over the oz-year old red brick building at 230 E First St. are the words "Sanford Public Library." At each side of the double front door are concrete columns and flanking the front steps to the building are two old round-globed street lights.

The old building houses not only volumes containing the mysteries of knowledge but also treasures from Seminole County and Sanford's past and donated items from citizens long-forgotten. Yet the days the building serves as a library may be numbered. Studies conducted by county staff members and others in the field say the building is too small to house the number of volumes necessary to serve the population; the branch library, they say, should be in a more central location and in a more modern facility.

The present building was acquired by the city for use as a library in late 1963 as a gift from the U.S. General Services Administration. The gift included a reverter clause requiring that the building be maintained as a public library for 20 years, until 1983, or ownership will revert to the federal government.

The City leased the building for $1 a year to the county as a branch library in 1975. At the same time, the city's collection of 39,000 books and other mementos were turned over to the county. The lease is up next year, and the county is considering moving the library to new quarters. Originally, the building was constructed in 1917 as a post office during the early days of World War I. Unlike most buildings in this area of Central Florida, it has a basement. Special features include tunnels within the walls of the basement which lead to observation points on the first floor and the attic area and even in the restroom on the second floor.

In those days when great sums of money went through post offices for the purchase of money orders, the structures were built in a fashion to permit postal inmectors to observe everything that went on for security Also considered as a factor in the construction was the fact that robbers often chose post offices as a place to practice their craft.

The hardwood flooring, in the attic area, is only one of the treasures there. Among the other treasures stored on dusty shelves are hundreds of old Victor Talking Machine records, some dating from 1905; very old copies of the Florida Geologic Survey; volumes of "The Earth and its Inhabitants" with publication dates from 1891; the World's Art published in 1876; "America: Crises of Our History", especially printed in 1925 for patrons; National Geographics, especially bound and dating from 1910. post office building in 1964. For a time the plate held a place of honor in the current library. But it was too heavy to be retained there. The story of a library in Sanford began in 1878 when Mrs. Henry Shelton Sanford, wife of the founder of the city, got a room, a few books and paid library. The project died a natural death and in the years following rooms were obtained and the old books brought out repeatedly. In 1680 the subject of a library was discussed again but no action was taken.

In 1891 it was brought before the "Wednesday Club" for discussion and Mrs. John Dickens and Mrs. A.M.

deForrest were appointed a committee to raise funds. Soon $250 was raised and a few books were purchased. There was very little money during the years afterwards due to the freeze of 1886. The library at this time was ocated in a vacant store on First Street. The old books and donations made up the library. Rummage sales were held and suppers given. Mrs.

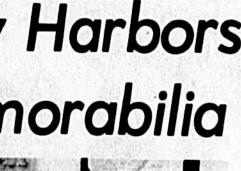

deForrest was president and she was succeeded by C.R. Toltor? The library was moved to Magnolia Avenue next to the movie theater. Mrs. Minsie E. Key, Mrs. May Dickens and Mrs. Frank gave their services. The library was then neved to Fifth Street and Oak Avenue in 1994. U.S. Treasury Secretary Claims We Will Prevail

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) - U.S. Treasury Secretary G. William Miller assured world financial leaders today that the United States has the "will, determination and perseverance" to deal with its energy and inflation problems. But he offered no new plans and it was not certain just how much assurances of good intent would assuage global concern over the dollar or the current speculative run on gold.

"The United States is unequivocally dedicated to dealing effectively with its own inflation and energy problems," Miller told the annual joint board of governors meeting of the International Monetary Fund and World

IRA Rejects Pope's Pleas

BELFAST (UPI) - Hard-line leaders of the Irish Republican Army have rejected Pope John Paul II's appeal to lay down their arms. Britain has named its former spy chief - the model for James Bond's "M" - to head the counter-terrorist drive in Northern Ireland. "In all conscience we believe that force is by far the only means of removing the evil of the British presence in Ireland," the outlawed IRA's provisional arm said

Tuesday in a statement. It was the hard-liners response to the pope's plea "on my knees" Saturday in Drogheda to stop the bloodshed in Ulster.

Underscoring their determination to fight, the IRA claimed credit for blowing up a domestic gas office in downtown Belfast even as the statement was being distributed to reporters.

CHARGES DROPPED Charges of cruelty to animals were dismissed in Seminole County Court Monday in return for a guilty plea by a former Seminole County man to one count of failing to appear in court. Chief Assistant State's Attorney Chris Ray said cruelty charges were dismissed against James Carlton Smith, 36, partly because two veterinarians presented conflicting views on how a 10-yearold racehorse died in a south Seminole pasture two years ago. Smith was arrested in February of 1978 on cruelty charges ollowing a complaint by Ruth Henry of the Humane Society. Ms. Henry had investigated a report of .horse lying in the pasture near United Way of Seminole County campaign workers reported a total of $22,663.40 in pledges and donations at the kick-off breakfast held Tuesday at the Sanford Holiday Inn at Interstate-4 and State Road 46.

This year's United Way goal in Seminole is $236,600 the largest yet - but Campaign Chairman Sheila Brown said she was confident the goal could be met.

Topping Tuesday's reports was that of Maxine Ekern. who reported First Federal of Seminole had completed its drive with 100 percent participation for a total of $5,542.36 - $2,100 from the firm and $3,442.36 from the employees.

Quip Systems Inc. of Altamonte Springs, pacesetter firm in the pilot Division launched its drive for United Way Friday. " 'Quip is quick' " is our motto," said Rose Anne Malta, "we have already pledged $1,455 and will hold a disco dance as part of the drive on Oct. 12.

Also reported, under the Financial Division headed by Wayne Albert, was $750 from Flagship Bank of Seminole and $125 from Finance America's Sanford and Altamonte Springs offices. Lee Maynard, president of Barnett Bank of Seminole said "more than $4,000" has been pledged at his bank and the drive is not yet complete. Maynard heads

Rhodesia Sanctions

The Patriotic Front which has been waging guerrilla war for control of Zimbabwe Rhodesia has made a significant concession at the London conference searching for a peace formula. The guerrillas would accept a constitution reserving 20 percent of the seats in the national assembly for whites - at least at the start.

Their support of this principle is so tentative and qualified that it represents moving barely an inch Swhen there is perhaps a mile to travel. But there is Encouragement in any sign of flexibility on the part of Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, whose Patriotic Front has stood on an all-or-nothing demand that the old Rhodesia be rid of any vestige Sof white political control.

Actually, the Front is not abandoning its goal of an all black Zimbabwe government. Its spokesman at London says the guarantee of white seats in the assembly would be accepted only for the sake of setting agreement on a new constitution. The guerrilla faction still wants to give the assembly the power to revoke the white guarantee by a twothirds vote.

This is something less than what the British have proposed, and what the present bi-racial government headed by Bishop Abel Muzorewa has accepted. Under their concept the guarantee of white participation in the assembly would remain rrevocable for several years.

So the London conferees remain divided in this fundamental issue and many others that may be harder to reconcile.

Although Bishop Muzorewa has accepted the British draft for a new constitution it has been rejected for different reasons by both the Patriotic Front and the white citizens represented by Ian

Yet it is increasingly apparent that if there is going to be a peaceful transition to majority rule it can only take place along the general lines which the British have proposed and the Muzorewa government has embraced.

The bishop now represents a moderate, realistic center between the Smith forces who believe the British plan takes too much power away from the white minority, and the Nkomo-Mugabe force who hink it leaves the whites too entrenched. The London conference may be the last hope for Firawing whites and blacks together in a Zimbabwe government that is not assailed from the outset by rivil war. And further progress in the negotiations will depend on how well the Muzorewa government can resist pressures to make concessions that one ide or the other would find wholly unacceptable. The faint ray of optimism which broke through the clouds this week would be strengthened by signals from outside the conference room that the gotiating process has the support of the rest of the world. The U.S. House of Representatives could end such a signal promptly by approving a Senate passed measure lifting our economic sanctions against Rhodesia.

Those sanctions were put in place to underscore bur support of "majority rule" for Rhodesians. The Muzorewa government's commitment to the principle of majority rule can hardly be buestioned, even if Ian Smith and the Patriotic Front are pursuing concepts of the term peculiar to their own point of view. Whatever the sanctions may have accomplished in the past, it would be positive stroke in our African policy to lift them at this crucial point in the London negotiations.

Rocky Road To Transbus By WILLIAM STEIF

A 96-page report of the National Research Council seems to have driven the last nail in the coffin of Transbus, a decade-old dream of building a better bus that would make millions of handicapped people more mobile. Or has it?

The council says, in effect, that Transbus, despite the Department of Transportation's $28-million research investment, would be too expensive to produce and operate. It says that only a tiny proportion of the "transportationhandicapped" — elderly folks and others with physical disabilities — would use buses anyway. The new Transportation Secretary, Neil E. Goldschmidt, is on the spot. His predecessor, Brock Adams, "mandated" that after Sept. 30, 1979, all buses bought with federal aid would have to meet the 50 specifications of Transbus. DOT normally puts up 80 percent of the purchase price for city buses. There's a "temporary delay" on the DOT mandate, but that can't go on for long. Goldschmidt, and the White House, have to make a decision soon.

The fate of Transbus seemed sealed last May THE LIGHTER SIDE 2. Los Angeles, Miami and Philadelphia had formed a consortium to buy 530 buses Transbus specifications. None of the three U.S. bus manufacturers (General Motors, AM General and Flexible) would bid.

> RONALD REAGAN On The Computer Challenge

Shortly after the Russian revolution, John Reed, an American radical writer, visited the Soviet Union. On his return home he was said to have remarked, "I've been over to see the future - and it works!"

He was wrong. What he saw was not the future but a new version of despotism of the past. Still, all of us have the same feeling now and then. We come across a piece of information and we think we can see the future outlined there for all the world to see.

An article in the Chicage Tribune made me think of this recently. It was part of the series on "The Changing American Worker" and was titled: "Computers: Will Jobs They make Top Those They Take?"

A lot of us. it seems, have been looking at computers and thinking we are looking at the future. Perhaps that's right. The biggest challenge facing the American economy in the the next quarter century may well be that posed by the technological wonders of the computer

The article reminds us that some of those wonders are with us even now. For example, one New York City bank has slashed its clerical staff from 10,000 to 6,000 since 1970, despite a huge increase in business volume. Computers are now doing much of the work. A single small nicroprocessor, after all, contains about 5,000 : transistors and can process 200,000 instructions a

Talmadge Report Suggests Senator Committed Perjury

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Senate Ethics Committee today urged that Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., be denounced for financial misconduct and suggested he may have perjured himself when he denied knowing that unreported campaign contributions were being diverted to his personal use.

In a report submitted to the Senate, the committee said it found numerous instances of conflicting testimony by the witnesses - including Talmadge - who were interviewed during its 15-month investigation, and asked the Justice Department to consider perjury action. "Furthermore," the committee said. "the statements made by certain witnesses, if true, and the import of certain documents, if authentic, would indicate that other serious violations of law have occurred." Talmadge's office said the senator had no immediate

Time A Major Problem For Today's Kids?

By TOM NETSEL Herald Staff Writer

"Athletes today are smarter than they were years ago," said Bill Scott, head football coach at Lyman High, "but I believe it may be harder for them than it was 10 years ago."

Scott has been at Lyman since 1970, coming from a couple of years coaching at Apopka. He has been head coach for the past two years but he feels society today has made it more difficult for a young person to be an athlete. "Kids nowdays seem to have everything ready-made for them and it's not convenient to divest time for athletics."

He went on to explain how difficult it is for a young man not to want to go to the beach or go water skiing on a warm afternoon after school instead of sweating it out on the football field. With so many things to occupy a young person Scott feels it is difficult for him to find the time needed for athletics.

Many students have to work after school. "They used to go out on a $5 date, but you can't even buy the girl's ticket for that now." he

"They have to discipline themselves more now than before," said Scott, but even so, he feels "the caliber of football players today is just as good if not better."

Scott graduated from Memphis State University in 1963 and was an offensive guard and center for a year and a half with the New York Jets. While with the Jets his wife became pregnant and they decided to name their child Shea, in honor of Shea Stadium. As it turned out, he was a she so they named her Sheri. which was close. She is now a freshman at Lyman and a manager for the football team. Their second child, a son born five years ago, was finally named Shea.

When a young man does decide to play football he will find few strict rules on Scott's team, but the ones he has Scott expects them to be strictly adhered to, and they will be disciplined if necessary.

"I feel a coach's personality carries over to young people and when there is trust and respect between the athlete and the coach, you've got the discipline problem licked." Playing for the team is a valuable experience for young people even though they are not on the starting eleven, says Scott. They benefit from the teamwork, the self tiscipline, and even though they pay more of a price than the superstars, "They are finding out what life is all about".

"There is only one president, only one principal and all those workers who make the company successful. I encourage them to stick with it. They'll benefit from it 10 or 15 years from now. In business, if they stick to it. it'll take them to the top," said Scott. In contrast, the prime donne of the team, if things do not go his way, may lose his temper and blow his top causing him lots of problems in later life.

Scott enjoys working with young people and he remembers a coach he had when he was a student on the south side of Chicago, Scott student on the south side of Chicago. Scott recalls how this coach beloed him heep "a straight head" and he hepes he, in return, can be there is help a youngster who may need help taday. Layer fully blamed the deletion of items on the architectural firm, Gutmann, Dragash Associates - Architects Planners, Inc., of Sanford. Layer said he did not know the 10-12 items were missing from the bidding package prepared by the architects and "did not agree" with deleting them "under any circumstances, but it happened anyway."

Robert Feather, chairman of the board asked why the architects failed to include all items. Layer responded firm spokesmen said "They didn't have time to draw specifications for interior work."

Gutmann said he saw no reason for the confusion since the firm's contract with the school board did not include furnishings and

"We broke all kinds of records to get the plans done" Gutmann said. The plans were completed in seven months rather than a year Gutmann stated was usual for an $11 million project.

Gutmann gave two reasons why case work or fixed equipment such as science laboratory tables, was deleted.

The firm needed time to coordinate with the school staff about the specific equipment needed and the district would save money through sub-contracting such work.

William Kroll, board member, questioned the excuse and asked how much time did the firm have. Layer replied the architects worked on drawing up the final plans from July to Aug. 15.

Allan Keeth, vice chairman of the board proposed the school rebid the high school Layer said he would have a total list of missed items from the architects by the next board meeting on Oct. 10 and then a decision about rebidding could be made. Keeth pressed Layer saying "We were put in a position where we did not know what we were going to put up for bid."
