of standards of greatness, of capacities, of goals? So, indeed were our Founding Fathers and the commander of the Continental Army. What then, should we see in this annual observance? Today a sophisticated society veers away from any entward show of patriotic devo-tion, seeks new words or new meaning to old words when Welster's authority is disregarded. The greatures which surrounds the name of Washington is not to be found in the magnificent persents by Gilbert Stuart, nor in the stocks of the "cherry true," nor even in the monument which took 101 years to complete after it was first suggested.

Buch greatures is much more imperishable. It rests on the stornal verities: character which is Christian in nature, resolution coming from convictions found by the inner man in time-tested truths, and deeds which give outward proof of these unseen qualities.

If examples are sought to dramatize all this, one which can be visited today is Valley Forge. Here can be seen the log cabins, the imadequate materials which the hard-pressed patriots of the Revolution used to turn defeat into victory with Washington in command.
