prominent Cuban family, in Havana last Saturday.

The marriage was the second for Senator Walsh. In 1899 he married Elinor C. McClements, of Chicago, who died on Aug. 30, 1917. Their one child is now Mrs. E. C. Godger, wife of a naval officer.

Senator Walsh was known to his associates as an ascetic individual who neither drank nor smoked and tasted no tea or coffee. His independence and integrity have always assured him a hearing on any subject in the Senate. A loyal League of Nations man while the Treaty of Versailles was before the Senate, the Montanan was better known for his adherence to the administration of President Wilson and frequently denounced Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer for his anti-Raid raids during the days immediately following the close of the war.

A slender man of medium height, his hair was a light iron gray and he dressed with a schoolmaster's correctness of attire. Senator Walsh never started anything he could not finish and was noted for his initiative and perseverance.

Senator Walsh was chairman of the prolonged Democratic National Convention in old Madison Square Garden in 1924 and served in the same capacity at the 1932 convention in Chicago. He had frequently been considered as a Presidential possibility in pre-

Senator Thomas J. Walsh

The untimely death of Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana removes from the Roosevelt cabinet, even before the inauguration, the most indispensable member of the cabinet. None of the cabinet appointees had received such unanimous endorsement; no other vacancy would have been so difficult to fill.

Senator Walsh was, by training, temperament and reputation an ideal candidate for the office of attorney general. He was generally recognized as one of the foremost lawyers in the country and one of the exceedingly few good lawyers who had not incurred the "taint" of corporate clients. His legal knowledge, as well as his rugged honesty and undaunted courage, combined to make him a most dangerous man to special interests which flout the law.

He first attracted the attention of the country some ten years ago when he uncovered the scandals in the Interior Department of the government under Albert B. Fall which were followed by the successful prosecutions known as the Teapot Dome oil case. His relentless pursuit of these high governmental crooks gave ample evidence of an unhappy experience awaiting more recent tamperers with the law.

A life long Democrat, Senator Walsh was known as a liberal in political thought, and more than once he was found side by side with Progressive Republicans fighting for the rights of the masses. But his liberal views never led him, for the sake of popular support, into the dangerous pitfalls of unsound theories or fallacious doctrines which so often mark the distinction between a liberal and a radical.

His loss will be keenly felt by the country, as well as in the cabinet, where his place will be hard to fill.

The Modern Cruisers

Everyone today thinks his troubles are just about the worst that could happen, but without any attempt to draw comparisons, the difficulties confronting naval architects in their task of designing fighting ships, which come within certain limits of size and gun power and at the same time give maximum speed and armament protection, are not to be sneezed at.

The restrictions placed upon cruiser construction by the London naval conference call for ships not to exceed 10,000 tons displacement and to carry guns with a maximum calibre of eight inches. This doesn't sound like such a hard task to fulfill. It is relatively easy to build a boat of 10,000 tons and arm it with eight inch guns, but when the other two factors of speed and armament are considered then the problem becomes a really perplexing one.

It is obvious that when two cruisers have equal tonnage and equal gun power then the disparity of effectiveness, everything else being equal, lies in their comparative speeds and their vulnerability against shell fire. The problem then of the naval architects is to start with a certain designated tonnage limit and gun size and develop speed and protection at the proper ratio for maximum efficiency.

It is easy to understand that with every increase of speed more weight must go into the propulsion equipment and consequently less into the armament. In other words armament must be sacrificed for high speeds and conversely high speeds must be sacrificed for armaments. It is the job of establishing the right ratio between these two factors which is the baffling problem of ship designers.

At all events the one cardinal rule is to cut unnecessary weight wherever possible in order that it may go into the all important points. In order to do this many radical departures from naval construction and ship operations have resulted. Plates are welded instead of being riveted, lighter and tougher alloys are used wherever possible, aluminum castings supplant heavier metals. Even in the matter of paints, the consideration of weight has brought a change. The old red lead, proverbial paint of naval crafts, has been supplanted by aluminum paint, the same as is used on the "skin" of dirigibles. Even the swinging hammocks have given way to aluminum bunks ranged tier on tier. No longer do sailors holystone the decks. The wooden layers are now so thin that they would soon be worn through.

As a consequence of the many technical difficulties which have been placed upon naval architects by treaty agreements, the cost of the modern fighting ship has increased greatly, until today the money put into the latest cruisers of the United States Navy is many times more than that of a few years ago, and this despite depressed values. However, our newest cruisers far exceed anything heretofore in downright fighting efficiency. They are veritable highly mechanized fortresses which cleave the water at terrific rates of speed and can hurl salvos of lead and steel at unseen enemies with all the precision and accuracy which modern science can develop.

SANFORD, TWENTY YEARS AGO

To friends of Ben Guthrie who are wondering why he has grown two feet taller within the past week we will tell you that this is on account of a fine girl at his home last Monday, Feb. 24.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Abernathy left yesterday for Washington where they will witness the inauguration ceremonies and visit friends in Virginia before returning home.

Washington awaits the coming of Woodrow Wilson, next president of the United States. Simple plans to welcome him Mar. 4 are ready and every detail is complete for the inauguration ceremonies and the attendant military and civic demonstrations. No grand fanfare ever found the capital of the nation, whose destinies he will guide, more brilliantly arrayed or more abundant with enthusiasm than Woodrow Wilson will find Washington this week.

DeLand P. T. A. Adopts Resolution Urging Economies

DELAND, Mar. 3.—Members of the three parent-teacher organizations in DeLand, aroused by the possibility that curtailment of state funds may serve to drastically shorten the Volusia county school term next year, have adopted resolutions addressed to Governor Dave Sholtz, Volusia county members of the 1933 Florida legislature and to the press, in which they outline ways and means by which a full school term may become an accomplished fact and point to the serious consequences that may be expected if curtailment of school activities is permitted to go into effect.

Mrs. O. C. Bauman, president of the DeLand High School P. T. A., said yesterday morning that it was essential that all parents resident in the city be made familiar with the situation as it now exists, and expressed appreciation of the splendid co-operation that has been extended by the local press in placing the matter before the public.

Mrs. Bauman also stressed the fact that the public at large were not yet aware of the effect that a curtailment of school activities might have on tourists who plan to spend next winter here. She cited several instances where, she had been informed, the families would not return next year in the event that they must do so at the expense of their children's education.

The Wakulla Spring, in Wakulla county, is one of the wonder springs of the state. It has a flow of 120,000 gallons per minute, and a glass-bottom boat gives the tourist an opportunity to look into its cave.

DOHERTY DAY MIAMI HERALD

Metropolitan Miami is in the midst of what is the greatest "season" in her history. There are more people here at this time enjoying the climate and the numerous attractions offered by the city than ever before.

Many elements have contributed to the success which Miami can claim this year. The pictorial number of The Miami Herald, published last October, and of which 25,000 extra copies were mailed throughout the North and South had something to do with the fine season. Every merchant, hotel, business man, corporation and community which was represented in that edition had something to do with the present crowd now seen on our streets.

Mr. Joseph E. Wheeler arranged the greatest program of winter horse racing for Miami ever staged in any locality. He publicized his program throughout the nation where those interested in horse racing and horse breeding might read of it and be imbued with the desire to come here to witness it. On this account, he is entitled to the gratitude of all Miami citizens.

To Col. Henry L. Doherty is due a particularly impressive share of the credit for this year's success. He came into Metropolitan Miami last year as an important factor in its development. He has control of the magnificent Miami Biltmore Hotel and is president of the Florida Year-Round club. He has expended money in unstinted volume in providing a sports and recreational program which has attracted the interest of the whole country. He has introduced here some of America's greatest publicists, leading editors, publishers, artists, sportsmen. He has spread his idea of advertising along all Florida's lines and has been an energetic advocate of a state-wide advertising campaign to the end that all Florida may enjoy the results which follow properly-conducted advertising as surely as the day follows night.

For these reasons, The Miami Daily News a short time ago suggested that Miami celebrate "Doherty Day" on March 10 as a gesture of appreciation on the part of our people. The News proposed that Doherty Day be made a state-wide event, with newspapers and communities throughout Florida joining in the effort to do honor to a man who has done much for this commonwealth and who, doubtless, plans to do much more in the future.

Merchants and organizations throughout the Metropolitan Miami area have properly indicated their wholehearted support of the idea which was born "under The News Tower." The Herald, appreciating the importance to Florida of this movement, also is giving cordial support to the project, believing that in honoring Mr. Doherty Miami also honors itself and all who have helped make the current season one of historic interest.

The Daily News is entitled to the commendation of the community for its idea, and for the energy it has displayed in forwarding plans for the celebration. The Herald is content to join in the cheering, with the hope that it may be helpful, to some extent, in making Doherty Day a memorable event in the city's life.

BLUE LAWS ARE BEING ATTACKED BY STATE SOLONS

Repeal Of Antiquated Measures Receiving Vigorous Attention

CHICAGO, Mar. 2.—Nearly a dozen legislatures have been stirred into activity by "blue laws" requiring Sunday inactivity.

In states having laws against movies, baseball and other amusements on the Sabbath, repeal measures take rank almost with banking, moratoriums, taxation, prohibition, economy and mortgage relief as leading issues, a survey revealed.

Only in a few of the states, however, have such "blue law" repeals neared the stage of enactment. One state, North Dakota, has blocked current attempts to remove its law against Sunday movies, dances and other amusements.

The Wisconsin legislature has started action on wiping Sunday regulatory measures off the statute books, following the mandate of a 1932 referendum.

In Maryland, where Baltimore's blue laws were recently liberalized by referendum, bills propose similar action for three counties.

Nebraska's senate has approved a bill to repeal an old law prohibiting cigarette smoking in restaurants. The house has blocked a proposal to forbid the showing of movies in which women smoke.

The Georgia house soon will act on a bill to legalize Sunday baseball and movies in Atlanta.

Rival bills have been buried by the New Mexico legislature, one proposal would forbid Sunday amusements. A counter proposal asks attendance at Sunday amusements be made compulsory. Its sponsor said his bill was just as logical as the other.

A Kansas house committee has recommended a bill to exempt movies from the low prohibiting,

Writer Puts Spotlight On Characters Of Incoming And Outgoing Presidents

By BYRON PRICE
(Chief Of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington)

WASHINGTON.—(P)—The history of these eventful times will be a task so challenging as to be painting for posterity an unquestionably accurate picture of Herbert Hoover in the White House.

Even aside from the public issues which have embroiled his administration in controversy, there is a remarkable difference of opinion about the intrinsic characteristics of the man himself.

Many have seen him, sobered and silk-hatted, rising stiffly on some official business, obviously impatient to have it over with. Many have heard him speak, without attempt at the oratorical which the manifest effort of a tried man.

Others have seen him at his work, remarkably alert and remarkably patient under the strain great decisions; or amidst a social company before a blazing fire on the Rapinat, his face wreathed in smiles, his words one of the delightful conversationalists.

The inscrutability of Hoover is a mystery within itself that has an enigma. Yet one or two characteristics will stand out in a dispute.

The first of his qualities was an exceptionally intense respect for, and devotion to, the office of president. The second was an intense sensitivity.

Mr. Hoover's exertions of mind and body during the past four years have been almost beyond belief. His hours of work often have been from dawn to midnight. His week-ends in Virginia frequently have amounted to little more than a transfer of tedious, nerve-tearing tasks to a new setting.

A distinguished physician, intimate of president, was asked how any man could bear the burdens of the presidency with so little relaxation. He replied that almost no other man could; that to do so any human being would have to possess from birth an extraordinary faculty for intensive effort and quick recuperation.

Mr. Hoover's sensitive sensibility contributed greatly to making the presidency a place of constant trial for him. He felt keenly that many things which happened inside the White House were strictly private matters.

With careful forethought he concealed from public view many of the more human sides of his character and many of his acts of thoughtfulness and charity.

Especially was that quality of studied human reticence noticeable in his speech-making. His public utterances nearly always were thoroughly matter-of-fact. His most striking speeches were delivered to smaller companies.

So in the memories of Washington the image of the Hoover who has revealed to his few intimates shows with the image of the Hoover who refused to be revealed.

MCKEE ADVISES PUBLIC TO DROP VAGUE DISTRUSTS

Says State Of Mind Is One Of Worst Depression Factors

NEW YORK, Mar. 3.—New Yorkers have worried themselves into such a state of mind over depression factors, both real and fancied, that they are courting "social disaster" unless they get a sarer hold of themselves, Joseph V. McKee, president of the Board of Aldermen, told the Women's Press Club recently.

Speaking after a luncheon at the Pennsylvania, Mr. McKee said that the costs of government must come down, but that the city's first task was to dispel vague apprehensions and distrusts. Tanned from his vacation in the tropics and speaking with quiet frankness, Mr. McKee asked for a return of common sense to defeat the hysteria evidenced in hoarding and bank withdrawals.

"As I come back to my home city," he said, "the thing that impresses me most is the utter despair which permeates the city and of this country.

"This tenacity, this apprehensiveness, has gone beyond a state of mind. This worried apprehensiveness has translated itself into a factual condition. People have become so distrustful that they are fearful of a great economic catastrophe. They put their fears into action by withdrawing money from the banks.

"There was withdrawn from circulation last week $150,000,000. This week it will run from $150,000,000 to $170,000,000. People are putting money under mattresses and into safety deposit boxes so that they can feel that if something happens they will be secured. Distrust has gone so far that people wonder how far it all can go. Distrust has an eroding effect which cuts deep into our economic system. Society is based on confidence and interdependence. Money is its agreed medium of exchange; of itself it is of no value.

"If you destroy the social indices and replace them with distrust you get serious social and economic ills."

"In one country I visited people were laboring in the same fields for 25 cents a day if another you could buy fifty eggs for 10 cents and tea live chickens for 81. What is their psychology? It doesn't begin to approach the despair and hopelessness of the American people. They still have faith in themselves. They have the belief that out of it will come a better civilization.

"We are beginning to be apprehensive of things that never before were questioned. Is our yardstick wrong? Are we still measuring with the yardstick of calculate nomination petitions and obtain at least 1000 signatures. He also must designate whether he is for or against repeal.

Petitions must be filed with the secretary of state 29 days before Apr. 1.

1926 and 1927 have lost faith in the cardinal principle that man does not live by bread alone? If we continue to stress these things, through selfishness and desire to protect ourselves from feared catastrophe, we cannot be a social people. This in itself will bring a social disaster.

Mr. McKee appealed to women to use their influence in stabilizing the nation's social process for the underprivileged. He asked them to remember that in buying we do not merely act as economic agents, but as social agents.

He warned that the quest for our priced merchandise was creating many unnecessary cuts through price competition which was breaking down the living standards of hundreds of persons. If we continue, through fear of the contraction of our wealth and the contraction of our credit and economy, he said, "we will do nothing but take many years to recover our war-torn and shattered markets and our shattered sales drops."

New York Farmers Are Firm In Belief Of Gold Standard

Schenectady, N. Y.—Approving the gold standard and favoring at the same time a dollar of stabilized purchasing power, the farmers of New York State have organized the Sound and Honest Money Association under the sponsorship of the state's leading agricultural groups. The program of the association was described as follows:

"To revitalize the dollar in order to bring commodity prices into proper relationship with the long-time public and private indebtedness and fiscal charges of the people, to the end that such indebtedness be liquidated honestly.

"To provide a most honest exchange for labor, services and commodities, and equitable settlement between debtor and creditor by using the index number of commodity prices as a basis upon which to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar.

"To safeguard the gold standard as the backbone of our monetary system through the foreign-bank method, which would make the dollar constant, instead of fluctuating in value.

"To encourage the calling of an international conference to discuss the resumption of silver and other world monetary problems."

Wisconsin Sets Up Plans For Vote On Prohibition Repeal

MADISON, Wis., Mar. 3.—(P)—The Wisconsin legislature set up the machinery yesterday for a state-wide vote Apr. 4 on ratification of prohibition repeal.

The action, legislators said, probably will make Wisconsin the first state in the union to vote on the ratification of repeal amendment introduced by her native son, United States Senator Blaine, and recently passed by Congress.

While actual ratification cannot be voted officially until a constitutional convention on Apr. 25, election of convention delegates on Apr. 4 will plainly show Wisconsin's wish.

The usual spring primary election for judicial and municipal candidates will be held Apr. 4 and voters will receive a separate ballot containing 30 names, 15 for repeal and 15 against.

The 15 receiving the highest votes will go to the constitutional convention on Apr. 25.

Anyone aspiring to be a delegate to the convention must
