Public Reacts To Child Movie Protest Story

If public sentiment to his anger over the movie "Pretty Baby" is all Steve Sweat needs to appease him, he's got plenty of it, according to the assistant director of the Seminole County Juvenile Detention Center (JDC).

Sweat said since the Evening Herald Monday published a story of his intent to picket the Interstate Six theater in Altamonte Springs for showing the movie depicting a 12year-old and her life in a bordello operated by her mother he has received "a lot of calls from people who say they help in any way they can". Sweat said it all began when he heard about the movie and contacted his lawyer to see if anything could be done

His lawyer advised him to first see the movie, then get back to him. "I went, but had to leave halfway though", Sweat said, adding, "I found it to be nothing more than child pornography and I saw women in there with young children. My first thought was, if those kids watching the Sweat, who has worked with problem youth for about five years and currently is assistant director at the JDC, emphasized his actions in no way concern the state or the state-held tob he has.

"This is an individual matter and a personal one. I'm so pleased over the calls I've received since the Herald story appeared. It's good to see the press has moral character for having published the story, and it's good to know the many people who called me in support of my position are f good moral character," Sweat said.

"As far as I am concerned, at this point it's in my attorney's hands, and if picketing is necessary, I know where to get the permit. I'm waiting for him to advise me. But because I did get all those calls from people supporting my views, as far as I'm concerned, that public reaction is more effective than any picketing." Sweat

Some Eye-Checking Is In Order Here

Justice John Paul Stevens has 20-20 vision when it comes to seeing the necessary relationship between the press and the government in a free society. Some of his fellow justices on the U.S. Supreme Court need to have their eyes checked. It was Justice Stevens who wrote a compelling dissent last June when a 5-3 majority on the court decided that police can invade news offices in search of evidence with no warning and armed only with a warrant, not a subpoena specifying what they want. He correctly saw that the press is no different from the public at large in this respect that this decision means countless law-abiding citizens will be subject to unannounced searches if police think they have documents in their possession that are pertinent to a criminal case.

Now. Justice Stevens has shown the same clarity of vision in a dissent from the court's 4-3 decision touching on the same issue of whether the rights of the press are distinct from the rights of the public at large. The majority ruled that journalists have no constitutional right to demand access to a prison, or by implication, to any government in-

The myopic majority is overlooking the very reason why the authors of the Bill of Rights specified in the First Amendment that Congress shall make no laws abridging freedom of the press. As Justice Stevens recognizes, those who gather and disseminate the news are surrogates of the people under our form of government in which the people are sovereign.

"Without some protection for the acquisition of information about the operations of public institutions such as prisons by the public at large,' writes Justice Stevens, "the process of selfgovernment contemplated by the framers (of the Constitution) would be stripped of its substance." The Supreme Court can hardly claim balance or consistency in these recent efforts to define relationships between government and the press. In May it was saying that law enforcement officers can invade the privacy of newspaper offices and paw through files looking for evidence. In June it said that law enforcement officers — prison wardens at any rate - can claim rights of privacy to bar the door to reporters who want an inside look at their institutions

That's a strange and disturbing tilt in judicial philosophy — a lowering of the barriers that protect private government from the inquisitive eyes of the public

The consolation is that the nine members of the Supreme Court are not of a single mind on these issues. Indeed, only seven participated in the decision upholding the right of the sheriff of Alameda County, Calif., to deny television reporters access to his county jail, and there were shades of disagreement among the seven on some aspects of the case.

Justice Harry Blackmun was ill when the case was argued, and Justice Thurgood Marshall disqualified himself because one of the attorneys was a former colleague. If they see the issue with the same sharp discernment as Justice Stevens. the court could reverse itself in a future case in which they participate.

By MAX ERKILETIAN

The figure being discussed for the 1978-79 Seminole County budget at the county's annual budget review this morning was $34 million. The figure settled on in three weeks may be different, however

If approved as is, the budget would jump about $4 million over the budget approved last year. Last year's budget was initially submitted to the commission at $31 million. However, at the end of the commission's review, that figure was trimmed by

The tax rate for the proposed budget will be determined by how much of the revenue comes from property taxes, according to Terry Goembel, County Tax Appraiser.

"Once the commission sets the final budget then they will know how much revenue will come from fees, the state and federal government," said Goembel. "Then they can figure the amount they will need from real estate taxes and from that they can set the millage."
