A new mayor?

LAKE MARY — Citizens attending the beginning of the Lake Mary City Commission meeting at city hall last night, were surprised to see someone other than Lowry Rockett sitting in the mayor's chair.

Larry Dale, one of the major housing developers in Lake Mary, sat quietly in the center of the dias until the meeting began promptly at 7 p.m.

Without explanation, he banged the gavel, declared the meeting come to order, and called for a prayer and pledge of allegiance.

As Dale appeared to be starting the formal meeting, Mayor Rockett appeared and explained the reason for Dale's actions.

"Some time back," Rockett said, "we held an auction in benefit of the American Heart Association and Mr. Dale bid on a very precious privilege, that of being an honorary Mayor of Lake Mary for a day."

"He purchased the right to use the title," Rockett said, "so we allowed him the privilege of being the mayor for this brief time."

Dale then relinquished his seat back to Rockett, and the meeting continued.

GOP blasts gambling

County Republicans will oppose move to legalize gaming

By J. MARK BARFIELD
Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Fearing increases in crime and a violation of moral standards, Seminole County Republicans voted overwhelmingly last night to oppose gambling here.

Voting 48-2, members of the Seminole County Republican Executive Committee stated emphatically gambling was not an enterprise they want to see in their county. The vote came after a presentation of one executive committee member speaking for gambling and four speaking against, said Doug Elam, party chairman.

The committee will consider adopting a resolution opposing gambling next month, said Elam. If the resolution is adopted, copies will be sent to local lawmakers and their leadership in Tallahassee and state party leaders.

Ben Tucker, party political information chairman, said he brought the issue up last month because it is being discussed statewide. Tucker said many of the members oppose gambling as a moral issue: It is sinful or wrong to allow the practice in their community.

Others, said Tucker, opposed gambling from a business standpoint: although an acknowledged tax-generator, it could deter higher-paying employers from locating here.

"Initially, I had a feeling slightly

Positive Influence, a group of eighth grade rappers, is spreading the message of staying in school and staying off drugs.

"These students are very serious about getting a positive message into the community," said principal Jim Shupe. "They've written a strong rap with a positive message that other kids can understand."

Positive Influence, comprised of rappers Anita Commins, Elgin Holloway, Alicia Mason, Latrel King, Tim McCloud, Jamela Mitchell and Kim Reed, will be honored tonight at the Orlando Magic-Cleveland Cavaliers game as the top middle school rappers in Seminole County.

Lake Mary OKs homes, commercial development

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY — Commissioners Thursday night stamped some commercial and residential developments approved.

The second and final reading for the Lennar Planned Urban Development (PUD) was approved unanimously. Agreement was also reached on a portion of planned development for the Primera PUD.

During the City Manager's report, the Primera question was presented for discussion. Primera property is located at the northeast corner of the Lake Mary Blvd. and Interstate-4 intersection.

The city requires a certain percentage of open space on development areas. Primera developers had requested that the space be collective on the entire tract, rather than for an individual lot, to allow for more attractive commercial development of the area.

Following extensive discussion between Primera spokespersons, city staff members and commissioners, it was agreed that the development plans could proceed utilizing an overall open-space percentage for approximately 20 acres to be developed.

Plans and artist's renderings being considered in the Primera development were displayed. Some indicated a commercial office type

Killing Polonius was felonious

Trial finds Hamlet was a creep, not crazy

By LAURIE ASSOLO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The insanity defense worked for John Hinckley and Lorena Bobbitt, but Shakespeare's melancholy Dane, Hamlet, might be in big trouble if he went on trial today for killing poor Polonius.

Despite lawyers' vigorous arguments, a mock trial jury at the Supreme Court didn't buy the argument that the protagonist of Shakespeare's royal blood bath, the play "Hamlet," was insane when he stabbed Polonius to death.

Hamlet's famous "to be or not to be" speech was not the babble of a mentally unbalanced man, but a deep thinker's musing about the condition of humanity, prosecutors convinced a jury including Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

Thursday night's exercise was all in fun and still made a valuable point, said presiding Justice Anthony M. Kennedy. "The issue of criminal responsibility is quite manageable and doesn't have to be a circus," he said.

Nearly 400 years after Shakespeare wrote his famous tragedy, "We know Hamlet better than we know most people," Kennedy said. The Shakespeare Theatre's Lawyers Committee sponsored the event in a glided conference room in the Supreme Court building.

The insanity defense has long been a controversial one. Hinckley remains in a mental hospital for his 1981 attack on President Reagan, while Bobbitt spent just five weeks in a mental hospital after being acquitted by reason of temporary insanity for cutting off her husband's penis.

Those who failed to prove they were insane include Jack Ruby, killer of Lee Harvey Oswald, and Sirhan Sirhan, who murdered Robert F. Kennedy.

A quick synopsis of Hamlet's predicament: his father, the late king, appears as a ghost and says he was slain by Hamlet's uncle, the new king, who takes Hamlet's mother as his queen. Hamlet plans vengeance, but dithers.

Later, during a confrontation with his mother, Hamlet stabs a man behind a curtain who turns out to be the king's courtier, Polonius. Polonius' daughter Ophelia — Hamlet's love — goes mad and commits suicide.

Practically everyone is killed in the final act, but Thursday's event assumed that Hamlet was revived and placed on trial for killing Polonius.

The question: Was Hamlet mentally responsible for that act?

"There's no faking (of insanity), just a sick boy who needs help," Washington attorney Abbe Lowell argued in Hamlet's defense. The prosecution wants to "make a crime out of an illness," he said.

Hamlet showed classic symptoms of manic depression, said Harvard psychiatrist Dr. Thomas Gutthel, called as a defense witness.

A stable person wouldn't drag Polonius' body away while saying, "I'll lug the guts into the neighbor room," Gutthel asserted.

But Washington lawyer Theodore Olson insisted, "Hamlet planned and deliberated and acted with great thought and care."

Hamlet's awful treatment of his mother and Ophelia was plain old sexism, not insanity, said another Harvard psychiatrist, Dr. Alan Stone.

"Hamlet is one of the most thoughtful men who ever considered the act of murder," Stone added.

The jury of volunteers from the audience agreed — and they went further. Not only was Hamlet criminally responsible for Polonius' killing, jurors said he might also be guilty of driving Ophelia to her death.

"His insensitivity to this person that he supposedly loved was beyond justification," Ginsburg said afterward.

She said she didn't believe Hamlet suffered from a mental disorder. The play itself shows he had the mental ability to plot when and how to avenge his father's death, Ginsburg said.

A finding that Hamlet could be held criminally responsible would not necessarily end the case in real life. Given the chance, his defense lawyers said, they would argue that the killing of Polonius was justified.

But there wasn't time for that issue. For now, Kennedy told an actor portraying Hamlet, "We remind you to the pages of our literary history where you may emerge again and again to challenge us to examine ourselves."

Trip to hospital

A three car accident shortly after noon Thursday on Hwy. 17-92 just south of the Lake Mary Boulevard intersection resulted in a Casselberry woman being treated for injuries at Central Florida Regional Hospital. Cars driven by two other women, Beverly Diemer, Lake Mary and Alice Kihara, Longwood were also involved. Paramedics are shown preparing to transport Christine McNurlan to the hospital.

More women try to cut heart risks, men more successful

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

TAMPA — An intensive, 10-year campaign to get people in one city to reduce their risk of heart disease won more converts among women than men, a new study found.

But by the end, more men were sticking with the program, which recommended exercising, losing weight and quitting smoking, researchers reported Thursday.

The study demonstrates the need for more research on women and heart disease, said its author, Annlouise R. Assaf, an epidemiologist at Brown University in Providence, R.I.

"It shows that there are gender differences in risk-related behaviors," she said.

The results were among the first reports from the 10-year study of efforts to prevent heart disease in Pawtucket, R.I., a blue-collar city of 72,000, said the study's director, Dr. Richard A. Carleton, an epidemiologist at Brown.

Researchers figure heart attacks and strokes will drop by 8 percent in the city as a result of the campaign, Carleton said.

"If you could achieve the same change throughout the nation, you would reduce the incidence of heart attack and stroke by 8 percent," he said. "That's a major intervention." But some attendees at the American Heart Association's annual epidemiology meeting were unhappy to see that such a concerted effort might cut heart disease by just 8 percent.

"I think I sense some disappointment," said Becky Huff Lanckenau of the government's Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta. Lanckenau's specialty is nutrition and public health.

An estimated 1.5 million Americans will have heart attacks this year, and one-third of them will die, according to the heart association. About 500,000 Americans suffer strokes each year.

Residents of Pawtucket were exposed to more than 100 kinds of public health programs, including screening for health risks, counseling, self-help programs and contests, Assaf said.

Assaf found that 36 percent of men tried to step up their exercise, compared to 44 percent of women. Yet 67 percent of the men maintained their new exercise level compared to 61 percent of the women.

With regard to weight, 70 percent of men and 84 percent of women tried to shed pounds. The success rate for both was similar — about 71 percent for women and 70 percent for men.

Fifty percent of men tried to quit smoking, compared to 53 percent of women. Sixteen percent of men succeeded, as did 15 percent of women, Assaf said.

The data came from surveys of residents of Pawtucket and an unidentified comparison city which had no special public health campaign.

The Star shines on

The Star.
If you'd been there then, you may have clapped as the music pulsed sweet notes from wall to wall every Wednesday night.
If you'd been there then as a wide-eyed child in 1950, a delighted grin would have spread across your face. With your little hands dipping into a popcorn box, you'd watch the best cartoons on Saturday afternoons.

For years, the Star Theater on 13th Street has been a dilapidated shell of its once-great self. Built in 1922, it served as the hub of the black community in Goldsboro. First run movies were shown through the 1950s, and a children's matinee was held on Saturday. Wednesday night was reserved for live performances. The Star once rocked with the likes of B.B. 'Blues Boy' King and Ray Charles.

Turned into a community center in the '70s, it survived into the '80s before closing in flagrant disrepair.

A year ago, a group of pastors in the community established the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance of Seminole County. The alliance, under the leadership of the Rev. B.J. Player, set a goal of engaging the community in education and cultural events. Members agreed that, if they could pull off the renovation, the old Star Theatre would be the perfect site for cultural activities and workshops.

They pulled it off. Saturday the first performance in many years will feature local actors in 'On Their Way to the Slabtown District Convention.' The Star is now the home of the Sanford African-American Academy of Arts, which will give local artists a forum for expression in the performing arts.

We offer a resounding round of applause to the alliance, advisors, board of directors, and volunteer workers. They, and those who wished upon a falling Star and made the wish come true.

Let's not stop here. This infusion of culture is a boost for Sanford and should be an inspiration for more to come, such as saving the Ritz Theatre, which is in sad decline.

The renovation of the Star Theatre proves, ... anything is possible.

Help with book

Your readers may know me as an associate and co-columnist with Jack Anderson for the last 15 years.

I am asking for their assistance in the research of a major book I am currently writing on the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP). I am anxious to hear from any reader in the Sanford area with information or anecdotes about AARP. I am interested in opinions from members and non-members alike concerning AARP's influence.

Here in Washington, AARP is known as the biggest lobby in America. Their membership is larger than the Democratic and Republican parties combined. When they speak, it is assumed the 33 million voices of their members stand behind them. AARP's primary position appears to be protection and promotion of entitlement programs including Social Security and Medicare, which make up a large part of the federal budget.

This is not a survey, but an attempt to get personal opinions and anecdotes about the organization. For example, if you are a member, did you join for the discounts? What do you like most about being a member of AARP? Has AARP been active in any budget or legislative battles on your city level, or at the Florida state level? If you are a member, have they solicited your opinion on issues? Are you aware of the positions they promote in Congress? Do you support their positions?

I will greatly appreciate any insight you have to offer for inclusion in this important book. Please write to: Dale Van Atta, P.O. Box 25737, 1215 31st Street N.W., Washington D.C. 20007-8737.

Limbaugh juices up OJ's image

Draft-dodging, world-saving, Florida-orange-juice-hustling Rush Limbaugh should have accompanied me the day I walked into the Hondo Air Force base officer's mess, my one-day-old officer's bars lighting up my uniform like a neon sign.

On one of the glass counters, a long line of glasses of fresh orange juice was arrayed like soldiers standing at attention.

Not yet accustomed to the transition from uncertain navigation cadet to authoritative navigator, I stammered an inquiry about the possibilities of a second glass.

"Loo-ten-nant," drawled the Southern mess sergeant, "you can have as many glasses as you want."

Surely, I had died and gone to heaven! The war was over. America had made the world safe for democracy. I could drink as much freshly squeezed orange juice as gastronomical passion could absorb.

Within a couple of days, my morning appearance in the officer's mess elicited a jocular warning: "Here comes the loo-ten-nant. Start squeezing!"

My citric obsession has never waned. It has been cultivated and fed as lovingly as a seal nursing her pups. For 35 years of marriage, one morning routine has been as certain as the sunrise: my squeezing fresh orange juice.

Think how much happiness we could multiply around the world if somebody could invent an electric orange-juice squeezer that was portable enough to be carried in a briefcase.

Once, during a press conference breakfast with Sidney Pottier, the elegant star ordered a glass of fresh orange juice.

He rejected the contents. The waiter gently but nervously insisted that it indeed had been freshly squeezed. Several reporters concurred.

My citric obsession has never waned.

I didn't. After tasting the impostor, I explained in epistemological detail why Pottier had not been served fresh orange juice. The dignified waiter apologized, retreated and reappeared with an authentic glass of fresh orange juice.

A grateful Pottier offered me a starring role in his next movie, but alas, like the law, journalism is a jealous mistress.

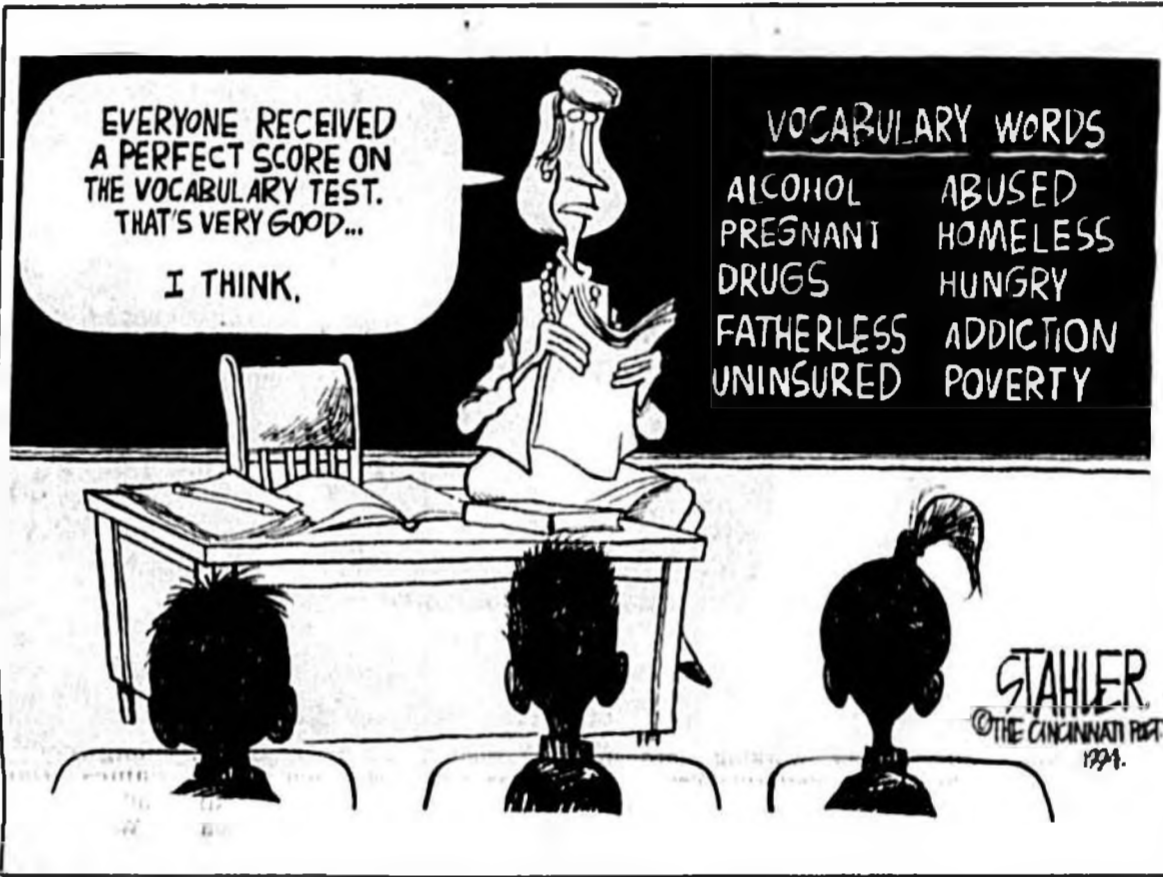

Over the years, my quest for the holy grail of quintessential orange juice has led me to its perfect progenitor: the audacious California navel.

Its marbled skin can be firmly sculpted. When peeled, it resonates with tangy particles of olfactory joy that cling to the fingers like an expensive French perfume.

But Limbaugh's Florida orange? A commonplace berry, albeit with amusing California pretensions.

Because gentle tartness eludes the Florida orange, it must contend with a surfeit of sweetness. Even more disconcerting, its tight skin resists peeling. Most important, it lacks style.

And that is why Florida orange growers need a spokesman or, in this instance, a carnival barker. What more perfect incarnation of gasconism than Rush Limbaugh.

DONNA BRITT

No time to finish anythi...

WASHINGTON — More than the dozens of "to do" lists strewn about my house, more than my occasional outbursts at my kids, more than my regular Friday-morning weariness, the look on Jo-Ann's face told me I'd slipped over the edge.

"This is so cool!" I was saying to my friend. "I've actually found a way to fold clothes while I'm exercising on the stair-stepper! Really! What you do is..."

Then I noticed, Jo-Ann's face looked just like British housekeeper Emma Thompson's did at the Moment of Truth in the movie, "The Remains of the Day." Sobbing in a heap on the floor over her unconfessed passion for butler Anthony Hopkins, Thompson glances up to realize her beloved has crept into the room and is standing over her. His eyes say, "Now I know!"

Does he snatch her into his arms? Plant hot, butler kisses on her damp face? No. What he does is blurt something like, "Excuse me, but it seems one of the maids has been remiss in her dusting."

Thompson's expression asks, "Has this person a clue how crazy he is?"

Suddenly I knew. Boasting about finding a way to stack Fruit of the Looms while staying within one's target heart zone is, well, nuts.

And I faced, yet again, one of life-in-the-'90s' nastiest realities. It has a name. At such moments I say it, over and over to myself: No time.

No time. No time. No time.

No time to think. No time to return phone calls. No time to write the briefest letter. No time, really, to savor a great meal, a thought-provoking film, the sweet curve of a child's lengthening jaw. No time to read — not in furtive, bathroom snatches, but for luxurious hours, giving oneself over to prose that has nothing to do with work, school or self-improvement. No time to finish sentences.

Sometimes, I look at all that there is to do, at all that has been left too long undone, at all that will never, never get done. I look at the fact that I will never catch up.

And it all runs together, like words on a note left out in the rain.

There are things that I am good at. Telling my kids, every day, that I love them. Making desperate, midnight changes in perfectly decent columns. Remembering who started in some execrable, 1950s B-movie whose own director has forgotten filming.

Time is not my talent. "Scheduled time expands," someone once wisely told me. "Un-scheduled time shrinks."

My time seems not to exist at all.

The proof is in the piles. They're all over my house, crunched in corners, slouched on counter tops. Piles of notes, books, scribbled phone numbers, applications, takeout menus, order forms, magazines, ancient bills, newspapers. Each item in every pile is invaluable.

The piles are so permanent, I've considered naming them. "Mami." I'd tell my son, "Please put this YMCA flier in the Tiffany pile. She hasn't been fed all day!"

Some of you are thinking therapy. Right, soon as I get a free hour.

Besides, everyone I know is like this. I once told Retha that she must have more time because she's single — she launched into a must-do list that made me wince. Jo-Ann leaves all of her family's clean socks in one massive pile in the basement. Her loving instructions to her husband and kids: "If you want matched socks, find 'em your (expletive) selves."

Listen to my mom, three months after retiring from a life of work: "I told myself that finally, I'd really clean my house. But I haven't had a minute!"

And she lives in Indiana. Clearly, America has a problem. So last week, I did what any self-respecting '90s woman does in the face of a serious challenge — ran away. Abandoned my husband, kids and pet-piles for some place restful and pretty. A place with no phones, no piles, no lists.

EPA's Browner is acting for children

WASHINGTON — Last Dec. 9 was a watershed day for Carol Browner, the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency. She spent most of it huddled with scientists, talking about parasites and tracking "parts per million." Eventually, Browner had to tell Washington, D.C. residents to boil their drinking water to avoid possible contamination from a parasite.

Taking her 6-year-old son to McDonald's after work, she saw employees there boiling the water. It reminded her of scenes she witnessed years before, a thousand miles away.

"When I went to Honduras and saw things like this, I was outraged," she said. "The drinking water infrastructure (in America) is crumbling. There is a serious problem."

Some members of the Clinton Cabinet see these issues as policy. But Browner's prism is also parental. What kind of world are we leaving for our children and how can I personally make it better? That's a tall order for a 37-year-old mother, and one of the reasons President Clinton favored EPA with a rare budget increase for next year. EPA will get an extra $500 million.

No amount of money, however, can reverse some environmental damage. Browner grew up in what was then the pristine playground of south Florida and the Everglades. "As a kid, the quality of life I had growing up there is forever gone," Browner told us. "When I look at what we're doing to our air and our water and to our kids' health, I don't think we have any choice but to change."

Change is what the Clinton/Gore team promised during the 1992 campaign. Although Vice President Al Gore is her mentor, Browner doesn't seem to be using his book, "Earth in the Balance" as a how-to manual. She doesn't talk about the spiritual underpinnings of the ecological crises or eliminating the combustion engine.

Her first year on the job is more a story of Browner in the balance — mediating between the competing claims of economics and ecology. Ridiculed by Rush Limbaugh, and jilted by some environmentalists for not doing enough, Browner's base of support is that she is a disappointment to diehards on both sides of the political spectrum.

While her base may be wobbly, her breakthroughs are real. After a 20-year wrangle, a huge public health danger was alleviated when Browner signed a rule mandating that toxic air pollution from chemical plants be cut by nearly 90 percent. It's one of the most sweeping air pollution rules in environmental protection history because it attacks the single biggest industrial source of toxic air pollution. It will slash smog-producing chemicals by 1 million tons per year.

Despite that Browner's rule would result in the equivalent of taking 38 million cars off the road — about one-fourth of all the cars in America — some environmental groups still blasted the regulation as too soft.

Since "environmental issues are local," Browner is often barraged by angry appeals from Republicans and Democrats in Congress over various EPA actions. Some Democrats have found it very offensive that she insists EPA attorneys attend these private arm-twisting sessions.

"Some of the (members) have been angry," Browner told us. "Some of them have said, 'We're Democrats, how come we just can't talk. We're all here doing the public's good.'"

Making drinking water safe again is one of the biggest issues dealing with the public good, but not the only one. For instance, 73 million people live within four miles of more than 1,250 toxic waste dumps on a federal priority list for decontamination.

It reminded her of scenes she witnessed years before, a thousand miles away.

Patriots clean up in co-ed doubles tournament

From Staff Reports

CASSELBERRY — How complete was Lake Brantley's domination of the co-ed doubles tennis tournament Thursday afternoon at Red Bug Lake Park?

Not only did the Patriots post a team score of 18 (Seminole, Cypress Creek, and Deltona shared second place with 7 points each), but the Patriots won four of the five divisions.

No other school had more than one team reach any of the five finals.

At No. 1, Lake Brantley knocked off the Seminole duo of Oscar Cannontz and Aubrey Nelson 6-2, 7-5.

The Patriots also won at No. 2 (beating University 6-6, 6-1), No. 3 (beating Cypress Creek 6-2, 6-4), and No. 5 (topping Lyman 6-3, 6-4).

Deltona rallied to win the title at No. 4, outlasting Mainland 2-6, 6-2, 7-6 (7-4) in the finals.

Completing the team standings were Lyman and Mainland (tied for fifth with 5 points each);

Evans and University (tied for seventh at 3 points); Oviedo (2); and Lake Howell (0).

Seminole's No. 1 pairing of Cannontz and Nelson scored three of the Tribe's team points, beating University 8-2 in the quarterfinals and the team from Deltona 8-4 in the semifinals before falling to the Patriots in the finals.

At No. 2, the Seminole team of David Edwards and Tiffany Soderstrom defeated Lake Howell 8-4. Matt Durham and Kelli Ballingall also contributed two team points for Seminole, beating University 8-5 in play at No. 5.

Removing any doubt

League-champ Mustangs thrash ICBA's All-Stars

From Staff Reports

OVIEDO — Just in case there was any doubt remaining as to who the best team in the Inter-County Basketball Association was, the league-champion Lakeview Middle School Mustangs removed it Thursday night.

The Mustangs, an eighth-grade boys' team from Lakeview, capped a great season by routing a group of All-Stars made up of players from the other teams in the ICBA league, 84-64, at the Oviedo High School Gymnasium Thursday night.

The victory comes on the heels of the Mustangs' 63-53 triumph over South Seminole Middle School in the ICBA title game at the Enbart Alumni Fieldhouse on the Campus of Rollins College last Saturday.

The win gives head coach Charles Steele's Mustangs a final record of 11-1.

Leading the way for the Mustangs was Elgin Holloway, whose brother Reggie was a main cog for the Seminole High School team this year, with 16 points.

Also scoring in double figures were Thomas Bowie (a nephew of Magic player Anthony Bowie) with 15 points, Terry Patrick with 13 points and Tim McCloud with 10 points.

Other scorers included Ned Raines Jr. (a nephew of Chicago White Sox star Tim Lincecum) with nine points, Rod Hudson and Chris Westhelle with six points each and Lonnie Watson, Danton Lowery and Billy Appling with four points each.

The eleventh member of the team, Tim Raines Jr., had a prior commitment and could not make the game.

Providing the offense for the ICBA All-Stars were Kevin Leslie with a game-high 22 points; Mitchell Kowika with 18 points; Basim Hussein (a member of the South Seminole squad) with eight points; Scott Broughton with six points; Vernon Scott (who played for the other Lakeview Middle School team) with four points; Ben Rodriguez with three points; and Jamon Kilgore and Lance Baz (another member of the South Seminole team) with two points each.

SCC continues 'bad habit' of coming up short

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — This is getting to be a not so good habit. The Seminole Community College Raiders played another competitive game but once again came up short, falling to the Santa Fe Community College Saints from Gainesville, 6-4, in a Mid-Florida Conference contest at Raider Field Thursday afternoon.

The Raiders took a 1-0 lead in the bottom of the second inning on singles by Sanford's Rick Eckstein and Denny Beamon and an RBI single by Larry Hardy. But the Saints came back to score three runs in the third inning, one in the fifth inning and two in the sixth inning to take a 4-1 lead.

SCC got a pair of runs back in the bottom of the sixth inning. Oviedo's Erik Jordan led off the inning with a solo home run to left field, his sixth of the season.

Eckstein then lined his fourth double of the season to center. He advanced to third on a single to center by Beamon and scored as Beamon was retired in a rundown between first and second.

The Raiders' final run came in the eighth inning on an infield single by Jordan, a stolen base and an RBI single to left by Beamon.

SCC had the tying runs on first and third in the bottom of the ninth inning, but could not get the runs home.

The win broke a conference tie between the two teams as Santa Fe is now 4-5, while the Raiders fall to 3-6. SCC also fell to 9-15 overall.

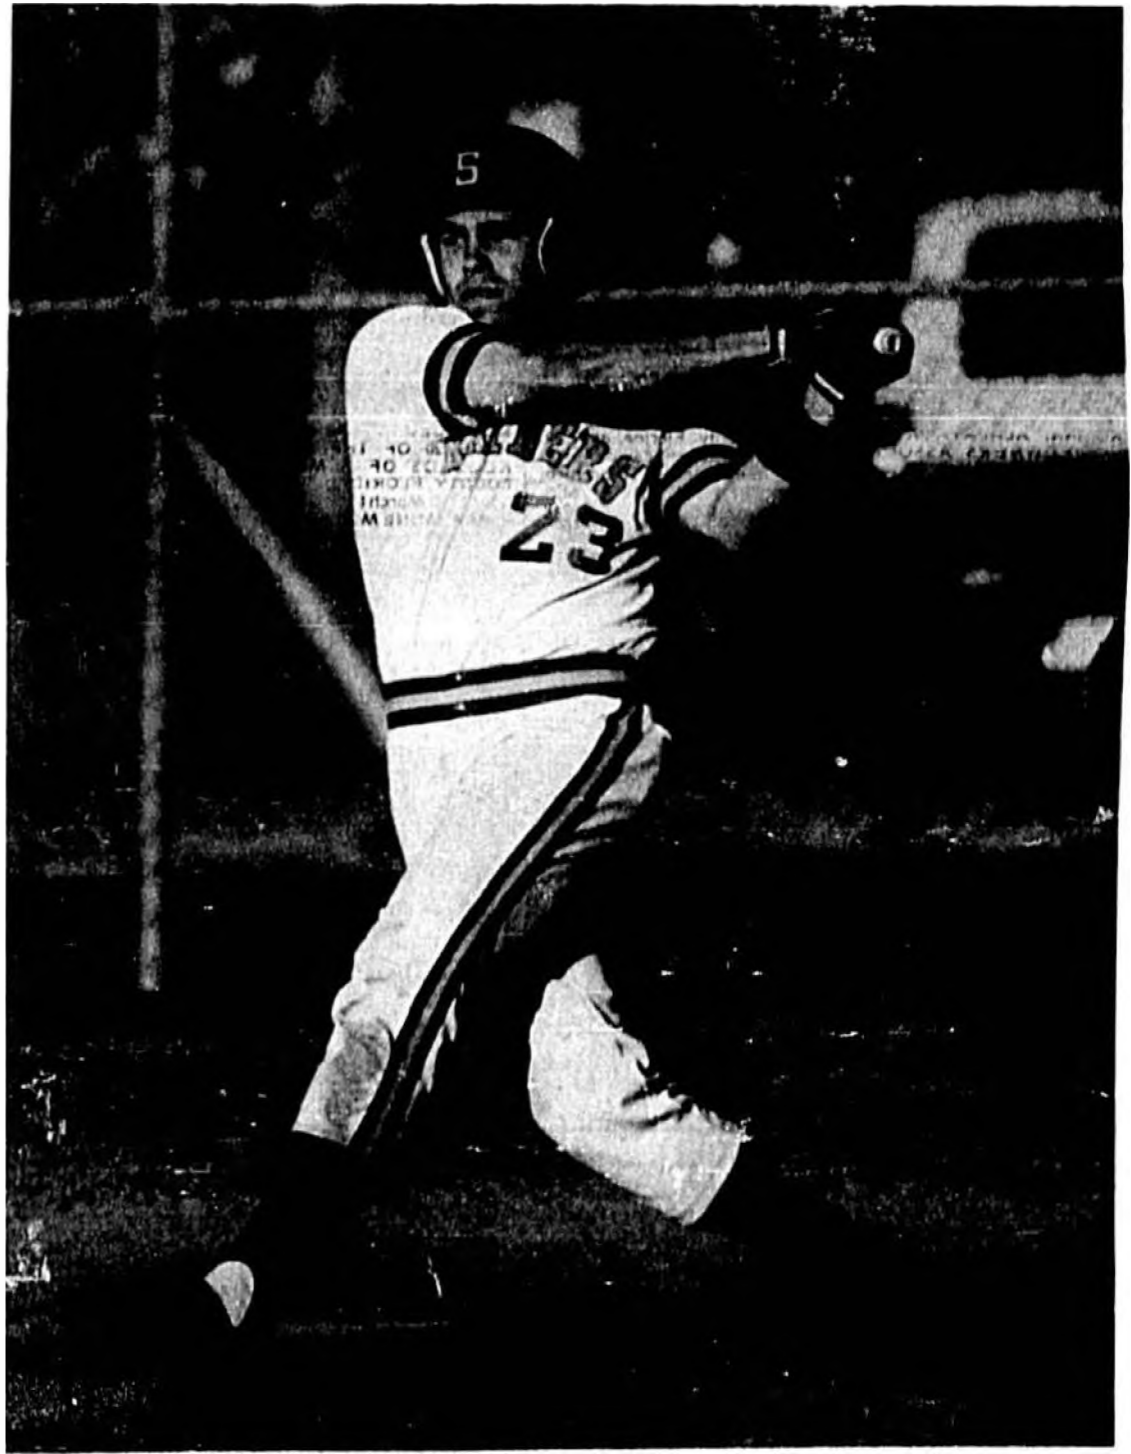

Mira paced the Saints' 11 hit attack with a three-for-four afternoon, while Harrison, Coon, Guthrie and Adkins had two hits each.

Contributing to a 10 hit Raiders offense were Beamon (four-for-four, one RBI), Jordan (three-for-five, one home run, two runs scored, one RBI), Eckstein (two-for-four, one double, two runs scored) and Hardy (one-for-three, one RBI).

Roger Edgell, a freshman from St. Augustine, suffered the loss on the mound for SCC despite allowing only three earned runs.

The Raiders will host another Mid-Florida Conference game on Saturday, as the Central Florida Community College Patriots from Ocala come calling at 2 p.m.

Secured credit cards

Anyone can qualify for a major card, but beware

Does this sound familiar? Before you jump on this band wagon, read on. Ads of this type refer to a secured credit card, which, if used, can be an effective way to build or re-establish your credit history. But beware! Some marketers of secured credit cards make deceptive advertising claims to solicit your business.

Secured credit cards require the card holder to open and maintain a savings account as security for the line of credit (unsecured credit cards do not have this requirement). "Credit repair" companies usually charge a high fee to obtain the card. In addition, various fees may be attached to the application including annual fees and higher interest rates than found with unsecured cards.

Read the ad carefully! Some ads may not indicate what type of card is being offered. Remember, 900 numbers are not toll free. Once you call and are charged for this call, you may only receive a list of banks offering secured cards or you may be directed to another 900 number at an additional charge for more information. By the way, this 900 number charge could run anywhere from $2 to $50, or more. Frequently, these ads do not mention income or age requirements.

Beware of easy credit offers and credit repair companies/clinics! Make sure the issuer reports to a credit bureau or reporting agency. If they do not, then the card will not help you build a credit history.

Things you can do:

1. If you sincerely want to rebuild your credit, you can usually obtain a secured card through your local bank without the exorbitant fee charged by "credit repair" companies. Your bank will also pay interest on your deposited money.

2. BankCard Holders of America (BHCA) provides a list of institutions offering secured credit cards: free to member, $4 for non-members. Write to BankCard Holders of America, 560 Herndon Parkway, Suite 120, Herndon, VA 22070.

Screaming not enough if kid is abducted

DEAR ABBY: Recently you published a letter saying that children should be taught not to scream indiscriminately because adults may become desensitized and pay no attention when a child is really in danger.

A caller to a local radio station had an excellent idea that takes this a step further to help prevent child abduction by strangers. He said:

"People teach their children never to go with strangers, but most children are easily overpowered by an adult who can drag them away. The abductor counts on the fact that bystanders will probably assume that a screaming child is with a parent and is merely misbehaving. (Remember that toddler who was taken from a shopping mall by two preteen boys who tortured and murdered him? Everyone assumed they were his brothers.)"

"To avoid this confusion when danger really exists, teach your child to scream loudly, 'No! You aren't my daddy (or mommy). I don't know you and I won't go with you!'"

CONCERNED BYSTANDER, MENLO PARK, CALIF.

DEAR BYSTANDER: Excellent idea, but the child should be running away from the attacker while screaming loudly that the individual is not his parent. If the child cannot escape, he should drop to the ground on his back with his head and arms away from the attacker, kicking and screaming to make it more difficult to subdue him (or her) and to attract the attention of everyone in the vicinity.

Parents, this is an important lesson to keep your child safe, and I urge you to practice this tactic with your children until they know what to do without a moment's hesitation.

DEAR ABBY: Last fall when my wife and I visited my family back East, I discovered that my widowed sister was carrying on a love affair with a married man. (I'll call him Jack.)

ADVICE

Jack claimed that his wife was an alcoholic. Well, a friend of mine is a police officer, and he told me that the police had been called to Jack's residence twice by Jack's wife, who refused to press charges. Jack claimed that in her drunken stupor, the woman had fallen and gotten herself very bruised, but it was apparent to the officer that she had been beaten.

My sister wanted me to accept Jack, but based on everything I had heard about him, I refused — and then I told her what I had heard. Now my sister refuses to speak to me.

I love my sister and was only trying to keep her from getting hurt by this no-good guy. Was I wrong to tell her what I knew to be the truth about Jack?

MEANT WELL IN WISCONSIN

DEAR MEANT WELL: You did the right thing in telling your sister, whose emotions have interfered with her judgment. If she were thinking clearly, she would run from (not to) a philandering abuser.

DEAR READERS: Your chuckle for today: A psychiatrist recommended that his patient take a vacation. Heeding his advice, she went on a trip and sent him a postcard that said: "Having a wonderful time. Wish you were here to tell me why."

March designated Violence-Free Month

DEAR READERS: March has been designated as Violence-Free Community Month in Orange, Osceola, and Seminole counties. Schools, social service agencies and law enforcement are making an even greater effort during this month to educate our young people and other citizens to the threat to our community-wide well-being that comes from violent acts and the fear of violence.

Violence touches the lives of as many as 25 percent of all American households, but of even greater concern is the fact that violence is often a "family affair," occurring between family members.

Child homicide is now among the five leading causes of death in childhood, with the majority of infant victims killed by parents, older children, or other relatives. Perpetrators of violence come from all economic, racial, ethnic and religious groups.

Adolescents, increasingly, are more often at risk both as victims and perpetrators of violence. Between 1986 and 1991, the juvenile violent crime arrest rate increased by 48 percent. During approximately the same time period, the teen violent death rate increased by 13 percent nationally. The African-American teen violent death rate increased by 78 percent.

So what are we to do about these alarming realities? We must decide as citizens and communities that we will no longer accept violence in our homes, schools, workplaces or on our streets. While anger is a normal emotion, we must not learn to express it in healthy rather than unhealthy ways.

DRUG COUNSELOR

Violence is an unhealthy way to express or respond to anger. Not accepting violence also means confronting family or community norms that condone or promote violence as glamorous. Dr. Leonard Eron from the University of Illinois, in testimony before Congress, stated, "There is no longer any doubt that heavy exposure to violence through television and other media is one of the causes of aggressive behavior, crime and violence in society." Families and schools must teach young people conflict-resolution approaches that emphasize alternatives to violence as ways of expressing anger or frustration.

Finally, all of us must adopt a zero tolerance for violence in our own homes, whether the perpetrator is a family member or masking as a television entertainer or rock star.

Let's talk about you from A to Z

By KELLEY MITCHELL
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Second Shiloh Missionary Baptist Church, 2150 S. Airport Blvd., is planning a jamtin' good time at its annual Youth "Teen Rap" Revival on Saturday, March 19.
The Rev. R. T. Davis, pastor, is concerned with the condition of teens and young adults in today's society. With the deterioration of education in morals and values, he is hoping to reach those who are in need of help and reinforce others who are struggling to survive.
"I want to supply a forum for the young people to air their concerns and frustrations and hopefully get some answers," said the Rev. Davis. "I've compiled a panel of business and community leaders to participate in the session and address the problems of these young people. Whether it be drugs, school, family or even sex, we will encourage them to share their views and feelings on the subjects.

"It's all about them, whatever they want to talk about A to Z," said Davis.
The panel will consist of Dr. Lillie Quinn, D.D.S., P.A., Sanford; Don Miller, director of Seminole area Boys & Girls Clubs; Priscilla Gill, president of the National Council of Negro Women; Mary Allen, a teacher at Midway Elementary; Marlon Cummings, administrative assistant at Seminole High School; and Damien Richardson, youth pastor at Maramatha New Life Center, Sanford.

On the lighter side, the young people will also be entertained by New Covenant Baptist Church Youth Choir and Praise Dancers; Macedonia Baptist Church Theatrical Club; Second Shiloh and Maramatha youths performing "R. U. Flesh," and an all around favorite, Christian rap groups from throughout Central Florida.
Everyone is invited to attend the Revival beginning at 1 p.m. Refreshment will be served.
For information, call the Rev. R. T. Davis at the church, 321-6766.

Drake of the Rescue Outreach Mission, above seated left, and local supporters made aleva juice available to the crowd to support the construction of the Women and Children's Center next to the mission.

'Spotty' liver needs attention

DEAR DR. GOTT: A liver scan revealed that 40 percent of my liver is spotty, yet my doctor hasn't placed me on any special medication. I take Tagamet for a stomach problem and Prilosec on occasion when it is more severe. Could this have caused the spotty liver?

DEAR READER: A "spotty" liver means that portions of the organ are not functioning normally. This could be caused by a variety of factors, including cirrhosis (liver scarring), inflammation, or areas of blockage. Tagamet and Prilosec, drugs to reduce the production of excess gastric acid in patients with peptic disease, do not ordinarily affect the liver in the way you describe.

Because a significant part of your liver is involved, I suggest that you obtain a second opinion from a gastroenterologist. After examining you, the specialist will order blood tests and other examinations to determine the cause of your liver malfunction.

Don't delay. The liver is a vital organ necessary for normal metabolism; therefore, a treatable condition should not be ignored.

DEAR DR. GOTT: For the past 16 years I've had something resembling prickly heat, only magnified. For no apparent reason and always at bedtime, I begin to scratch and claw at areas of my arms and neck to a point where I've torn the skin away. The problem will last for weeks or months and mysteriously go away for weeks or months. I've found that ice numbs the nerve endings and I can often make the ailment stop with the treatment. What's my problem?

DEAR READER: I don't know I suppose you could have developed an allergic reaction to something in or near your bed. Animal dander, dust or detergent residue (in the sheets) are common factors - but I'm puzzled why the situation comes and goes.

Rather than relying on ice, which will really only relieve your symptoms and will not get at the cause of your problem, you should see a dermatologist for diagnosis.

If, in turn, you need an allergist, the skin doctor can

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

Bill Root writes books that contain exemplary deals for the intermediate player. His "How to Play a Bridge Hand" has just been republished in paperback by Crown. It costs $12 and is available from leading bookstores or bridge mail-order houses.

Today's deal from the book is easy for you, as you are willing to do some counting at the table. Root doesn't give any bidding, and all auctions in which North-South are using the strong no-trump seem to result in a heart bid from East. So let's assume South began with a weak no-trump, showing 12-14 points.

West leads the spade four. To show his doubtless, East wins with the king and returns the queen. Now comes the heart queen. How should you, South, continue?

You have eight top tricks. As you are in clover if either minor is breaking 3-2, you should think about 4-1 splits. In clubs, you have some options. You can pick up the suit if East has a singleton honor. And you can pick up any four-card holding in the East hand. So you should start with diamonds. When East discards a heart on the second round, cash your second top heart.

What have you learned? That West began with six spades, four diamonds and at least two hearts. Therefore, he has at most one club.

Play a club to dummy's ace and lead a club toward your hand, planning to finesse the nine if East plays low. If East splits his honors, you win and return to dummy in diamonds. It was lucky that East didn't have a third spade. Did you make the most of your good luck?

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
March 19, 1994

There could be big changes in the offing for you in the year ahead. For example, before your next birthday you might be closely involved with a new set of friends.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Endings could work out the way you envision them today. If you're capable of seeing positive results, your intuition will help you do them. Give it a try. What do you have to lose? Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's important to maintain an enthusiastic, optimistic outlook today, because your mental mode will determine your physical mode of action. Positive begets positive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today if you get involved with friends in an arrangement where a specific amount of money is required from each, be sure to keep accurate records. They may be needed later.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you hope to be a leader rather than a follower today, you can not do things in half measures. Once you commit yourself to an objective, persist until it is achieved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your feelings of self-worth will be enhanced today if you say "yes" to loyal friends who request favors rather than "no." Your joy comes from helping people who have helped you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be very careful about taking it upon yourself to make changes today that affect others, as well as yourself. Don't put something into motion that could create unnecessary problems.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It could create ill-will with associates today if you take it upon yourself to champion an unpopular position. Try to understand their points of view as well.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)

Don't get rattled today if you find yourself in a development where you're a bit unsure of your ground. Your best asset today is your ability to adjust to shifting circumstances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) In your commercial dealings today try to be as frank and forthright as possible. If you play it cagey, persons with whom you're involved will follow suit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Partnership arrangements should work out satisfactorily today, provided you play the supporting role. Your chart indicates your partner might be stronger.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Today if you hope to be productive and to have something to show for your efforts, do not do things in bits and pieces. Complete each task before moving into the next slot.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Don't think of fun involvements as a frivolous waste of time today. You need some type of relaxing activity to refurbish your energies.
