Revenue Producing Lotteries

The prospect of having to supply 600,000 families, or approximately 2,000,000 persons, with relief through the coming winter at a cost, as estimated by the Commissioner of Public Welfare, of $201,000,000 has placed upon the shoulders of Mayor LaGuardia of New York City the almost impossible task of devising ways and means of raising so vast a sum of money. As a last resort he has recommended, in addition to a one-half of one percent gross income tax, a system of four annual lotteries. There are many reasons why lotteries should not be resorted to in such manner. They are against the law in the first place, and even though Mayor LaGuardia has perfected a "scheme for getting around the law" the device is none the less reprehensible. There has been too much "getting around the law" already for the good of the country. Furthermore, while governments do not seem able to abolish lotteries altogether, they do not flourish in any way near the extent they would if actually encouraged and promoted by the state. Lotteries are an evil influence in that they promote the gambling instinct, and as a means of raising government revenue, they place the burden of taxation upon those least able to support it. But the New York Herald Tribune bases its opposition to the lottery scheme upon an entirely different line of reasoning. Lotteries are not nearly so "profitable" as they are sometimes made to appear. "The Spanish lottery," the Herald Tribune relates, "is 171 years old and has experimented with many different ratios of winnings to prizes. The upshot of all this history and experience is that the management of a lottery, even when lottery 'straight' and under official auspices—must count upon paying out at least 70 percent of the gross receipts in prizes, because no smaller ratio can win lasting popularity. The Spanish government lottery is the world's greatest. It holds thirty-six drawings a year and the first prize in the Christmas 'gordo' is about $2,000,000. But as the result of experience since 1763 the Spanish government spends about 2 percent of the gross takings on salaries, advertising, commissions and other expenses and a fraction more than 70 percent in prizes. Its annual profit is only about $16,000,000. Mayor LaGuardia wants $4,000,000 a month for relief. "More familiar in the United States than the Spanish example are the Irish 'sweeps,' to which our gambling citizenry have contributed something like $15,000,000 these last four years. The Irish pay out 75 percent of the takings as prizes. Their tickets sell in more than 120 countries, but their gross ticket sales over these last four years have not totaled $140,000,000, while the profits to the Irish Hospital Trust have been little in excess of $30,000,000—little more in four years than Mayor LaGuardia wants for six months' relief. "Going counter to international experience, the new Puerto Rican lottery, for the benefit of public health enterprises, will hold out 60 percent and expenses from the gross takings and pay less than 40 percent in prizes, the theory being that since it is a local affair the ticket buyers will be charity-minded. Concede that argument in New York's case, and yet to raise $60,000,000 a year for relief a local lottery would have to sell more than $180,000,000 worth of tickets—nearly three times the annual gross of the Spanish lottery and nearly four times the annual gross of the Irish 'sweep.' If the prizes were 75 percent of the gross takings, as is the case with the Irish Hospital Trust, a New York lottery would have to sell no less than $240,000,000 worth of tickets if the profits were to cover the city's share of the cost of relief—and that is a large order."

Illiteracy

In spite of all the public schools there are in the United States, and in spite of compulsory school attendance laws, and vast sums appropriated to assure everyone an education, there are still 4,283,753 persons over ten years of age in the United States who cannot read or write. This represents, as of the 1930 census, 4.3 percent of the total population. The percentage of illiteracy runs highest throughout the South. In South Carolina it was 14.9 percent; in North Carolina, 10 percent; in New Mexico, 13.3 percent; in Mississippi, 13.1 percent; in Louisiana, 13.5 percent; in Arizona, 10.1 percent; in Alabama, 12.6 percent; in Florida the extent of illiteracy is something to which we need point with either pride or particular shame. Here it is 7.1 percent. The lowest degree of illiteracy is found in the Middle West. In Nebraska, it is 1.2 percent; in North Dakota, 1.5 percent; in Minnesota, 1.3 percent; in Wisconsin, 1.9 percent. Best state is Iowa with only 0.8 percent. The United States as a whole, however, ranks well above most other countries. Enlightened nations today have enacted compulsory school attendance laws, and the percentage of illiteracy is very low, but even in Canada, it is 5.7 percent. From here illiteracy ranges upward through advanced countries like France, Germany, and Sweden, until one finds in backward China an illiteracy prevailing which reaches the astonishing figure of approximately 80 percent. In Egypt, in 1917 when the last census was taken, illiteracy was estimated as high as 92.1 percent. In Soviet Russia today school attendance is made compulsory for all who cannot read or write, but in the last days of the Empire illiteracy ranged as high as 60 percent. According to the census of 1926, this had been reduced to 48.2 percent. But it is said that even today fully one-fourth of Russia's 160,000,000 people cannot read or write.

Democratic Heads Express Concern Over Sinclair Vote

(Continued from Page One) who supported "New Deal" policies. "The 'New Deal' victory in the California primaries has elements of public interest quite aside from the fact that it assures the Republican party of great gains in the November elections," Hastings asserted. Hastings said Sinclair, who supported a field led by George Cross, war-time propaganda director, was a "disciple of Karl Marx" and that he did not believe conservative "Democrats will follow this sort of thing." Word was received that Sinclair, who claimed his victory an endorsement of the "New Deal," had asked President Roosevelt for an early appointment for a conference at Hyde Park. Marvin H. McIntyre, presidential secretary, said an appointment would be made with the understanding that the President would not be involved in the state political campaign. "Democrats and Republicans will await the outcome of the conference with interest. Unless the President makes his position clear, Republican leaders indicated they would interpret the conference as an endorsement of Sinclair's candidacy by Roosevelt. Sinclair will face Acting Governor Merriam, Republican nominee, in the November elections. Privately, some Democratic leaders expressed fear conservative Democrats would support Merriam, who describes himself as a "safe" Republican, and thereby imperil the possible re-election of Democrats to the House in November. Representative Byrne of Tennessee, Democratic floor leader and chairman of the Congressional Campaign Committee, however, said he failed to see how the California primary result would affect the Democratic nominees for Congress "who are basing their claim for support on the 'New Deal' and aid to President Roosevelt in completing the Recovery program in the next two years." "Reports received by our committee," Byrne said, "indicate that all Democratic members of the House will be returned and there may be some gains." Republicans now hold nine of the 30 California House seats. Sinclair's victory was hailed by Representative Britten, veteran Illinois Republican, as presaging a G. O. P. sweep of California in November. "It looks like the election of the complete Republican ticket in California," Britten said. "I think that is the influence Sinclair will have on the election." Senator Pope, Democrat, Idaho, said Sinclair's nomination "is in keeping with American traditions" and "it should call for no objection whatsoever from the remainder of the nation." "If Sinclair is elected," Pope said, "the United States can observe with interest and perhaps with profit, the workings of his program. If Sinclair is successful, the remainder of the nation can profit by the lesson if he fails, the failure will be confined to California and other states with no way out." Already a break in California's democracy was seen in the appointment of John B. Elliott, vice chairman of the State Democratic Central Committee, that he would support in November the candidates he thinks are "best qualified."

Huey Not 'Sucked' Claims Buck Who Charges Frame-up

I heard he got 'sucked' for committing a sin in the washroom." The newspaper said, this remark to Buck about the alleged incident was "the first mention of record of this untruthful and vicious story." "Tricksters" planned the "who sucked Huey" campaign, the newspaper said, to injure Long politically. Buck was also quoted as saying that Senator Long did not snatch a plate of ice cream from a lady and say "you're too fat, I'll eat it," didn't try to show a waiter

South Carolina Finally Seeks Dry Law Repeal

(Continued from Page One) of a shifting of 40-year-old political lines were observed. Notified that the governorship lay between Johnston and Bleese, Senator Smith, who defeated Bleese twice, and served one term as his senatorial colleague, announced he would vote for Bleese. Smith, now serving his third term, and Bleese have been identified with opposing factions in the past. The fact that Johnston and Bleese topped the ticket of eight candidates confounded the prognosticators, who had calculated that they would normally appeal to the same voters. In the referendum, which was ordered as "straw vote" to be observed by the next legislature only if the law-makers so desire, 114,046 voters said they wanted liquor legalized, while 96,358 were for the present law, which prohibits the manufacture and sale of the beverage, but allows the importation of a quart a month theoretically for medicinal purposes. Dry and wet leaders refrained from comment. Should members of the legislature be governed by the vote of their respective counties, the wet-dry lineup would be close. With six counties unreported, the wets were leading in 22 and the drys in 18. The margin in some cases was so slight that late returns could wipe it out. Johnston, the dry candidate who promised to reduce passenger car licenses to a flat $3, had 85,027 votes from 1500 precincts. Bleese had 68,905. His campaign was based upon his record of more than 40 years in public life. He advocated economy in government. With regard to liquor, he promised to be guided by the outcome of the referendum.

AUSTRIA SEES PRE-WAR PARTY ITS LAND AS OF FARM PRICES STRIFE CENTER Nearly Reached

(Continued from Page One) "Austria is doomed." The "Christian" authoritarian government now in power apparently has striven to establish an efficient and honest government. But it seems to be unappreciated by the masses. The people are burdened by unemployment, rising prices, increased taxation and ruinous civil strife. The press is muzzled. Newspapers which are not for the government are suppressed. It is dangerous to insist on free speech, even on the street. A sinister system of espionage has developed. To have a man arrested it is only necessary to write to the police, charging him with having Nazi sympathies. Austria fears another push in the danger of another insurrection so great that troops are stationed at all government buildings. Machine guns peer from the windows of police headquarters. Police and soldiers are stationed at strategic spots, they are waiting for something to happen and pretty sure it will happen soon. The Ballhausplatz, headquarters of the cabinet, president and foreign office, resembles a fortress. Machine guns, bombs, hand grenades, rifles, bayonets and steel helmets are everywhere symbols of these times in Vienna. Telegraph and radio stations are especially well guarded. The building in which the Associated Press offices are located resembles a military headquarters, and no one is permitted to enter or leave without a military permit. "Better keep some of the staff outside all the time, for sooner or later the Nazis will seize the building and if you are all inside no one will be free to cover the story," a high government official advised. With its federal army of 30,000 supposed to be in control, but no one knows the secret strength of the Nazis, or if the troops will remain loyal. Total complaints received to date number about 80,000. This figure however, represents many duplications inasmuch as all employees of one plant have in many instances complained against their one employer. To make compliance even more effective, the compliance unit is considering giving publicity to cases in which adjustments have been made. In some instances, restitution of wages amounting to $60,000 has been made without public notice and it is felt that publicity of such cases would have a distinct influence on employers generally. Nor was long's assistant "Al" Williams, the newspaper said, for getting Buck again. "Al Williams never left our table during the time Senator Long was swept

"Of Human Bondage" At Milane For 2 Days

The combination of one of the greatest stars of the stage and screen, Leslie Howard, and one of the greatest stories in modern literature, makes "Of Human Bondage," which opened today at the Milane Theatre, one of the most entertaining dramatic pictures to emerge from Hollywood this year.

Leslie Howard's dramatic power and sympathetic interpretation exceeds anything he has done before. Bette Davis comes through with her greatest performance as Mildred. In other prominent roles, Frances Dee as Sally offers her finest portrayal since Meg in "Little Women," and Kay Johnson portrays Nora with conspicuous aptitude. Strong characterizations are contributed by Reginald Denny, Reginald Owen and Reginald Sheffield.

Returned from North Carolina where they enjoyed a several days' vacation with friends at Jones Farm, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Randall are reporting that the residents of that state are jubilant over a successful tourist season, and are looking to the future with much confidence. The state has been crowded with Florida and Georgia visitors this year, the Randalls stated, and accommodations have been at a premium, although they have heard of no boosting of prices for food or lodging.

Picked up on suspicion while visiting relatives in Goldsboro early Monday morning, a negro named Alex Hanton now is in the County Jail awaiting the arrival of Nashville, Tenn. officers who will return him to that state to face charges of larceny of an automobile and highway robbery. According to Chief of Police Roy G. Williams, the negro told police here that he was from Miami and that a Pontiac coach he was driving belonged to his employer in that city. A check revealed that the car was not listed on state records at Tallahassee, and further, that its license had been stolen from Harry M. Papworth's automobile at Daytona Beach last week. With nothing more to work with than a key-case which gave the telephone number of a filling station in an unknown city, Chief Williams, through the co-operation of the local telephone exchange, called several cities and discovered that the phone number was one on the Nashville exchange. An exchange of telegrams revealed that Hanton was wanted there, and within a short time after this discovery, the negro had signed papers waiving extradition to that state.

T. A. Langford of Langford and Sons, wholesale fruit and produce operators of Orlando, was here yesterday opening negotiations for two stalls in the new State Farmers' Wholesale Market. Mr. Langford proposed to handle citrus fruits in one stall and crates and hampers in the other. He reported that his firm last year shipped more than 50,000 boxes of oranges by truck, and that he has a wide association among truck drivers. He is moving to Sanford, he said, because he feels that the new market will make Sanford the center of the fruit and vegetable marketing of Florida this coming season, particularly as it applies to movement by truck.

A scheduled meeting between members of the City Commission and a wealthy Waukegan, Ill., man who is reported as interested in the Mayfair Hotel failed to materialize yesterday afternoon, and the Commission was in the dark as to the reason until this morning.
