Young Jim Cagney Is Star In Milane Film

Young Jim Cagney's millions of admirers will be glad to know that he has been elevated to stardom, and that he will be seen at the Milane Theater Thursday and Friday in "Taxi," a Warner Bros. and Vitaphone picture.

"Taxi" is said to be an outstanding example of the new action type picture which has supplanted the gangster-sophisticated-crime style on the screen.

To those who have followed Cagney since he flashed to screen fame in "Public Enemy," his acting in "Taxi" will be a revelation of his versatility as an actor.

Here he is a mixture of seriousness and fun, bearing out the promise of comedy quality that he gave in "The Millionaire," "Smiley Money" and "Blonde Crazy."

Loretta Young, who plays the feminine lead, shines more brilliantly here than in any role she ever has portrayed. Always beautiful, she positively radiates charm in a sympathetic role as the young wife and sweetheart whose devotion saves a hot-headed boy from plunging into tragedy.

The story, adapted to the screen by Kubeck, Glaxton and John Bright from the stage play by Kenyon Nicholson, is gripping and logical drama. The young writing team which gave "Public Enemy" and "Blonde Crazy" to the screen have here taken a tactical view in a big city as their background. They have gone away from their gangster pastures to feed on the romance of normal, law-abiding folk, the result of a highly flourishing morsel of entertainment.

British Policy In Far East Crisis Is To Rely On League

LONDON, Feb. 24.—(AP)—A demand by George Lansbury, leader of the Labor opposition in the House of Commons, for "some drastic action" in the fighting between China and Japan drew from Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, last night a declaration that the British policy was to rely on the League of Nations.

The opposition leader had suggested economic pressure or the withdrawal of ambassadors.

"The civilized world cannot stand still and see these things happening and carried through to the bitter end without some protest," he said.

The foreign secretary replied that the British policy was to use the utmost efforts in conjunction with other powers, whether members of the League or not, to support "the moral authority of the League, of which both China and Japan are members."

Deplored the failure of the League to prevent the outbreak of fighting at Shanghai, he declared a deep conviction of the British government and of himself that only by "boldly affirming the principles of the League" could the best means of restoring peace be found.

"The people of China," Lansbury said, "have a right, an inalienable right, to say that every part of her territory shall be under her control."

FRENCH POLICY CHANGE LOOKED FOR AT PERIODS

With Every Cabinet Fall Expectations Are Given Renewal

PARIS, Feb. 24.—Whenever a French government falls, and it falls with some regularity, there is renewed expectation that French policy will at last change.

At Geneva and in all capitals where M. Andre Tardieu's project of a militarized League as a condition of disarmament has failed to find favor, this inevitable and unvarying hope is again uttered. Such anticipations are based on complete misunderstanding of the deep-rooted consistency of the French case.

Since the World War there has been an evolution of method and modification in expression of immediate aims in accordance with circumstances. But fundamentally there has been a general and unalterable agreement in all orthodox parties.

It is not a substitution of this name for that, nor even new party combinations, that will radically transform French views. Nothing is more impressive than acceptance of M. Tardieu's scheme by M. Edouard Herriot, Radical chief, who not only admits it as feasible but claims paternity of the project.

M. Joseph Paul Boncour, sitting by the side of M. Tardieu at Geneva, found it entirely to his taste, though he is nominally a Socialist. Not long ago M. Tardieu was regarded as reactionary by the left. His defense of the French thesis of security has at present made him persona grata with the Radical.

With singular persistence the French have striven for organization of the status quo, which is another name for security, which is another name for peace. This is the policy that has been the most important thing for Europe in the "stay put" any attempt at revision would lead to war and nobody can answer for consequences of various provisions of the peace treaties are called into question.

Georges Clemenceau saw safety in the Anglo-American French pact, which was actually signed, but not ratified, Leon Bourgeois saw safety in an international armistice, as does M. Tardieu. M. Herriot saw safety in pledges of mutual assistance, and M. Aristide Briand in the Locarno treaties, which call for British and Italian assistance in certain eventualities. In all these versions of the same theme there is the same purpose and the same system scarcely changes.

In so far as we are defended we are prepared to disarm, say the French in effect. This thought survives the vicissitudes of oratorical styles. The French have necessarily reduced their army and navy to a considerable extent, but they are not ready to descend below what they feel to be the indispensable minimum without further guarantees, and those guarantees must come in the shape of international pledges, whether from the League of Nations or from several great powers.

They regard this demand as a practical application of the idea of internationalism. When M. Briand launched his suggestion of the United States of Europe its underlying object was stabilization of the continent. When M. Tardieu sponsored the League army he was held to have continued the Briand tradition and even have gone further than M. Briand had dared.

Something of the same quest for security may be seen in France's treatment of the reparations problem which has again been discussed with England and will be the subject of the Lausanne conference in June. M. Raymond Poincare and his successors have had to bow to economic realities but they have kept a twofold objective. They naturally wished to collect whatever sums they could for restoration of devastated regions and for repayment of Anglo-American loans. But they also wanted to impose such a handicap on Germany as would enable France to compete from an advantageous mark.

At present it is obvious that comparatively little money will be forthcoming and it is certain that France will not pay out of its own pocket. But France does not really favor cancellation for the very simple reason, namely, that cancellation would place Germany in a relatively better financial and economic situation.

The process of inflation and of bankruptcy left Germany free of most of the internal changes which have been on other countries, including France. This particularly applies to German state railways. Despite partly in taxation. Were the state to be cleaned tomorrow Germany would be potentially a better off than France. It has built a gigantic economic machine which only awaits the word "Go."

France, therefore, anticipates with anxiety the possibility of Germany's release. Compensation in cancellation of French debt would not be equivalent. That most work the Allied Forces for prohibition have launched a speaking campaign in behalf of prohibition which will reach 687 cities and towns of the country and cover 48 states.

The Allied Campaigners, as the speaking force is called, started out at Columbus in September and will continue the campaign until next June, reaching from two to three cities every day.

Dr. Poling and the other leaders associated with him in this campaign believe that a majority of the American people are in favor of the 18th amendment, but they do believe that the amendment stands in jeopardy unless its friends can be aroused and organized to meet the attacks that are being made upon it. This, they are trying to do. Not only are they enrolling the names of persons supporting the amendment in each city they visit, but plans are outlined whereby a local group can continue this work after the speakers leave.

The movement will supplement the work of the various organizations supporting the amendment and will, its sponsors hope, bring together on a united front all citizens favoring the amendment. It is non-partisan and non-sectarian. Among its national sponsors are:

Miss Jane Addams, Senator William E. Borah, Dr. and Mrs. Richard C. Cabot, Dr. John R. Mott, Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Patrick H. Callahan, Senator Arthur Capper, Josephus Daniels, Frank E. ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 24.—(AP) Dr. E. H. Cherrington, general secretary of the World League against alcoholism, told the Anti-Saloon League convention here today that American young people would make their own program for approaching elections, and would not accept dictation from any organization or group.

His statement was in reply to the question, what can be done to capture the vote of 1,500,000 young people? He said older people must realize they cannot dictate to youth what it shall do.

Dry Speakers To Be Heard Here March 1

Speakers for the Allied Forces for Prohibition will include this city on the nation-wide tour they are making to develop support for the 18th amendment, according to an announcement here today.

Two mass meetings will be held at the city hall at 1:00 and 7:30 P. M. March 1.

Two of the noted speakers who are making the tour with the Allied Campaigners will talk at these meetings and all who are interested in prohibition will be asked to come out and hear a frank discussion of what prohibition is accomplishing and what its friends must do to meet the attacks being made on the 18th amendment.

The speakers scheduled to make addresses here are Oliver W. Stewart, vice chairman of the Allied Forces for Prohibition, and Dr. Ira Landrith, chairman of the National Temperance Council, two of the foremost leaders in the prohibition cause. Mr. Stewart is scheduled to talk at the afternoon session, and Dr. Landrith will speak at the night meeting.

The meetings planned here are part of the most extensive effort that has yet been made to marshal the strength of the dry forces. Led by Dr. Daniel A. Poling of New York, the Allied Forces for prohibition have launched a speaking campaign in behalf of prohibition which will reach 687 cities and towns of the country and cover 48 states.

The Allied Campaigners, as the speaking force is called, started out at Columbus in September and will continue the campaign until next June, reaching from two to three cities every day.
