83 heading to the third period, but Smith, only 1-of-9 from the field in the third quarter after scoring 38 points in the first half, returned his touch. He finished with a rebound with 3:38 remaining in the game, and he had a 15-foot jumper on the 24-second clock would down for a 103-97 lead with 40 seconds to go.

After Nick Anderson's basket closed Orlando within three, Smith found Christian Laettner open under the basket. Dennis Scott was forced to foul, and Laettner made one of two free throws with 11 seconds left to hand Orlando its first loss of the playoffs after six straight victories.

It also ruined a brilliant performance by Hecko Grant, who scored 35 points on 14-of-17 shooting and also grabbed 20 rebounds. Anderson Hardaway also scored 26, while O'Neal finished with just 19 — seven below his playoff average.

O'Neal guaranteed the Magic would knock off the Hawks with the best-of-7 series back in Orlando.

"I'll be ready to send all the crybabies home," he said, a reference to the Hawks' frequent complaints about the officiating Monday night.

"The Hawks aren't ready to concede just yet."

"You got a win, you got a lot of confidence in yourself," Shaquille said. "We lost three, but we're still here."

Worried by winning, Atlanta groaned its first four-game sweep since a 1976 divisional series loss to the Los Angeles Lakers. Led by Grant, the Magic had a 47-55 rebounding edge. Hardaway and Laettner had for some Hawks with 11 each. Atlanta hasn't sold out a game in the playoffs, and Hawks who are averaging the same amount of 18.44 was about 1.50 short of capacity.

'Mom' touches so many lives with unselfish love

By GORDON WOODMAN
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Volunteering takes all shapes and forms. Terry Walker contacted the Sanford Herald to share with the community how the volunteer efforts of her mother-in-law, Agnes Walker, have touched her life and the lives of so many others.

She wanted to express her love for all that has been shown to her through generous gifts, time, talents and assistance from "mom," as Terry calls her. She wanted to convey to Mr. Walker what her acts without pay or attention has meant for the world to numerous individuals.

"My mother-in-law helped me learn to love," she said. "She showed me love and helped me learn to love myself. She has always opened her hand, her home and cared for my children as if they were her own."

Since Terry Walker came from a home with an abusive mother of dealing with life, she was very withdrawn. She shared that "love was offered conditionally not unconditionally. But with 'mom' she loved me despite my problems and complaints."

According to Terry Walker "mom" has helped in many quiet ways with family, friends and church members at the Sanford Church of God. "She is always there for family and friends."

Although Agnes Walker has not served on numerous committees or boards she has extended her hand to needy and the unloved on more occasions than one. Terry expressed that she couldn't count the times that Agnes Walker had helped others of her humanity, emotionally, spiritually or physically.

She also mentioned that Agnes Walker has now been diagnosed with cancer. Terry said that she still helps and encourages through the pain and problems the illness has brought.

Agnes Walker and her late husband, Garfield, were married for 49 years. They had made their home in Sanford for over 40 years.

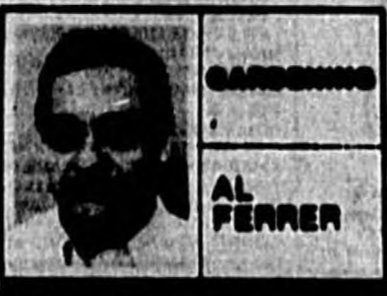

Agnes Walker has five children, Ruth, Mervin, Mary, Edith "Edie" and Roy, 10 grandchildren and four great grandchildren. According to Terry, Garfield Walker was one of the original barbers in Sanford.

Terry is devoted to Agnes and Mervin. They share five children and three grandchildren. Both families are members of the Sanford Church of God.

Walker concluded by saying, "Mom, I love her with all my heart. I think God will someday put her in my life. I pray that all the women in the world that have been hurt so a kid will find an Agnes Walker in their life. I pray that one day I can help someone the way that 'mom' has helped me and others and she still does. Thanks 'mom'."

Practice conservation in watering

The demand for water in Florida is always increasing due to steady population growth. We must learn how to make better use of the limited water resources available by practicing water conservation. Rainfall in Florida is about 53 inches of water per year, which could be considered adequate if we think that one inch of rain per week is sufficient to cover the needs of most plants. Most of the rainfall occurs during the months of June through September, with little rain occurring the rest of the year. During this period, supplemental irrigation is necessary to maintain good growth.

remain wet is also minimal. Watering during the day results in water loss due to evaporation. Watering at night increases the amount of time that the plant remains wet, creating a good environment for the development of diseases.

When to Water: Frequency of watering depends on plant species and type, type of soil and weather conditions. This makes it difficult to establish a general rule that will apply to all cases. There is only one rule that never fails, most plants will show their need of water by wilting. Some plants will not show obvious symptoms of water stress but sometimes other types of symptoms will appear such as leaf drop, browning of leaf tips or leaf margins.

How Much Water: As a general rule, plants in full sunlight will need watering every three to five days. Most Florida soils require about 3/4 inch of water per irrigation period. Irrigation of landscape plants is usually done with sprinklers, which must be calibrated to deliver the 3/4 inch of water required for most plants. A simple method used is to place containers in the Husband's true colors paint him to be a first class jerk

DEAR ABBY: I am very troubled. When I married my second husband, "Fred," he told me he was a virgin, and passed himself off as caring toward women. Then, after our marriage, he mentioned that he had to frequent strip joints. I was upset about it because I'm a feminist, and I feel that visiting strip joints is demeaning to women.

Two days before I went into labor to deliver our son, Fred told me that out of the five women he had slept with, he reached me about third. After all, I'm 10 years older than Fred, and I'll never be as physically attractive as a prostitute. Then he said that emotionally he was more attracted to his high school sweetheart.

Abby, this is my second marriage and my third child. My chances of finding romance again are getting slimmer and slimmer.

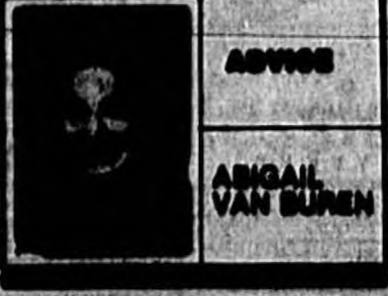

I'm not ugly, I'm tall, slender and fairly attractive. I can't understand why someone who claims to love me would tell me that I rank lower than a prostitute. I was crushed. It made me feel very unattractive.

I told Fred I'd be wanted a younger woman. I'd leave and take the baby or he could start over again. He said no, he wanted me.

I find it disgusting to live with a man who has been with a prostitute. He could have given me a disease. Am I the only woman who finds men who frequent prostitutes repulsive? I can't see myself spending the rest of my life with a man like Fred.

However, he's going to college at my insistence. He says he has changed, and he'll volunteer some time in a women's clinic center to make amends.

Abby, should I stay with Fred or write him off as a bad character?
DEBATED BY DEBBIE WALKER

ADVICE
ARIGAH VAN BUREN

DEAR DEBATED: If Fred were sincere about making amends, he would offer to join you in marriage counseling. Instead of getting himself in a position to "study" troubled and vulnerable women in crisis.

Fear that your chances of finding romance again are slim is a good reason for proceeding in an objective, rational way. If I were you, I'd write Fred off as a bad character. And since he has told you that he has slept with prostitutes, I urge you to be leery of Abby and other susceptible, vulnerable women.

DEAR ABBY: My given name is William. My friends and family rarely use my name. My husband and I have been married for 15 years. I introduced myself as William. My problem is, every time I want to call my wife, Billy, Willie or Wil.

Today I received approximately 20 business phone calls, and at least 15 people, most of whom I've never met, immediately called me Wil. I find this preposterous.

Abby, why do most people assume it is OK to address everyone named William as Bill? I notice that people named James are usually called Jim or Jimmy, and people named Robert are called Bob or Bobby.

lot people know that they should use a person's name as he or she uses it.

CALL ME WILLIAM

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago, I accepted a full-time job after working part time for 10 years and juggling all the household chores and cooking.

When I accepted full-time employment, I sat down with my husband and told him that I would be working until 8:30 p.m. every weekday, and by the time I finally got home, it would be too late to start making dinner.

My husband agreed to do the cooking every week night, and I would do the dishes. On weekends, I would cook and he would do the dishes. He also picked up with other household chores.

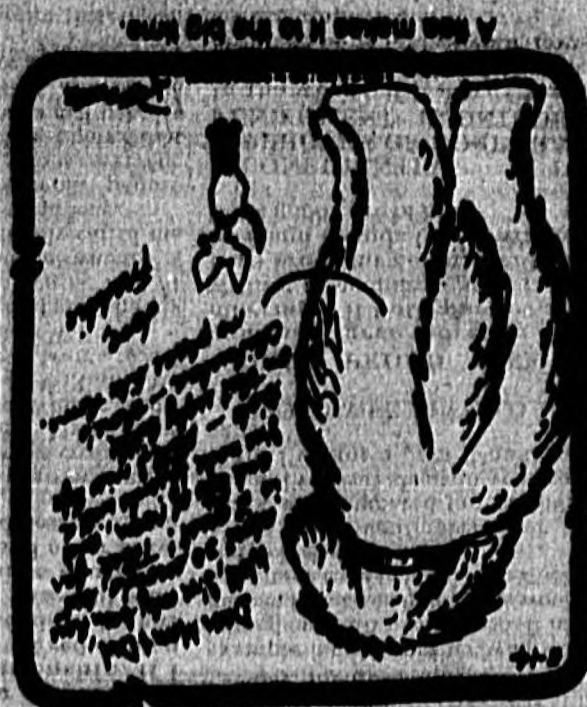

Abby, my husband could be an example for the mother who was turned out with no husband. If her husband would help her, she would have more time to cherish the "old" she has she is being.

We have been married for 18 years, and compared to most husbands I've read about in your column, I've got a gem. Don't you agree?
PROUD WIFE, BUFFALO, N.Y.

DEAR PROUD WIFE: In my column, I've been telling you that you should be a better mother. I've been telling you that you should be a better wife. I've been telling you that you should be a better person. I've been telling you that you should be a better woman. I've been telling you that you should be a better mother, a better wife, a better person, a better woman.

CONFIDENTIAL
I've been telling you that you should be a better mother, a better wife, a better person, a better woman. I've been telling you that you should be a better mother, a better wife, a better person, a better woman.

What causes bowel incontinence?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Can anything be done for bowel incontinence? I'm a 70-year-old female. A bone density test of the base of my spine was so low that my doctor could not tell if I had a fracture as the result of a fall. Could lack of bone density be responsible for the incontinence?

DEAR READER: You appear to have osteoporosis (loss of calcium from the bones), a common occurrence in post-menopausal women. This condition is not associated with bowel incontinence, an unpleasant and embarrassing condition that can be caused by nerve disorders or muscular weakness involving the anus.

I recommend that you be examined by a gastroenterologist, who should be able to identify the cause of your problem, using tests such as flexible sigmoidoscopy, and suggest treatment, such as additional fiber in your diet.

To give you more information on the two conditions discussed, I am sending you copies of my Health Reports "Osteoporosis" and "Constipation and Diarrhea." Other readers who would like copies should send $5 for each report plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 8017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10068. Be sure to mention the title(s).

DEAR DR. GOTT: What is respiratory syncytial virus all about? Is it contagious?

DEAR READER: One of the most common causes of bronchitis and pneumonia in children, the contagious respiratory syncytial virus can be serious, even fatal, in addition to youngsters, the elderly and people with chronic lung disorders are more prone to this disease, which is particularly common during autumn and winter.

In general, symptoms include fever, cough, difficulty breathing, and wheezing that may progress to severe respiratory distress.

The diagnosis is made by X-rays and special blood tests.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Why are my feet and toes cold all the time, even in the house? I find myself wearing hosiery just to keep my lower extremities warm.

DEAR READER: Without examining you, I wouldn't hazard a guess about your diagnosis. However, you seem to have a circulatory insufficiency: Not enough warm blood reaches your extremities.

Bring this to your doctor's attention. You need testing, such as special X-rays, for arterial blockage as well as blood tests for underactive thyroid and anemia, all of which are common conditions associated with cold extremities.

DEAR DR. GOTT: A friend's doctor told her never to take calcium except for one hour before or after meals.

efficiency. Therefore, calcium supplements should not be continued at the same time other medicines are taken.

However, I believe that your friend's doctor is being overly cautious in insisting that calcium be used only on an empty stomach. (Remember that several calcium-containing products, such as TUMS, will also relieve heartburn and indigestion caused by excess stomach acid when the stomach is empty.)

Nonetheless, patients (who take calcium to prevent osteoporosis and other bone disorders) should not allow the supplement with any medicine, regardless of whether the stomach is full or empty.

Another Dutch delight

By Phillip Alder

There were many interesting deals in the Cap Voisac invitational pair event held last January in the Netherlands. This one featured some imaginative bidding and defense by Michael Rosenberg and Sia Mahmood.

North's response of three no-trump showed 3-4-5-3 distribution and asked his partner to choose between three no-trump and four hearts. Looking only at the North-South hands, you would like to be in three no-trump by North as it appears to have nice guaranteed tricks. Then you notice that West has all three missing hearts and the contract suddenly stands no chance. (Fred Getson and George Mitchell from Canada were the unlucky pair to reach three no-trump by North and lose points.) Rosenberg made an imaginative double of four hearts, knowing that the trumps were breaking badly and that his honors were over cards in the dummy.

Sia found the creative lead of the spade queen (though the 10 would have made the defense easier). Declarer won with dummy's ace, drew two rounds of trumps and took three rounds of clubs, finishing successfully through East. Now came the diamond cover.

Note that if West plays low, so does the dummy and East is endangered. A spade return establishes dummy's jack, a diamond play sets up dummy's king, and a club switch concedes a ruff-and-discard. But Sia was there, flushing the diamond queen onto the table. East was off the hook, having a safe diamond exit, and declarer had to lose four tricks: two spades, one heart and one diamond.
