Storm to drop 10 inches of rain

MIAMI - Central and South Florida can expect up to 10 inches of rain over the next two days as a tropical disturbance forming in the northwest Caribbean Sea heads northeastward, forecasters said today.

Citing satellite data, the forecasters at the National Hurricane Center in suburban Coral Gables said the system was poorly organized and "persists within an environment unsuitable for rapid development."

The greatest threat from this system is its potential for heavy rains across portions of Central and South Florida, with 5 to 10 inches of rain possible by late Tuesday, the forecasters said.

The disturbance was forming from a broad low-pressure area in the extreme northwest Caribbean and was drifting slowly north-northeast. It was expected to enter the extreme southeastern Gulf of Mexico by late today and edge close to Southwest Florida by late Tuesday.

"Although the primary concern with this system continues to be heavy rains, residents along the coast from the lower keys to Central Florida should watch the situation closely," the forecasters said. Boaters were discouraged from venturing into the Florida Straits and the southeast Gulf.

No jackpot winners

TALLAHASSEE - No one won the latest Florida Lotto jackpot, and Lottery officials estimated the rollover will boost the next grand prize to $17 million.

This is the first rollover of the Lotto jackpot in nearly two months.

"We are very excited that Lotto has rolled over, giving our players a chance at the larger jackpot this week," Lottery Secretary Marcia Mann said Sunday.

Area Vietnam vets recall controversial conflict

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD - For many former service men and women, Memorial Day is a time for reflection. In addition to recalling their fallen comrades, many think back about the victories and battles that were won.

Such is not the case for many veterans of the Vietnam conflict, the most criticized of all wars and one in which America could not claim victory. Vietnam veterans are the youngest, save some Desert Storm veterans, to have seen full-scale battle. Some are critical of American involvement and the treatment soldiers received during and after the war. Some wish just to forget. Most are proud to have done their duty.

In central Florida, Vietnam veterans are found in almost all occupations, including some local city

Police Chief: Vets deserve better

Longwood Police Chief Greg Manning served in combat as an enlisted man in the U.S. Marines. "As far as the vets of that war are concerned," he said, "I think the people treat them better than the government."

"Just look at the veterans hospital we have, or in some cases, those we don't have," he continued. "Some of the veterans will spend the rest of their lives in them, but if you visit the facilities, you'll know that veterans deserve much more than what they are getting."

As for acceptance by other veterans he commented, "We didn't have any more or less hard conditions than people in any other war, but the way some of the Vietnam vets talk, you would think they faced more serious problems."

"As far as this type of vet is concerned," he added, "you can sympathize and support them, but you can't help them. They join together to console with each other, but they have got to get out and realize that there are others who would be supportive if given a chance."

As far as service clubs are concerned, Manning said, "The doors to clubs such as the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars are open to these vets, but they believe

Clinton faces ghosts of youth at Vietnam vets memorial

By RON FOURNIER

WASHINGTON - President Clinton, who opposed the Vietnam War and once thanked a mentor for saving him from the draft, faced the ghosts of his youth by deciding to speak at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial on his first Memorial Day as commander-in-chief.

"I can't run away," he said. The president was speaking during ceremonies today at the black marble wall that serves as a stark reminder of the thousands of lives lost and a generation torn apart over the Asian conflict.

He also was visiting Arlington Cemetery and signing a proclamation in honor of the 50th anniversary of World War II.

His speech at the Wall was sure to anger some veterans and their families, and was a risky political

Women vets earn place in history

SANFORD - A memorial in honor of women military service veterans has been in the planning stages for almost a decade. This November, it will become a reality.

Florence N. Strickler of Fern Park is lead representative for this nationwide project in the Central Florida area. She needs input from women who served in the armed forces as well as families, relatives and friends.

The structure, to be built at the entrance of Arlington National Cemetery, is to be called "Women in Military Service for America Memorial."

This isn't just a building with a bunch of names tacked on the wall," Strickler said. "This will be a point of historical reference as well as an educational center.

"Once the project is completed," she explained, "people will be able to go into the exhibit area, punch up a name on the computer, and see not only the information, but a brief history of the woman's military service, and in many cases, a photo."

Women in military service stretch back some 200 years in history," she said, "we hope to have possibly 1.8 million listings, so you could even look up, for example, your great aunt who may have served in WW I and find out all about military service."

"We have some 80,000 women in Florida who served in the various military forces," Strickler said. "I'm trying to locate as many of them as possible or their descendants, to give them a form to fill out and

Midway water woes include fire hydrants

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

MIDWAY - A home owner's complaint that his insurance company threatened to cancel his policy because of the lack of working neighborhood fire hydrants has brought into focus the ongoing water problems of this small community east of Sanford.

Checking and maintaining the fire hydrants is the responsibility of the utility company, according to Seminole County Public Safety Director Gary Kaiser. That was news to Wilton Royser, who was appointed late last year as director for Midway-Canaan Water Association.

"I've seen firemen checking the hydrant in front of our office," Royser said.

Fire Chief Tom Schaefer at station #11 serving Midway acknowledges several area fire hydrants are not operational but said it is not a new problem.

"There are at least eight hydrants that are out of service," Schaefer said, "some of them we know have water in them, but we can't get the operating nuts off."

"This is not a new problem," he added, "it is one that has been going on for over 18 years. We don't count on the hydrants anyway."

Schaefer said fire trucks carry water to the scene of a fire and a 6,000-gallon tanker truck is kept at the Midway station. If necessary, the

HRS backs out of abuse investigations in school

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD - The restructuring of the department of Health and Rehabilitative Services (HRS) will bring some relief to school employees unjustly accused in child abuse cases.

According to Nancy Wheeler, executive director of Seminole Unserve, the employees' union in Seminole County, HRS will stop investigating allegations about abuse by school employees on Oct. 1.

"Unofficially, they have already stopped accepting some of the smaller complaints," Wheeler explained.

The school district will now take on the responsibility of investigating complaints against employees. When it is warranted, law enforcement departments will be involved in the investigation.

Wheeler said that the FIP-NEA (the state organization of the local union) has been fighting for the change at the state level for several years.

"Really, though, because of the reorganization, they did this on their own," she said.

Wheeler said that tax dollars and emotions have been needlessly spent on countless unfounded complaints.

"It has become a sport," she said. "Students who are ticked off at a teacher or a parent who can't get a teacher to change a grade will file a complaint."

Fugitive still at large

ARCADIA — A man imprisoned on a 120-year sentence remained at large Sunday, and additional charges were brought against his parolee-mother who helped him escape from DeSoto Correctional Institution, police said.

A two-county manhunt for Buddy Rollison entered its second day Sunday as prison search dogs, Florida Highway Patrol officials and sheriff's deputies from Charlotte and DeSoto counties combed the largely rural area, said DeSoto County Sheriff's Sgt. W.F. Bevis.

Rollison, 32, of Fort Lauderdale, climbed over the prison's 8-foot and 10-foot walls — wired with security systems and draped with razor wire — Saturday morning and took off in a waiting car, said prison spokesman Bob Helne.

A 20-mile chase ended with Rollison fleeing from the car on foot near the Charlotte County line and the arrest of his mother, Jimmie J. Lockler Wyzyskowski, 52, of Chiefland.

Wyzyskowski, who was paroled after serving about 10 years of a life sentence for attempted murder and conspiracy to commit armed robbery in 1981 in Suwannee County, was being held Sunday in DeSoto County Jail on $13,831 bond.

She is charged with willful and wanton reckless driving; possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony; possession of a firearm by a convicted felon; possession of a police scanner; and aiding in an escape, a felony, said Jail Sgt. Darrell Massey.

Rollison, sentenced in 1982 in Broward County to 120 years for false imprisonment, robbery and grand theft, had been in prison since 1983, Helne said.

Bevis said Rollison was believed to be in either Charlotte or DeSoto counties, but a statewide bulletin had gone out to all law enforcement officials.

Rollison, who is 5-foot-7, 220 pounds, was last seen wearing his prison-issued blue pants rolled up to look like shorts and a white T-shirt.

Jazz innovator Sun Ra dead at 79

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Sun Ra, a trailblazing jazz musician and avant-garde composer for 60 years, has died after a series of strokes. He was 79.

Ra died Sunday at Baptist Medical Center-Princeton, where he had been hospitalized because of the strokes and chronic circulatory problems since Jan. 22, hospital spokesman Greg Bryant said.

He gained recognition in the jazz world for encompassing everything from pop and gospel to blues and electronic sounds.

"He was the last of the big band leaders and arrangers in the tradition of Fletcher Henderson, Duke Ellington and Count Basie," said Robert Cogan, chair of graduate theoretical studies at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston.

"At the same time, he was one of the great experimental music creators in this country in the jazz tradition."

Ra said his experimental sound often was criticized as "out to far."

"But they can't convince all of the people of that, and I bridge the generation gap," he told The Associated Press in 1985.

Rolling Stone magazine this year called him "the missing link between Duke Ellington and Public Enemy." Ten of his recordings made between 1938 and 1980 recently were re-released.

Neighborhood back to normal

MIAMI — Florida National Guard troops packed their gear and went home as calm and a holiday atmosphere prevailed in Miami's inner city, two days after a policeman was acquitted in the deaths of two black men.

The verdict Friday in the case of suspended Officer William Lozano was followed by a night of brief disturbances and sporadic rock-and-bottle-throwing.

But police reported no incidents Saturday and Sunday. Barricades that cordoned off the predominantly black Overtown and Liberty City neighborhoods were lifted.

"Very quiet, all day long and we expect it to continue that way," Miami police spokesman Armando Villorin said late Sunday.

Police remained on 12-hour shifts heading into Memorial Day. Some 200 members of the National Guard, who had been on standby alert at an armory, were told early Sunday by Gov. Lawton Chiles that they could go home.

"I think we're all thankful that it turned out the way it did," said the Guard's spokesman, Lt. Col. Ken Forrester.

A holiday atmosphere prevailed during the rain-splashed weekend.

"I just want to be able to enjoy Memorial Day," Patricia Butler, 28, said Saturday while riding her bike. She said she was looking forward to a holiday basketball tournament today.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

Where will they go?

Some mentally ill to go upstate with closing of hospital

By Associated Press

PEMBROKE PINES — The closing of the regional state hospital for the mentally ill in this Fort Lauderdale suburb means fewer available beds and hospitalization far from home for those needing treatment.

South Florida State Hospital serves people from Indian River County south to Key West and its 355 beds are always full. At any one time, more than 100 people are waiting to get in.

But the scheduled closing of the Pembroke Pines facility leaves the state with but three hospitals for the mentally ill. The nearest is G. Pierce Wood Memorial Hospital, near Arcadia in DeSoto County. Next is Northeast Florida State Hospital at Macclenny west of Jacksonville; the farthest — 500 miles far — is Florida State Hospital, at Chattahoochee in the Florida Panhandle.

Initially, about 80 people waiting to enter South Florida State from state forensic hospitals will get sent upstate. Others on that list, including some patients now at South Florida, may be sent later.

Bob Williams, administrator at Chattahoochee, says he'll be ready to accept South Florida residents by late June. But since his beds are already full, some Panhandle people on his waiting list will have to wait longer for a bed.

"This issue to me is that nobody has enough, not even up here," Williams told The Miami Herald.

"It's like deja vu — we're back to shipping people north all over again," complains Rebecca Cox, an assistant public defender who represents mentally ill people at commitment hearings in Dade County. Local officials of the Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, who sometimes were forced to keep people waiting five years for bed space at South Florida, say they, too, have misgivings about having to send troubled people so far away from home.

"There's a real moral dilemma here," admits Anita Bock, deputy HRS administrator for the Dade and Monroe district. "What happens when someone has local ties, local families?"

"A parent who puts a child in a hospital already suffers a lot of guilt, without having that child moved out of the area where they can't see them."

Williams, who was state HRS secretary until stepping down under pressure earlier this year, agreed with patient advocates who say the state should be shifting money around, not patients.

"Instead of tearing down the things that we already have, I would put any additional resources into South Florida," Williams said. "We all need to be supporting each other."

Navy plans to loan dolphins

By Associated Press

CLEARWATER BEACH — The U.S. Navy plans to loan a dolphin to the Clearwater Marine Science Center, but a federal agency may have something to say about that — and an animal activist certainly does.

Navy spokesman Tom LaPuzza said the dolphin will be shipped sometime in the next few months, but a spokesman for the National Marine Fisheries says the loan won't go through before it's discussed with the agency.

Last week, the Navy loaned three dolphins to Disney's Epcot Center in Orlando.

Just like a tourist attraction, the Navy is supposed to get permission from the fisheries agency to take, maintain and move marine mammals. However, agency spokesman Scott Smullen said it had no clue the Navy was shipping dolphins around the country.

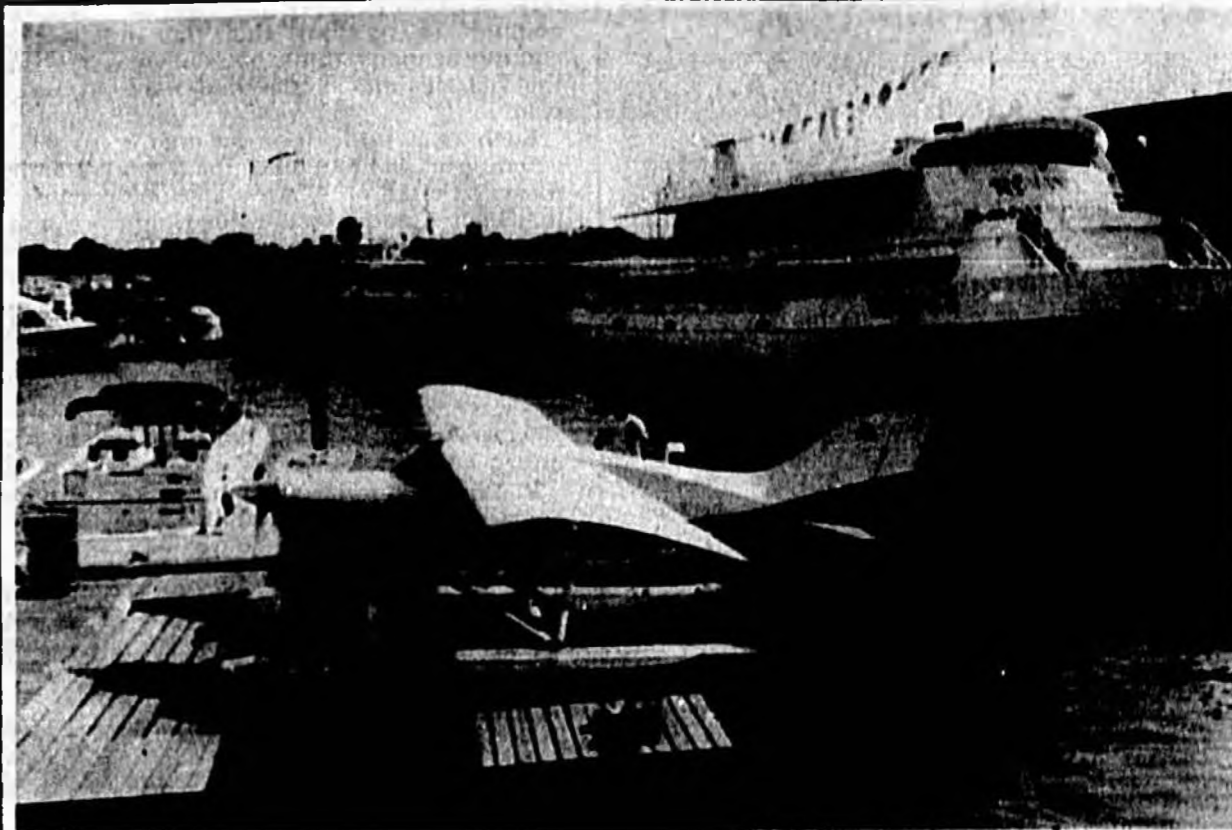

"We're discussing the whole situation now with the Navy and the facility that received the dolphins," he told the St. Petersburg Times in a Sunday story.

Besides the three females shipped to Epcot Center for breeding purposes, the Navy shipped a male to the Marine Life Aquarium in Rapid City, S.D., earlier this month.

The Navy is lending its dolphins largely because of military budget cutbacks, according to LaPuzza.

The Navy is one of the largest holders of marine mammals in the nation, with about 135 by recent count. Most are at the Navy's San Diego training complex, but a handful are at naval installations around the world.

"The Navy has studied marine mammals for two basic reasons," LaPuzza said. "The first is basic research: How does a dolphin's sonar work like that, and what might we be able to learn from it? The second area is in naval operations: We use them to recover things from the ocean."

A natural attraction

With Lake Monroe and the St. Johns River being the area's main attraction, tourists are naturally attracted to the beauty of the river and the intrigue of its wildlife. The Romance, Grand Romance and the newest addition, a seaplane enable visitors to become part of the scenery.

Urban sprawl crowding in on county's last dairy

By Associated Press

DELRAY BEACH — Billy Bowman remembers when Palm Beach County had more than 100 dairy farms. Away from the Palm Beaches and other coastal cities, the county was country.

The shopping center where he sometimes has lunch was a dairy. Nearby, a sprawling community that is home to thousands of retirees was once the grazing land for herds of cows.

Today, Bowman owns the last dairy farm in Palm Beach County.

"The other owners sold their land, took the money and built bigger and better dairies in Okeechobee," he said. "That's the value of real estate to a farmer."

Bowman, 55, is a third-generation farmer whose grandfather founded a dairy in northern Dade County in 1926 that is now the site of Joe Robbie Stadium.

Squeezed by development, the family sold out and moved to Palm Beach County in 1956. They were able to use land profits to expand their operation from a 400-cow herd to one with 1,100 cows.

"Development can be good for the farmer," said Bowman, who tends 980 acres of pasture land. But the farmer can gain a lot only if government planners and zoning officials let farm land be sold as developable property, instead of keeping it zoned only for agriculture.

His dairy is in Palm Beach County's Agricultural Reserve. With the development restrictions that zoning carries, Bowman says he couldn't sell now and join the exodus to Okeechobee and beyond even if he wanted to.

"There are no buyers, and I'd lose money if I moved now because my land values are too low," he said.

The lanky, boot-clad cowboy is well known among the county's elite, having hosted dozens of barbecues over the years to raise money for politics and charity.

He is well-known by other farmers, too. In the early 1970s he organized the fight against the county move to zone farm lands strictly for agriculture.

Bowman said he hasn't decided what he will do if the county eases development restrictions in the Ag Reserve.

POLICE BRIEFS

Suspended driver license

Lisa A. Jenkins, 28, 2191 Dixie Ave., Sanford, was charged with driving with a suspended driver license by Seminole County sheriff's deputies.

Deputies said she failed to signal for a turn and was stopped. A check of her license revealed that it had been suspended twice in New York and that she did not have a Florida license.

She was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $100 bond.

Drug arrest made

Frank J. Mascaro, 34, 104 Bunker Lane, Sanford, was charged with possession of less than 20 grams of marijuana and with possession of drug paraphernalia by Sanford Police.

Police said they saw two gentlemen standing outside a tavern on Airport Boulevard on Friday night and saw them concealing something in their hands.

As officers approached, they said, Mascaro ran and was caught 100 yards away.

When he was caught, his path was retraced and officers found a small bag containing three grams of a substance that later tested positive as marijuana in an isolated area nearby.

Mascaro was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held in lieu of $500 bond.

Domestic violence alleged

Morris Barber Jr., 33, 1120 Florida Ave., Apt. 504, Sanford, was charged with domestic violence by Sanford Police on Saturday.

Police said he and his girlfriend got into a fight when he returned home and she said he kicked her in the head during the altercation.

Witnesses supported her story. Barber was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $2,500 bond.

Warrant arrests

Jason Ward Dunn, 21, 900 Paola Rd., Lake Mary, was charged by Seminole County sheriff's officers in connection with a warrant of violating the terms of his probation on disorderly conduct charges.

He was held on $10,000 bond at the John E. Polk Correctional Facility.

Bobbie Gail Ruffin, 34, 1810 Southwest Rd., Sanford, was charged in connection with failing to appear in court on theft charges by Seminole County sheriff's officers on Friday.

Deputies said he was located at the labor camp on Celery Avenue.

They took him to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility where he was held on $500 bond.

Domestic violence

Henry Jelks, 36, 1403 W. 16th St., Sanford, was charged with domestic violence by Sanford Police on Friday.

Traffic accident leads to charges

Albert Anderson Smith, 65, 541 Plumosa Dr. Sanford, was charged with driving with a revoked driver license and with violating a traffic control device by Sanford Police on Friday.

Police said he was involved in a traffic accident at the intersection of Sanford Avenue and 20th Street.

They said he had no driver license, but he did have a Florida identification card. A computer check revealed his license had been revoked for 60 months because he was a habitual traffic offender.

He was held at the John E. Polk Correctional Facility on $500 bond.

Incidents reported to the sheriff

Renee Marie Keith, 416 Crystal Dr., Sanford, reported to the sheriff's office that an acquaintance pulled a canister from behind her back and sprayed Keith's dog with some sort of liquid. Keith said the dog never left her yard and never barked or made an aggressive move toward the acquaintance.

Thomas Karapiperis, 26, 1094 Oleander, Longwood, was charged with possession of marijuana, assignment to commit prostitution and fleeing and attempting to elude a police officer on Thursday by Seminole County sheriff's officers.

Deputies said that he had stopped to "warn" and undercover agent who was posing as a prostitute for a sting operation that there were police behind the building where she was "working."

He then offered to trade some marijuana for sex, they said. The agent signaled for an arrest and Karapiperis attempted to flee, deputies said.

Deputies lost sight of him, but he was located soon after at his residence. The undercover agent positively identified him.

He was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $500 bond.

Cop forced to kill his pet python

By The Associated Press

PINEHURST, N.C. — Police officers are trained to handle life and death struggles, but they don't expect to use that training on their pet.

Pinehurst Police Officer Scott McLeod was feeding a chicken to his 12-foot Burmese Python at home when the snake went for his hand instead.

The snake latched onto his right hand and started to wrap around his arm. Pythons kill their prey by squeezing it.

"I had to wrestle the thing to keep it from getting to my upper body," he said.

McLeod said he didn't panic. With the help of his roommate's girlfriend, he cut the snake with a knife, but the 7-inch gash had no effect.

The woman retrieved one of the McLeod's guns and he was able to shoot the snake in the head. Only then was he able to pry the python off, about five minutes after it bit him.

McLeod said his hand swelled to about the size of a softball.

Man nabbed in boy's compactor death

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — An alert Texas state trooper stopped a newly repainted car and ended a five-state hunt for the man sought in the killing of a 4-year-old boy found in a trash compactor.

Stephan Poole, 31, was charged Sunday with murder in the May 20 death of his wife's foster son, Kayesean Blackledge. The boy was strangled and beaten before being thrown down the trash chute, police said.

Police say Poole drove the child from their New Jersey home to a Brooklyn housing project and killed him.

Poole could be returned to New York as early as today unless he fights extradition. If convicted, he faces a maximum of life in prison.

New York City detectives went to Tallahassee, Fla., on Wednesday after learning that Poole was there, said Vincent Pizzo, the chief of Housing Police detectives.

They followed his trail to Crestview, Fla.; Biloxi, Miss. and Conroe, Texas. Believing he was headed for Dallas, police issued a felony alert to Texas authorities.

At 2 p.m. Saturday, a Texas state trooper stopped Poole on an interstate in Huntsville. Police had been looking for a gray Subaru. Poole was driving a Subaru repainted brown but still with New York plates.

Kayesean was killed after Poole fought with his wife, Dana Blackledge-Poole. The argument had nothing to do with the child, Pizzo said.

Poole was a New York City sanitation inspector whose territory included East New York, where Kayesean's body was found.

Poole's first wife was found dead three months after they were married. Her death originally was attributed to natural causes, but police have reopened the case.

3 new cases reported in epidemic

By ED MORENO
Associated Press Writer

SANTA FE, N.M. — A small army of medical investigators swarmed over a sprawling Navajo reservation looking for clues to the cause of a mysterious epidemic that has killed 10 people and sickened more than a dozen others.

Three more people were hospitalized Sunday with the flu-like illness, which doctors say usually strikes suddenly and can kill in a day.

Officials said they are checking 25 possible cases, 19 of those among Indians. Most victims lived on or near the Navajo reservation straddling northwestern New Mexico and northeastern Arizona.

Four people appear to have recovered, but doctors say they do not know whether treatment — primarily with antibiotics — is responsible.

"I don't know that we can say with any confidence that individuals have responded or survived because of what we've done for them," said Dr. Gary Simpson of the New Mexico health department.

Several other suspected cases were found to be unrelated, including one in Colorado.

Investigators were searching for an infectious substance, a toxic chemical or some other cause, but have come up with nothing. They say the illness may be contagious, but not highly contagious since most family members and others who were in contact with victims have not developed it.

Health officials said what makes the disease — dubbed unexplained adult respiratory distress syndrome — so difficult to catch and treat is that it escalates quickly.

"The early symptoms are extremely non-specific. They're your basic cold and flu symptoms," said Dr. Jim Cheek of the Indian Health Service. "We don't know whether we have a good way to tell who's going to just have a regular cold and who's going to go on to develop ARDS."

Looking at board members

City and county commissioners may be perceived as being the top policy makers. They don't do their jobs alone however. Commissions rely heavily on various boards and committees that are appointed.

It is important that members of these boards must not only be knowledgeable but dependable and reliable.

Last Monday, in discussing re-appointments to several boards, members of the Sanford City Commission suggested attendance records should be made available before any decisions are made.

We believe this is an excellent suggestion, and worth consideration by other cities and the county as well.

Several important committee and board meetings have been forced to be cancelled in the past year due to the lack of a quorum. In other instances, highly important decisions have been made with less than a full board on hand. It has a tendency to reduce the amount of input and discussion which could have been made.

Governments rely on boards such as planning and zoning, code enforcement, and others, to be the eyes and ears of government. When members of the public bring a request before a board, they deserve the right to be heard and the matter to be judged as fairly as possible.

Without a full board, this right is denied, and there is a risk that a wrong decision might be made.

We commend the Sanford City Commission for being concerned over the membership of its boards and committees.

Other government bodies who may have a tendency to re-appoint persons should copy Sanford's move. It will not only provide better boards, but a better governmental operation for leaders as well as citizens.

Clinton and Bosnia

President Clinton is struggling over the U.S. policy in Bosnia. The American public is sharply divided and our allies are reluctant to take any military action. His relations with the U.S. military continues to be poor with the latest problem being his proposed appearance at the Vietnam Wall on Memorial Day.

The president's lack of success is in sharp contrast to President Bush's ability to unite our country and the United Nations in support of Desert Storm. It is hard to pinpoint the causes of the uneasiness felt at home and abroad about the Clinton foreign policy. Many young Americans, like President Clinton, did not want to go to Vietnam and did what they could to stay out of the draft. Many U.S. presidents did not serve in the military nor had any experience in foreign affairs. Many U.S. presidents came from small towns or small states and many U.S. presidents were at odds with the military.

Whatever the reasons, President Clinton does not have the firm base of support necessary for U.S. action in Bosnia. He is spread thin on many issues and appears to be wasting his political capital on secondary problems, such as gays in the military. Our allies and our enemies are well aware of his falling popularity.

President Clinton needs to specifically outline U.S. policy in Bosnia. He must then use his tremendous political skills to sell the public and the Congress on the fact that Bosnia will not be another Vietnam. And although the question is not fair, he must answer why young American men and women should be sent to Bosnia to put their lives at risk when President Clinton and many of his generation not only opposed Vietnam and demonstrated against U.S. policy there, but did everything they could to avoid going to Vietnam.

If President Clinton falls in Bosnia, he will be perceived as politically weak. This will not only impact foreign policy, but hurt his chances to pass his domestic program. Even though he is only in his fourth month as president, much is at stake. There is no question that his handling of the Bosnia crises will set the tone for the rest of his administration and impact dramatically the possibility of his re-election.

New frontier for sexual harassment

Chris Robison, a graduate student in psychology at the large University of Nebraska at Lincoln, is an assistant in that department. He administers tests to undergraduates. Until recently, Robison had on his desk a photograph of his wife, wearing a bikini. It was of modest size, 5-by-7 inches.

Sharing the office are two women who are also graduate students. They demanded that the picture be removed because it violated the university's sexual harassment policy in that it created a hostile work environment. The two women did not claim that Robison himself had — by language or in any physical manner — harassed them. But — as the chairman of the department, Professor John Berman, has since ruled — the photo could be offensive to many of the female students who come into the office. They would be uncomfortable, he believes. None of them apparently had ever been to the beach or a lake.

The photograph came down on order of the chairman, Robison told Betty Van Deventer of the Lincoln Journal-Star: "I cannot risk the very real consequences of putting the photo up again. As a first-year graduate student, (there) would be serious indirect consequences of doing that."

But Robison may already be a marked man in the dossiers of the sensitivity police. In a letter to Carmen Maurer, the university's assistant general counsel, he had the temerity to actually challenge the feel-good orthodoxy of the university.

"Since this started, I was told by an administrator, 'We want you to do and say whatever you feel — at home.' Public debate on this campus is being discouraged, even restricted. A political ideology is being enforced in an environment intended to promote diversity."

One of the few professors to take the banning of the photograph as seriously as Robison was David Moshman.

He who teaches educational psychology and is chairman of the Committee on Academic Freedom and Tenure. He was concerned, as he told the assistant general counsel, that she — in an official statement — was giving far too much leeway to heads of departments in their deciding what they chose to ban as interfering with the "efficient operation" of their spheres. All they needed as a standard, she said, was their own "reasonable judgment."

Carmen Maurer noted in that statement that "I have not seen the photograph, but feel no need to make any judgment concerning its content in order to respond to this matter."

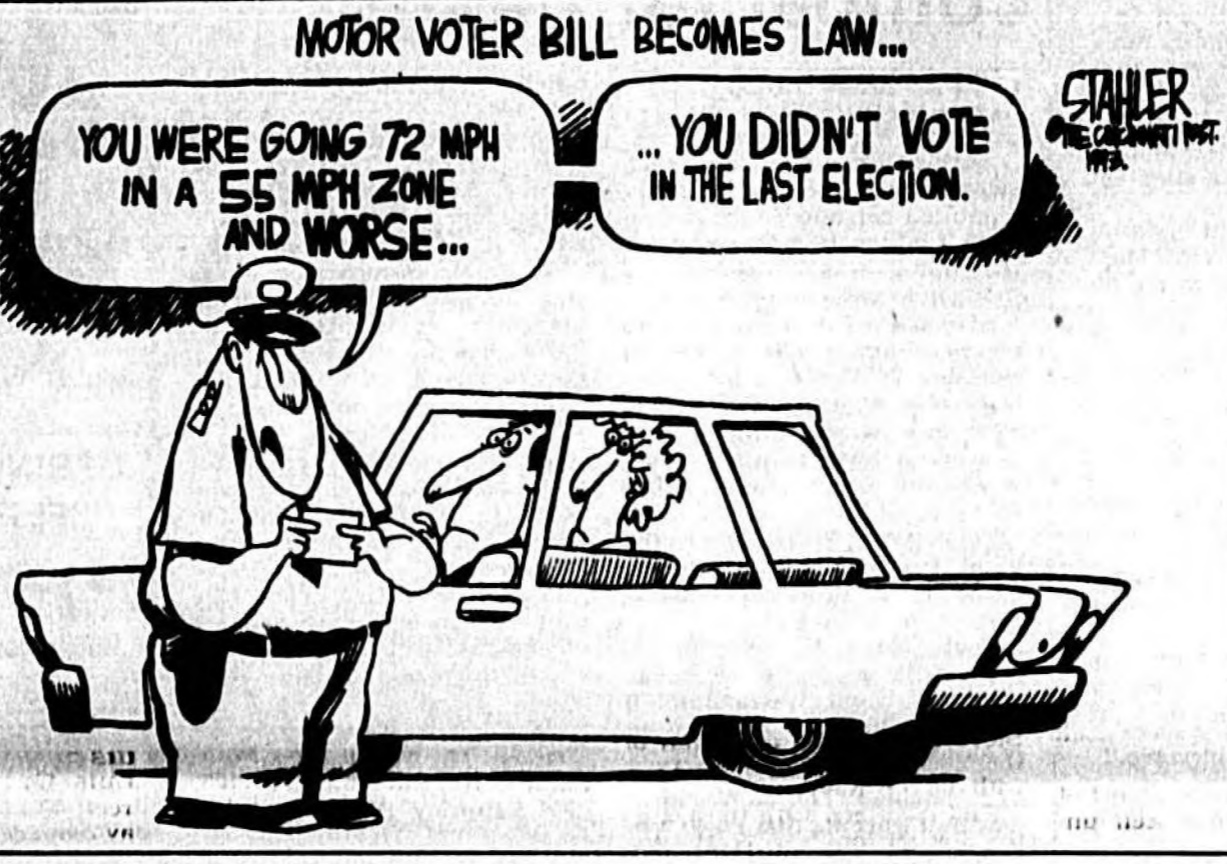

This was a rather novel legal judgment in a public university. Under the First Amendment — as Professor Moshman told her — there cannot be content-based censorship or viewpoint-based censorship unless the university shows a compelling interest in getting rid of, let us say, a photograph of a student's wife. No compelling interest has been provided in the case of the photo of Mrs. Robison.

Since the university administrators cannot control the outside press for reasons of internal efficiency, the Lincoln Journal-Star, in an editorial, asked some impolite — but quite pertinent — questions:

"What if it wasn't a bikini? What if Chris Robison's wife had been wearing a one-piece swimsuit in the photograph? Could it have stayed on his desk?"

But Robison may already be a marked man in the dossiers of the sensitivity police.

Judge rules against Big Tobacco

A circuit court judge in my hometown of Greenville, Miss., played Toto to the tobacco industry's Wizard of Oz earlier this month. In a ruling that parted the curtain of illusion behind which Big Tobacco has long hidden, Judge Eugene Bogen put the lie to the industry's favorite defense. The problem with cigarettes is quite simple, he said: "... When used as intended, they cause cancer, emphysema, heart disease and other illnesses."

In other words, cigarettes by definition are defective products. Consequently, the fact that an individual voluntarily chooses to smoke is beside the point. What matters is that cigarettes are "the most lethal product which may be legally sold in the country." When a consumer smokes a cigarette he does exactly what the company intends him to do, and thus he cannot logically be said to have misused the product when it causes him damage.

That is not the way Big Tobacco sees it. The industry does not admit that its chief product is a killer. Even if it were, say its spokesmen, smokers knowingly assume the risks and are therefore solely responsible for the consequences.

Before Judge Bogen's ruling, that "heads I win, tails you lose" reasoning was enough for judges and juries. Measmered by the arguments about individual volition, they failed to focus on the product itself. The mounting and now irrefutable scientific proof that smoking is inherently harmful was all but ignored. The name of the legal game was "blame the victim." According to The New York Times, "no plaintiff in a health-related case has ever collected anything from the tobacco industry."

The plaintiffs in the Mississippi case may not, either. They are the two children of Anderson Smith, who died of lung cancer six years ago after smoking three packs of cigarettes a day for over 40 years. What has not been proved before a jury is the actual cause of his death. Further, anti-smoking fervor is less advanced back in my old state than in some other places. It's entirely possible that despite Bogen's pretrial ruling, the trial jury will follow precedent and decide that Smith, who was mentally incompetent for much of his adult life, "brought it on himself." The case is set for hearing on June 7.

But Judge Bogen has broken through the legal firewall that separated cause from effect, tobacco industry action from tobacco industry responsibility. Smoking per se is dangerous, he has said. Other judges may be inspired to do no less.

It's possible the legislative branch will get there first. The clamor for tighter controls on smoking is mounting in intensity. Whether at the local, state or federal level, proposals for clampdowns are a regular feature of life. Illustratively, a bill introduced in Congress last week would simplify and strengthen government regulation of tobacco products. Instead of the clutch of departments and agencies that currently share oversight, the Food and Drug Administration would supervise everything from the manufacturing to the advertising of cigarettes, cigars, pipe tobacco and the like. "This is their not very clever way of banning tobacco products," an industry representative was quoted as saying.

The rationale cited by the proposal's sponsors lies behind Judge Bogen's ruling as well. The nation spends $65 billion a year on smoking-related conditions ranging from lung disease to property damage. Use of tobacco is directly tied to the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives. Most of the deaths and other costs were the direct consequence of using "ordinary, well-made cigarettes" exactly as the manufacturer intended, a point made searingly explicit by Bogen.

Which raises another interesting notion. Most of us don't realize how much the taxpayer is footing the bill for the destruction wrought by smoking. "Take a look at public and Veteran's Administration hospitals," one expert said to me recently, "and note how many of the patients are suffering from smoking-related illnesses. It's astonishing."

His solution? The Clinton administration should exclude all illnesses attributed to smoking from its health-care package. "Tell the tobacco companies to take care of them," he said. "Tell smokers that their health problems are between them and the manufacturers who make the products they love too much to give up. Overnight, national health insurance becomes an affordable project."

That's a politically undoable, of course, if for no other reason than smoking is less a matter of choice than it is of addiction. While juries may rule otherwise, most people know that addiction is more complicated than a simple failure of free will.

But now, thanks to Judge Eugene Bogen (who is an old friend), we're closer to the day when the nation finally faces up to the underlying issue. The fault lies not in the smoker, but in the product, not in abuse but in normal use. Once that threshold is crossed, the legal and legislative conclusions will be inescapable.

Consequently, the fact that an individual voluntarily chooses to smoke is beside the point.

SARAH OVERSTREET

On the Memorial Days of our lives

I'm not sure to what I should attribute the growing feelings of gratitude and loss I feel each Memorial Day. Perhaps hitting middle age, when we get some of the greatest opportunities of our lives, makes us understand what it is to lose it all before you even get started.

The rows and rows of white gravestones in the national cemetery where I visit my friend's grave bother me more each year.

Ditto for the old film clips of men dying on battlefields. So much promise, so little time and such awful leave-taking.

My generation was the first in this country to protest modern war in the numbers and on the scale we did. We objected on the grounds that our government was making political decisions that were good for neither the people of Vietnam nor America, that our leaders were lying to us and squandering the lives of our young men.

Some Americans ultimately came to the decision that war is almost never the answer to disputes either within or between nations. My friend Linda Halford, a former Army nurse who served two years in Vietnam, has believed this for over 23 years. She is not sure when this conviction crystallized during the tour of duty she remembers as "12 hours of death, seven days a week," but there was one episode that stands out in her memory.

"I worked shifts from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m., and one night I was talking to this young man who was really messed up," she told me. "He was talking about growing up in a religious family where they told him it was against God's will to kill, and then we sent him there to kill. I was trying to help him through some of this, and started to ask myself, 'For what purpose is this 18-year-old boy going home a cripple?' You get to where you can't bear it any more — all these young men being blown to bits — and you begin to know there can't be anything worth this."

I think for years after the Vietnam War many of us struggled with our dual feelings of hating war itself while being grateful to the men and women who fought. We wondered how we would teach our children to honor these heroes without glorifying war, without creating an unquestioning trust in leaders who may someday mispend their lives for a political purpose, as if they were no more than toy soldiers in a game of egos.

This Memorial Day we stand again at the precipice of a conflict that the majority of American people don't understand any better than we understood Vietnam. The stories of atrocities in Bosnia-Herzegovina horrify us. Strategists alternately warn us of what isolationism brought us in the past, of the similarities of Hitler's "final solution" and of the ages-old, hate-fueled suckhole that was once Yugoslavia. Other commentators remind us of the mistakes we made in getting mired in Vietnam without understanding its conflicts or its people.

We look at two prospects, without knowing the probability of either: Once again, more of our own die to bring about a reasonably swift end to the suffering of others; or we become entangled in another long, frustrating period of national immolation.

Recently, on National Public Radio, I listened to an impassioned plea from a woman who had lived in Yugoslavia. She used the phrase "I DEMAND" over and over, insisting that the leaders of the world and everyone within the sound of her voice go to Bosnia and rescue her friends.

Two decades ago, I heard women whose voices sounded just like hers use the same verb, demanding that we stop sending their sons to be maimed and killed in Vietnam.

So much promise, so little time and such awful leave-taking.

Clinton

move for an already battered president.

On the one hand, it called attention to the controversy over his efforts to avoid the draft, evidence to some that Clinton — then and now — can be shallow, selfish and "slick." But it also offered him the chance to bury the matter as a political issue, while helping his generation — and the country — come to grips with the anger and angst wrought by the war.

His appearance was the first for a president at the Wall on Memorial Day, although President Reagan attended Veterans Day ceremonies there and President Bush made an appearance on Flag Day.

Reagan and Bush also made private visits, as Clinton says he has done — both before being elected president and since.

Many veterans welcomed the Clinton decision to make a formal Memorial Day address at the Wall. Jan Scruggs, who heads the commission that built the memorial, said Clinton's decision to attend the ceremonies was "nothing short of courageous."

A CBS News poll released Sunday indicated that almost three out of four Americans believe it is appropriate for Clinton to take part in the ceremonies. Seventy-four percent said it was, 22 percent said it was not and 4 percent did not know or failed to answer. Among veterans, 69 percent thought it was appropriate and 28 percent thought otherwise.

The telephone poll surveyed a nationwide random sample of 1,184 adults Thursday through Saturday. The margin of error was 3 percentage points.

As a student at Oxford, Clinton had already been ordered to report for induction when he joined the University of Arkansas ROTC program to get a deferment. He later gave up the deferment — saying it wasn't the right thing to do when others were dying — but his risk of being drafted already was greatly reduced. He was accused of pulling strings, and left many questions about his efforts unanswered during the presidential campaign.

Clear of the draft in late 1969, Clinton wrote a letter to his ROTC commander and admitted that he had not been forthright about his objections to the war. He thanked Col. Eugene Holmes for "having me from the draft" and said he had "written and spoken and marched against the war," including twice in England.

Clinton, then 23, he said he wanted Holmes to understand "how so many fine people have come to find themselves still loving their country but loathing the military, to which you and other good men have devoted years, lifetimes, of the best service you could give."

The president was asked Saturday if he might phrase the letter differently if he were writing it today.

"Well, I'm 46 instead of 23, so I might write it differently," he told The Washington Times.

"But I can't run away from that letter. They were my feelings at that time. And I do believe that our policy was wrong, but that doesn't mean that the people who were committed to the United States and to doing what they were ordered to do by the commander in chief weren't good people."

"They were good people," Clinton said.

In the letter, he called the Vietnam-era draft "illegitimate," although it was "justified" in World War II "because the life of the people was collectively at stake."

they are different, and many don't join these clubs, even though it would be a good support group for them."

City manager: Get on with life

Sanford City Manager Bill Simmons served with the U.S. Navy Construction forces in the war. "I don't know of any reason why veterans of that war can't be synthesized into all phases of society," he said. "They shouldn't be any different than veterans of any other war."

"The problem here however," he continued, "is that there was more hype with that war. The vets themselves seemed to be blowing it out of proportion, and I don't necessarily think this is right."

Simmons added, "I went out there, did my job, and came back. Returning to me meant ...let's get on with the rest of our lives rather than continuously re-living the situation."

Building official: No complaints

City Building Official Stan Welling served with the U.S. Navy in Vietnam. "During that conflict," he said, "I had the opportunity to come back to the states twice. The first time we arrived, we received a handshake from President Nixon, but the second time we had to duck out of the airport by the back gate to avoid anti-war protesters out front."

Welling says he doesn't blame the Vietnam war for any particular problems. "I believe it's the people themselves," he said. "Most of us came back in fine shape, but some with problems, would have had similar problems no matter what war they served in."

"The complaints about being treated with less respect than veterans of other wars are coming from just a vocal few," Welling observed. "That was 25 years ago, and I haven't had any troubles. I'm doing just fine and I have no complaints."

Cop: Just leave us alone

Longwood police officer Steve Falk is also a veteran of the Vietnam conflict. He served with the U.S. Navy.

Falk has been with the Longwood police for 13 years. He also served for five years on the Apopka police force.

"We are of a different age group than the vets who served in World War I and II," he said. "They are still rah-rahing, but we just want to be left alone. We don't join the VFW or American Legion as they want us to because many of us feel they didn't support us then, and we don't need their support now."

"There was too much politicking behind the Vietnam war," he said. "We weren't

Other areas of the memorial will include a glass-enclosed landing offering views into the cultural/educational center, a theater with movies about the history of military women, a meeting room, and an area for special exhibits.

"This will be our memorial," Strickler said. "The government hasn't put a dime into this project. Anyway, the gate area at Arlington was never really completed, so this memorial will be improving that whole area."

The national organization is requesting a tax-deductible donation of $25 per listing. "It's not a large amount," Strickler said, "and we hope people will help us support this project." She added that the inability to pay however, will not prevent names from being added to the memorial, providing the information is obtained.

"I'm almost 80 years old and don't travel much," Strickler commented, "but people can phone me or write to me and I'll be happy to send them plenty of information as well as forms to fill out and forward to the national project office in Washington."

Strickler is located at 1200 Winterberry Lane, Fern Park, 32730. Her phone number is 830-0395.

tanker would be refilled quickly at operating hydrants along Celery or Cameron avenues on SR 46.

Royster said the old fire hydrants will be replaced when the community's entire water system is overhauled. The water system project is being paid for by a $750,000 grant. Engineers are close to submitting plans to the county commissioners for the project. Royster said after a water association meeting last week, after the plans are approved and bids awarded, construction of phase one should be underway this year.

"It would not be practical at this point," Royster said, "to spend a lot of money repairing the hydrants when they have the potential of being replaced when the new system is installed." He added minor, less costly repairs might be made to hydrants in the meantime.

Those who file complaints are not required to identify themselves. HRS from Tallahassee is required to investigate every complaint they receive.

"People have been calling in and reporting left and right," Wheeler said. "They have been getting progressively worse."

According to Wheeler, most of the complaints have been unfounded.

"They have to take the stance that the employee is guilty until proven innocent."

Wheeler said that it is interesting to note that HRS is already refusing to take action on complaints they are receiving about school employees.

"They will still investigate serious allegations, such as sexual abuse," Wheeler said. "But the lesser complaints are being referred to the district."

Life of a dinosaur

Elementary school students create their own Stone Age

All six of the first grade classes at Lake Mary Elementary School created dinosaurs during their study of the book "Patrick's Dinosaur" by Carol Carrick. They integrated the study of dinosaurs into their science and math courses and culminated their studies with the construction of their very own papier-mache' dinosaurs.

"Patrick's Dinosaur" is a book about a young boy with a "big" imagination. The purpose of the story is to stress the importance of imagination in writing stories and drawing pictures.

The classes "built" a Tyrannosaurus, Triceratops, Stegosaurus, Brontosaurus, Ankylosaurus and Diplorocous.

Second graders did a fine job adjusting to the CTBS testing environment. Third graders traveled to Lyman High School on May 21 to hear a concert by the Lyman band and wind ensemble.

Fourth grade students embarked upon a new theme in language arts, "Discovering Myself."

In this new area, teachers and students discuss daily how particular events affect their responses and understanding. In math they moved from multi-digit division and multiplication to the fundamentals of geometry. In science they are learning about oceans and how they must protect natural resources. The fourth graders were also given CTBS tests.

Fifth grade is finishing the current language arts theme of "Facing Challenges of Nature." Their next theme will be "Appearances Can Be Deceiving." Mrs. Thomas has two student produced videos that will be entered into a national video production contest. The plays are "Summer at Camp Apache" and "Rockinghorse Prince." The grand prize is a camcorder and other equipment.

In math, the continued study of Fractions continues throughout May. Their focus in science has been on the environment with an emphasis on recycling. Their activities included a simulated oil spill and clean up. Next, they begin studying the solar system. All fifth graders looked forward to their May 27 field trip to the Museum of Science and Industry in Tampa.

Thursday, May 20, was a day that all six first grade classes at Lake Mary Elementary heartily looked forward to for a long time. That special day was Field Day and it started at 9 a.m. and lasted until 11 a.m. "All this fun was the culmination of the PE year," said first grade teacher, Diana Ramseur. Mrs. Ramseur's class won two scooter races and a water balloon game early on into the games. So they were off to a great start. "The kids have really been looking forward to this day," said Divident mom, Donna Gillespy.

On Friday, May 21, the first graders at Lake Mary Elementary School held their Mini-Olympics. The children each received a sheet of paper with the events listed, including: paper plate discus, cotton ball shot put, paper straw javelin, right-handed bear grab and left-handed sponge squeeze. The right side of the paper had boxes for the children to guess how far an item went or how many drops comes out of the squeezed sponge. Then they had to actually measure using their feet or unifix cubes and so on. Following the Mini-Olympics they had a sheet on Polar Bear pie or popsicles. The children had to guess how many bites it would take to eat the popsicle or pie and answer other questions about it. Then at the end of the day they would be given a real Polar Bear pie or popsicle and they would actually count how many bites it took to finish it and compare that to their earlier guesses.

Budding young readers
 At Wilson Elementary School, third graders participated in the Sunshine State Young Readers Award program again.

Paperback editions of this year's titles were purchased with funds from PTA. Not only did students scramble to read them, but their teachers helped by reading some of these books aloud to the class. The voting was close, but third graders chose "Dongs Don't Tell Jokes."

The school also extends a heartfelt thank you to Judy and Paul Baschore for their time and skills in answering the call for a computer program that would record students by grade and activity. This program will be used by the media center staff periodically as a survey to determine how our students are participating in the media center.

Thank you for giving once again.

Fittipaldi wins Indy 500 with late dash

By STEVE HERMAN
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The first time Emerson Fittipaldi was the track hero in Victory Lane, it was at an Indianapolis 500, filled by the sunbaked asphalt and more speed, a winner not named Emerson, Fox or Ayrton Senna.

Four years later, he is the familiar face, grandson of an Indianapolis 500 winner, but less speed in his name winner for a race without a Fox or a Senna for the first time in 45 years.

Fittipaldi, riding a 200 mph slingshot, turned the most competitive 500 ever into a dash by the finish Sunday and spoiled the debut of Nigel Mansell, the Englishman who dared to go straight from Formula One champion to Indy winner — and almost pulled it off.

On a restart after a yellow's caution flag with 16 laps to go, Fittipaldi was the first on the gas and shot past a surprised Mansell, the race leader. By the time Mansell looked up, both Fittipaldi and Air Finlayson, the pole position starter, were in front of him.

That's the way they finished, Fittipaldi pumping his right fist into the air as he took the checkered flag for his second time and a record ninth for car owner Roger Penske.

Because of the time of my career, my age, I wanted to win a second Indy," said the 46-year-old Brazilian. "The first win at Indy was important. The second is like when I was very emotional at the end."

When I went around the track for the victory lap, I was screaming to the crew, "We won! We won!" To win this race that I watched as a 7 or 8-year-old on television is fantastic.

Fittipaldi, like Mansell, a former Formula One champion and an emigre to Indy racing, was among a record 12 drivers who accounted for 24 lead changes. True to the Penske style, that four-time winner Rick Mears performed better, retaining this year, Fittipaldi had his time most of the race and never led until his final charge.

At that time I was concerned about Arie, because I knew he was coming quick as well. I knew I could go through I was going to be faster than Nigel and Arie."

Fielding leagues, tourneys a county strength

Play your game. Play to your strengths. Stay within yourself.

No, we're not playing. Name that cheerleader if you're not for another day. Rather, these are sports metaphors. They're the best that we can do for what you do best.

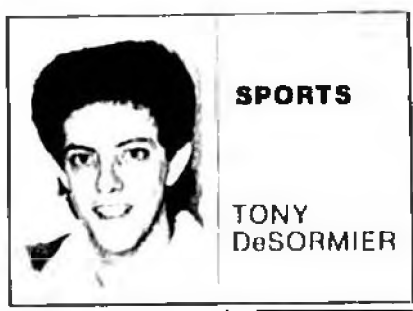

And what, additively speaking, does Seminole County do best?

We've had high school teams win state titles — even a mythical national crown — once. Youth recreational teams claim state titles with regularity. In the last 10 years, we've had professional baseball, football, and basketball players.

But as prolific as Seminole County has been in producing quality athletes — and in the process, quality individuals — I wonder, if that might not be what we do best, too.

And what that might be? It seems to me that it's running leagues and tournaments.

It can't be the last night while watching the Under-12 and Under-14 divisions of the Seminole Softball Club — Memorial Day Tournament at Central Winds Park. Tournaments are a huge an-dertaking under the best of circumstances. And I don't know of a tournament anywhere, at any level, at any point of time in the history of athletics that was ever run completely under the best of circumstances. Tournaments attract categories like picnic draws.

SPORTS

This weekend, the Seminole Softball Club and support personnel were cursed with the same thunderstorms that came as a blessing to everyone else. While our lawyers went from Brown to green, the fields at Soldier's Creek Park, Central Winds Park and the Oviedo Sports Complex went from clay to mud.

Yet they played on. How? Hard work, lots of it by a lot of people, some who were paid for it, many who did it out of the goodness of their hearts and will pay the physical price for days.

On Sunday night, there were still some small pockets of standing water in foul territory at Central Winds Park, but the field was more than just playable, it was in fine shape, an accomplishment that bordered on miraculous.

This is only the most recent example — and it's not over yet — of the tournament wrapping up today — of the extreme level of effort and cooperation involved in the successful execution of a tournament. This weekend's event brought together the SSC, along with the Winter Springs and Oviedo recreation departments.

It seems that every month, there's some tournament going on somewhere in the county. That says something. You can't continue to host tournaments unless you have teams willing to come and play in them. And the reasons that teams return to tournaments or tournaments return to areas are good facilities and proper management.

Evidence would point to the conclusion that Seminole County has both.

Earnhardt cleans up at Charlotte

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

CHARLOTTE — Dale Earnhardt cleaned up at the Winston Cup race here Sunday, winning the 200-mile event by 1.4 seconds over second-place driver Tony Stewart.

Stewart, who had a 100-mile lead over Earnhardt at the start of the race, was overtaken by Earnhardt on lap 100. Earnhardt then led the race for the remainder of the 100 laps.

The race was a dramatic one, with Earnhardt leading for most of the race. Earnhardt's victory was his 10th in the Winston Cup series.

Drought invites problems

Insects invade lawns during the good old summertime

Lawn problems have been flooding into our office lately. Most of the problems are largely due to the drought conditions that we have been experiencing for the past several months. Drought and stressed lawns can easily invite insect pests to invade our lawns. Here are some tips to help you prepare for the possibility of insect problems in your lawn this summer.

Mid to late June is the ideal time to control mole crickets because the young nymphs are more susceptible to pesticides than the adults. The recommended pesticides at this time of year are mole cricket bait, Dursban, Diazinon and Othello. Be certain to follow the label directions on the insecticide that you choose. Remember that the mole cricket is active at night, so pesticides should be applied at nightfall or in the early morning. Control later in the season is more difficult because the mole crickets are maturing and adults are less susceptible to insecticides.

To control mole crickets, it is important to understand their life cycle. In Central Florida, adult mole crickets begin laying eggs in late March and continue through May and June. The eggs take about 20 days to hatch. The young mole crickets begin feeding and tunneling. Most mole cricket feeding occurs at night, after rain or irrigation and during warm weather.

If you are unsure whether or not you have a mole cricket problem, try to flush them out using one or two tablespoons of liquid dish soap per 2 gallons of water and pour this in a four square foot area just next to a suspected mole cricket site. In a few minutes, the mole crickets will surface if present.

DEAR ABBY: Here's another "fractured" name: My first child was born while we were living in Jamestown, N.Y., a pre-dominantly Swedish town. While shopping, I met a neighbor who asked me what I had named our new baby. I replied, "Jayne, spelled with a Y."

DEAR ABBY: I am somewhat confused over the meaning of Mother's Day. I have been married for 10 months. This is my first marriage and my wife's second. For Mother's Day, I took my mother, my wife and her mother, plus my wife's two children by a previous marriage (ages 9 and 10) out for a lovely dinner. I had gifts of equal value for both my mother and my mother-in-law. I even gave my wife's children money with which to buy their mother a Mother's Day gift.

Fittipaldi said, "It's all a matter of timing, and experience is so important, and that's why Mansell didn't want to go down the straightaway. The final yellow came on the 192nd lap when Mansell, desperate to make up time, brushed the wall but was still able to continue. After the green was displayed with six laps remaining, Fittipaldi pulled steadily ahead, turning the fastest lap of the race at 214.807 mph on the 198th lap and winning by 2.662 seconds. He finished the 500 miles in 3 hours, 10 minutes, 49.860 seconds, an average of 157.207 mph.

Mansell, trying to become the first rookie winner since fellow Englishman Graham Hill in 1966, was 4.2 seconds behind Fittipaldi, and seven other drivers were on the lead lap.

"I was getting ready to go down the straight, and I had a sudden 'low room' vroom" as first Fittipaldi and then Luyendyk roared past, Mansell said. "And I thought, 'You shouldn't do that.'"

"I was worried about being left and they were on the gas already for a second or two. Everybody, like, cheats on the restart... I learned a lot out there."

Mansell, who replaced Michael Andretti on the Newman-Haas team this season, was the second reigning Formula One champion to lead at Indianapolis, and the first to do so as a rookie. His teammate, Mario Andretti, led 73 laps and had a lead at one time of as much as 25 seconds. But, not even he dominated the race, which eventually had a new leader every time the front-runners came in for pit stops.

By the 199th lap, the first nine cars were separated by less than 10 seconds. Three laps later, only seven seconds separated the top seven.

Andretti gave up the lead for good after the 174th lap, when Mansell got around him and Fittipaldi. Mansell stayed in front the next 10 laps before he, too, was passed.

Raul Boesel, a front-row starter alongside Luyendyk and Andretti, finished fourth after two penalty stops for speeding in the pits. "In my mind," he complained, "I won the race."

Andretti, in his 28th Indy, finished fifth. At least this time, unlike many others that ended against the wall or in a puff of smoke, he was still running at the end.

"We ran all day," Andretti said. "You had to have the car like a razor's edge. It was quite loose a couple of times. I almost spun it a couple of times. In contrast with a year ago, was remarkably clean. There were only eight yellow flags, just four for minor crashes. None of the drivers was seriously hurt.

Before Mansell dashed the white concrete wall, the last crash was on the 127th lap, when Roberto Guerrero and Jeff Andretti collided in the third turn and went into the wall. Guerrero had a bruised left shoulder and right knee; Andretti, Mario's youngest son who was seriously injured in the race last year, was not hurt. Jeff Tracy was eliminated in earlier crashes.

In all, 24 cars were still running at the end, the most ever for a 500-mile race. "I think we had a much safer race than last year," Fittipaldi said. "I think the track achieved what they wanted to achieve with safety."

There was concern about safety because of some changes to the track, including the replacement of the 15-foot apron with two new pit entrance and exit lanes separated from the track by grass and a 30-inch rumble strip. But the changes produced the intended reduction in speed, and no one approached the lap record of 229.118 mph set by Michael Andretti during the 1992 race.

Scott Brayton, Boesel's teammate, was sixth; Scott Goodyear, runner-up last year, was seventh; defending champion Al Unser Jr. finished eighth; Tony Stewart was ninth; and John Andretti, Gordon's teammate and a late addition to recently retired A.J. Foyt's team, was 10th.

The race was of particular concern to NASCAR drivers and crew chiefs, in part because of the changing conditions brought on by the cooling temperatures. Earnhardt said his crew made all the right moves, aided by last week's race.

"At the end of the race, the car ran more and more like it did last Saturday night," he said. "We ran the same setup we ran last Saturday night, and we made the right call."

Sacks had two explanations of the incident. His original story indicated that Earnhardt indeed had hit his car. After the race was over, that description changed.

"It wasn't a big deal. It was racing," Sacks said. "He kept his nose right up under me and I was in the middle of a corner. I was someone up there. That's one of those things."

The spinout occurred on lap 328, on the restart on lap 336. Jarrett retained the lead. He enjoyed it only briefly, however, because polestar Ken Schrader spun him out.

Ernie Ivan took the lead when Rusty Wallace's Pontiac had its second spinout. "I was in the lead of the seven caution flags. He led up until the second turn of lap 361, where Earnhardt hit Michael Andretti in front of Chevrolet and held the lead for good."

Rookie Jeff Gordon put on a strong charge and finished second behind Wallace, who was third, followed by Schrader and Ivan.

Positive TB test needs follow-up

DEAR DR. GOTT: I suffer from shortness of breath and a cough. I am concerned I might have emphysema since my father died of it. I had pulmonary function tests, which my doctor said were normal, so I don't understand why I continue to suffer as I do. Further, my TB test came up positive, and I've been advised I could be a carrier. Should I be concerned?

DEAR READER: Shortness of breath always indicates a problem that should be investigated. This problem may stem from the heart, the lungs or other body organs. Anemia and metabolic disturbances can also cause breathlessness. You need a series of blood tests and X-ray examinations to determine the cause of your symptoms.

I am especially worried about your positive test for tuberculosis, a serious bacterial lung infection that is once again on the rise, after many years of relative obscurity. Although your TB test may simply indicate that you had a past infection which you overcame, you need more evaluation -- such as a special sputum culture -- to make sure the infection is not active.

Tuberculosis can also affect the heart covering, leading to difficulty breathing, even if the lung involvement is minimal. TB is treated with antibiotics. Your (normal) pulmonary function tests seem to rule out emphysema as a cause of your problem.

Therefore, I believe your doctor is obligated to look further. If he needs assistance, he should call on a pulmonary specialist to help plan the tests and treatment that you need. Don't delay in seeking medical attention.

Because you are concerned about emphysema, which is a common health problem among the elderly and in smokers, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Living With Chronic Lung Disease." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

On Memorial Day, we think of the past, of those who fought and died in battles won and lost. But how much better this world would be if memorial days didn't have to exist. It is a pity that throughout time people have felt armed conflict to be necessary and desirable. As Abba Eban said, "History teaches us that men and nations behave wisely once they have exhausted all other alternatives."

When you are playing a bridge hand, it is important to plan for the future (making your contract) and also to remember the past (the bidding).

You reach four spades. West leads the heart king. Which are your 10 tricks?

South's opening bid was a classic weak two: a good six-card suit and some 6-10 high-card points. Despite having such a strong hand, North knew that a slam was unlikely.

When the dummy came down, South thought he saw 10 tricks: six spades, one heart, one diamond and two clubs.

"Ace, please," he said confidently. But his jack dropped into the basement when East produced a trump. Suddenly 10 tricks had shrunk to nine.

South, of course, should have taken a moment to wonder what might go wrong. And a 7-0 heart split was a danger, given West's bid. The heart two should have been played from the dummy at trick one, not the ace. As it doesn't help him to switch, West continues with top hearts. South ruffs the third, draws trumps and finally cashes the heart ace in safety.

A card that could have won trick one will still be a winner at trick 13, if there are no trumps left.

Readers are invited to send card-play questions to Phillip Alder, in care of this newspaper. They can be answered only through the column.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
 June 1, 1993

In the year ahead you are likely to become rather closely involved with a variety of new friends. The links that bind you together will be the similar interests you share.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You're not apt to feel fulfilled today unless you busy yourself with endeavors you deem to be worthwhile. Don't let the day end with regrets. Be productive. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker Instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, NY 10163.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Try to schedule your time today so that some can be devoted to a relaxing, enjoyable pursuit. You need social outlets to balance the day.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your greatest asset today is your tenacity and determination to successfully conclude that which you start. Get going early, because you can accomplish a lot.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) When offering advice or criticism to others today, be careful how you phrase your comments. There is a thin line between constructive and destructive remarks.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Usually you strive to treat others in a generous manner, but today you might be a trifle reluctant to share or part with what you have.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your independence will be of considerable importance to you today, so try to avoid involvements that tie you down or restrict your freedom of mobility.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You are a shrewd investigator today and it will be difficult for others to hide anything from you that you want to know. Satisfy your curiosity, but don't use this gift in an unbecoming way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It's best not to request special favors from friends today. Pals who are close to you are aware of your needs, so let them feel free to make the gesture themselves.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Whether you're aware of it or not, the spotlight will be focused on you today. Be very careful how you conduct yourself around people you wish to impress.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You are both a good teacher and a receptive student today. You should be able to learn and retain things of value from involvements where you function as the instructor.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Joint ventures are worthy of your efforts today, especially if you're putting something together that needs a sturdy foundation. However, don't expect things to happen too fast.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) In partnership arrangements today it might be wise to let your counterpart assume the more assertive role. You'll be a strong team if you supply the back-up. (C)1993, NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.

Escaped prisoner recaptured

ARCADIA — A prisoner who authorities say escaped with the help of his mother over the weekend was recaptured while walking in a farm field.
Buddy Rollison was apprehended Monday near the Charlotte-Glades county line without incident, said Frank Twohig, assistant superintendent for DeSoto County Correctional Institution.
Rollison, 32, of Fort Lauderdale, climbed over the prison's 8-foot and 10-foot walls Saturday morning and took off in a waiting car driven by his mother, Jimmie J. Lockler Wyszkiowski of Chiefland, Twohig said.
Rollison fled from the car after a 30-mile road chase. Wyszkiowski was jailed on charges that include aiding in an escape.
Rollison was sentenced in 1982 in Broward County to 120 years for false imprisonment, robbery and grand theft. Wyszkiowski was paroled after serving about 10 years of a life sentence she received in 1981 in Suwannee County for attempted murder and conspiracy to commit armed robbery.

Storm forces delay of swim

MIAMI — Stormy weather forced an environmental activist to postpone his swim in a shark cage from Cuba to the Florida Keys for at least a day.
Skip Storch, billing himself as the "environmental swimmer," said last month he would attempt to swim from Havana to Islamorada beginning early today.
But a tropical depression formed Monday in the northwest Caribbean. Forecasters say the weather system could dump up to 10 inches of rain on parts of Cuba and Florida as it heads northeast across the Florida Straits.
"The water is too turbulent," said Gene Chillemi, Storch's spokesman, in a telephone interview from Storch's home state of New York. "They are hoping the storm will move out and they will be able to go in the water Wednesday at dawn."
The 35-year-old Storch says he wants to traverse the Florida Straits to heighten awareness about the plight of the world's coral reefs.

Rattlesnake bite victim stable

ORLANDO — A 26-year-old man here learned the hard way over the holiday weekend that rattlesnakes don't make good pets.
Police said Kevin Hose was bitten twice on the hand Saturday evening as he tried to feed a rat to the Eastern diamondback. Hose had found the snake in the woods and was keeping it in an aquarium, said police Lt. Ron Jacobs.
Hose was listed in stable condition Monday at the hospital after being found in a semiconscious state by officers responding to his 911 call.
It's illegal to keep poisonous snakes without a state permit, but Jacobs said Hose won't be charged.
An Orange County deputy with experience handling poisonous snakes killed the 4-foot-long rattler.

17 of 88 released murderers located

MIAMI — State officials rounded up 17 convicted murderers in May who were among 88 inmates mistakenly released by the prison system last year and officials now believe that many of those remaining have left the state or country.
"We're going to continue to search for the other 71," said John Joyce, spokesman for the Florida Department of Law Enforcement. "I suppose some of these guys have left the state. We don't know for sure. We're just out there looking."
Laura Levine, spokeswoman for the Department of Corrections, said the situation is "going about the way we expected. We didn't expect to open the doors one morning and find 88 former inmates waiting to walk back in."
The second third-degree murderer was released after July 1, 1992, the day a law went into effect reviving Florida's "provisional release credit" system.
Florida Attorney General Bob Butterworth later ruled that the inmates shouldn't have been released under the program to reduce prison overcrowding. That's when FDL and Corrections Department officers began rounding up the inmates.
But the Department of Corrections interrupted the roundup after six inmates were put back in prison because of a lawsuit brought by inmate Jeffrey Ippner, whose release had been delayed because of Butterworth's ruling.
The Florida Supreme Court upheld Butterworth's ruling in the Ippner case, but said nothing of the retaking of other inmates.
Nevertheless, Corrections and FDL agents in May grabbed 17 more ex-inmates who had four-month head starts. Four of those inmates' sentences expired.
One of them was returned to prison for just one day before his sentence expired.

Season's first depression

Storm expected to have little effect on Central Florida

By JOHN PAGENTI
Associated Press Writer
MIAMI — The year's first tropical depression, which made for a soggy Memorial Day weekend, began clearing out of a soggy South Florida this morning, just in time for the work week.
The storm formed Monday in the north-west Caribbean and prematurely christened the 1993 Atlantic hurricane season, which officially begins today.
The storm dumped as much as 10 inches of rain on parts of Cuba, Florida and the Bahamas over the holiday weekend.
"We do expect some rain in the morning, then we expect the rain to taper off," said Robert Molleda, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service here.
The storm seemed to pick up speed late Monday night, and was still heading north, east at near 17 mph this morning. It was expected to hold that course and speed today and tonight.
The speed and the track of the depression meant it was to have little effect on central or north Florida; however, a cold front moving southeastward could bring scattered rain today to north-central Florida, Molleda said.
The depression formed from a broad low-pressure disturbance in the extreme northwest Caribbean. At 5 a.m. EDT, the poorly organized system was centered over 25.2 degrees north latitude, and 78.8 degrees west longitude, or 80 miles west of Nassau in the Bahamas.
The depression was expected to continue spreading over parts of Jamaica, Haiti and the Cayman Islands.
Molleda said a tropical depression before the beginning of the hurricane season — which runs through Nov. 30 — is rare, but not unusual.
"I remember Memorial Day weekend in 1990 we had a tropical depression similar to this," he said.
Molleda added those having premonitions of a repeat of last year's killer Hurricane Andrew needn't be doubly worried by this early start.
"This isn't an indication of a strong hurricane season," he said.
The southern part of Dade County reported five to seven inches of rain Monday and Miami received between three and four inches. Broward County received between one and two inches, Molleda said.
The rain also ended what was at one time one of the driest May on record for South Florida.
"Before this weekend we were way below normal," Molleda said. "As it turns out, we will be below normal even with this rain, but we are much closer."

Bridge Crossover to playgrounds and funtime

By JULIAN STENSTROM

Remember this bridge? You're right! It's the old Wekiva Bridge. Of course, it's not the one that spans the Wekiva today.
Back when this photo was taken the bridge was used mostly by local folks to get to and return from Plymouth on Florida State Road West 46 enroute to one of the most popular playgrounds and parks in the area at that time — Rock Springs.
Today the area, owned and operated by Orange County's recreational system, is better known as Kelley Park. But back in the early 1900s scarcely a holiday of any kind wasn't observed by carloads and truckloads of Sanford, young folks who went there to picnic as well as enjoy the cool, clear Rock Springs is located but couldn't tell you where Kelley Park was if their lives depended upon it.
But no matter how it was sliced, the only way to get to Rock Springs or Kelley Park was over the Wekiva River bridge.

Former Prime Minister discusses memoirs

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer
MIAMI BEACH — Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher says her soon-to-be-published memoirs tell of the strong, decisive leadership needed to deal with the civil war in the former Yugoslavia.
"The 1980s were the years of leadership," she said Monday. "We didn't fish around for consensus. We led. We led quickly. Alas, that has not been the case with Bosnia."
Publicists arranged Lady Thatcher's luncheon with a handful of journalists — most book editors attending the American Bookellers Association convention — to promote "The Downing Street Years." No. 10 Downing Street is the official residence of Britain's prime minister.
Writers had been urged beforehand to ask her about the experience of writing a book, not about current issues. But Lady Thatcher didn't need any prompting.
Discussing the book about her years from 1979-90 leading Britain, she contrasted the leadership she and Ronald Reagan used against communism and aggression with the international fumbling now in deciding what to do about the vicious fighting among Serbs, Muslims and Croats.
"It is just plain wrong — wrong," Lady Thatcher said. "I don't understand why people don't feel guilty about it."
She said a silt in London in April by speaking out passionately for action to help Muslims being crushed in brutal Serb offensives. Critics there said her call was emotional and politically motivated.
Lady Thatcher stands by it, and said Monday she was wrongly accused "of wanting to put ground troops in."
Her plan would be to better arm the outgunned Muslims, provide air cover for them, and "take out all the supply lines that are being used to murder and maim these people."
"You cannot stop a brutal dictator with words," she said. "The United States this month backed off a plan for air strikes on Bosnian Serb positions because of European opposition. Lady Thatcher doesn't consider the current push for United Nations-protected Muslim enclaves a solution."
"They're not safe and they're not havens," she said.
By coincidence, her visit came on Memorial Day when Americans remember their war dead.
"We wouldn't be free if previous leaders had held to that view," Lady Thatcher said, referring to the reluctance of many current leaders to become involved in a prolonged, bloody conflict.
"I never, never, never expected to send people into battle," she said of her decision to forcefully take back the Falkland Islands in the 1982 war with Argentina. "I would not appease an aggressor."
She said the war "was the most intense period that I have ever lived through" and is recounted in detail in her book.
But her memoirs are thematic, she said, not just a chronology or recounting.

Domestic violence

Samuel Lee Hardy, 24, 1118 E. 10th St. Sanford, was charged with domestic violence by Sanford Police on Saturday. Police said that he and his wife had become involved in a domestic dispute over some property.
Police said he hit her in the chin with his fist.
He was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $1,500 bond.

Altercation brings arrest

Tramaine Donte McClary, 20, 138 Carver Ave., Sanford, was charged with aggravated battery and domestic violence by Sanford Police on Saturday.
Police said he hit his girlfriend several times while she was in his car. They said she got out of the car and that he followed her out, hit her several more times and dragged her back to the car and threatened to kill her.
They said he let her out and she called police.
He was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $2,000 bond.

Family argument

Jose E. Ortiz, 33, 733 Church St., Longwood, was charged with domestic violence by Longwood Police.
Police said that he and his wife were arguing about their daughter when he hit her in the head.
Police said he was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $2,500 bond.

Father, son charged

Gregory E. Weill Jr., 40, and Gregory E. Weill Sr., 16, both of 392 W. Hornbeam Dr., Longwood, were charged with domestic violence by Seminole County sheriff's officer on Sunday.
Police said the son was sitting at the kitchen table when his father entered the room and began a verbal altercation over his son's car.
During the argument, the father ripped the earring out of the son's ear, police said.
Police said the son then hit his father, kicked him, pulled his hair and bit him.
A witness called the police, they said.
Both were taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $2,500 bond.

Domestic violence

Melvin Daniels, 37, 2340 18th St., Sanford, was charged with domestic violence and resisting arrest without violence by Seminole County sheriff's officers on Sunday.
Police said he and his wife had been arguing when he kicked her.
He was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and he was held on $1,000 bond.

Couple argues

Howard Mark Zuckerman, 31, of 2840 Sunlake Loop 206, Lake Mary, was charged with domestic violence by Seminole County sheriff's officers on Sunday.
Police said he and his wife were involved in a verbal argument while he was doing the dishes. They said she hit him across the face with the antenna of the portable phone.
They said that he then back-handed her across the face.
Police said they arrested him, but not his wife because they wanted to leave her home to care for their two children.
He was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $2,500 bond.

Son reports argument

Michael O'Dell Lollar, 43, 580 Weidman Blvd., Lake Mary, was charged with domestic violence and domestic assault.
Police said his son reported that he believed his mother's life was in danger.
Police said he said his parents were involved in a verbal altercation when his father "kept coming at her in a threatening manner."
Police said she also struck her.
He was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $2,000 bond.

Burglary charged

Shirley A. Scott, 37, 93 Exeter Ct., Sanford, was charged with burglary by Seminole County sheriff's officers on Monday.
Deputies said that she smashed the windshield of several vehicles at a business and left a hand-written note.
Deputies said she had been issued a trespass warning in April.
She was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility on $1,000 bond.

Warrant arrests made

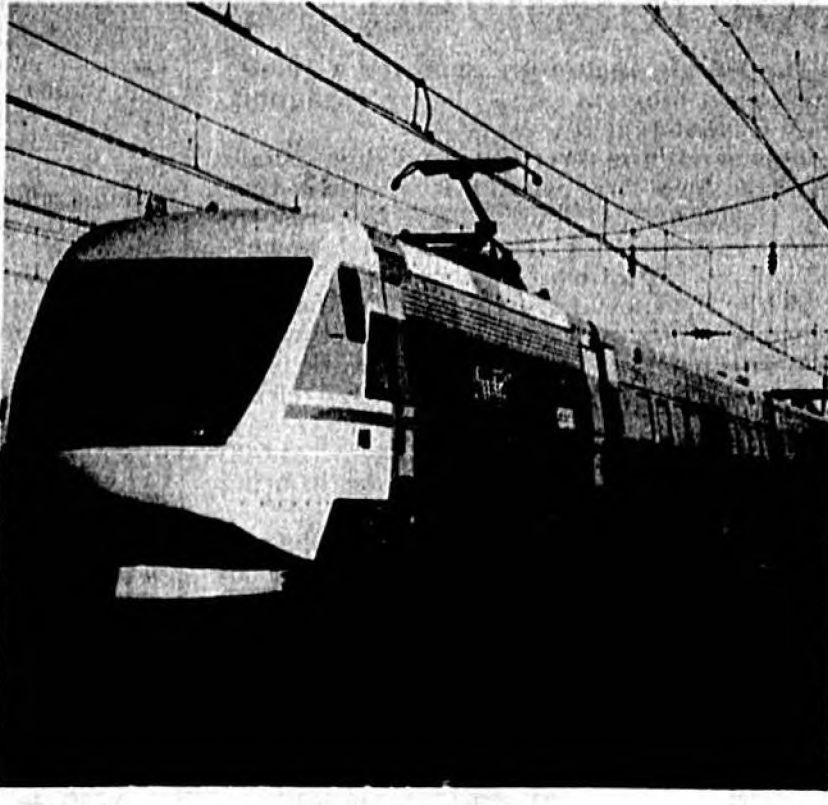

Sheila Baxter, 22, 7036 Plumwood Cir., Longwood, was charged in connection with a warrant on charges of battery.
Longwood Police stopped Baxter for a traffic violation and found the outstanding warrant. She was taken to the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and held on $500 bond.
Paul Sanders, 22, 130-D W. 16th St., Sanford, was charged in connection with a Volusia County warrant on Saturday night. He was arrested by Seminole County sheriff's deputies while serving time at the John E. Polk Correctional Facility on other charges. Bond was set at $450 on this charge.

Debate rages over juvenile crime

By JEFF DORN
Associated Press Writer
FITCHBURG, Mass. — One Friday night in 1988, Joseph Perkins shared pizza with friends, came home, fatally shot his mother and grandparents in the head, and spent the rest of the weekend with his girlfriend.
Then 15, he was arrested and tried as a juvenile. Last week, a 24-year-old Perkins was released from eight years of juvenile custody — without a police record.
"He has gotten away with murder. That was his plan all along," his uncle, Robert Holmes, declared bitterly.
Police said young offenders face a tougher system. Fighting a national increase of violence by ever-younger criminals, Massachusetts and other states have made it easier in recent years to try and punish them as adults.
But some juvenile advocates say the legal offensive is pushing too many teen-agers into adult courts and prisons, where they are less likely to remake their lives.
"They're still kids," said John Larivee, a founder of Citizens for Juvenile Justice in Boston. "They need to be treated differently than adults ... no matter how despicable their behavior might be."
"Juveniles — no matter what the offense — are harmed when they go into the adult system. They're mistreated, and then they become the predators," said Lloyd Mixdorf, who directs juvenile programs for the American Correctional Association.
In Perkins case, his confinement was extended four times before a judge ruled that the state had failed to prove he had a mental illness that made him a danger to others. Perkins was the oldest person in state juvenile custody.
No one can ever say for sure what drove Perkins to gun down his grandmother as she slept and his mother and grandfather as they arrived home hours later. He has told therapists that he suffered from alcohol abuse, beatings from his widowed mother and sexual abuse by one of her boyfriends.

Fast train touring Florida, but not quite up to speed

Florida will open bidding by early 1994 on a fast-train franchise to start running within 10 years.
The X2000 is in Orlando for Memorial Day. After a Lakeland stop this afternoon, the train heads to Tampa for three days of demonstration runs and displays.
"It's a chance to look at the hardware, kick the tires and see how it works," says Charles Smith, who oversees the Florida Department of Transportation efforts to bring bullet trains to the state.
"Most people in Florida haven't seen a train other than Amtrak." What makes the X2000 so different is that it leans into curves.
Pivoting axles let its wheels follow twists in the tracks. That lets the train take curves up to 40 percent faster than conventional trains with axles locked in steel frames.
Computers signal hydraulic lifts to tilt each car to compensate for centrifugal force. Otherwise, drinks would fly off luncheon tables at such speeds.
Rail buffs like the idea of getting 150-mph passenger train service without spending billions of dollars on new tracks.
On May 7, Amtrak finished a three-month test of the X2000 between New York and Washington, D.C. in a single breakdown or delay, said spokesman R. Clifford Black.

Swedish X2000 high-speed train visits Florida.

Clinton vows to get world trade talks on the road to completion

By MARTIN CRUSHINGER
AP Economics Writer
WASHINGTON — President Clinton says his administration is prepared to make extraordinary efforts to complete a long-delayed global free trade agreement that promises a badly needed boost to the world economy.
"Economists forecast that a successful conclusion to talks among 112 countries could add more than $1 trillion to world output over the next five years by lowering tariffs and other barriers to trade in goods and services."
Lured by that prospect, the Clinton administration is trying to reinvent the lagging discussions, known as the Uruguay Round for the country where they began in 1986.
Clinton told America's major trading partners in early May that the United States was "willing to go the extra mile" to complete the round, and since that time U.S. negotiators have been busy developing new strategies to overcome obstacles.
Four members of Clinton's Cabinet, led by Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, were leaving today for two days of meetings in Paris involving trade and how to boost the sluggish world economy.
"These meetings are an important forum for advancing the growth policies and trade policies needed to put our people back to work," Bentsen said. "World growth, to a large degree, depends on expanding world trade."
Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, Labor Secretary Robert Reich and U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor also were scheduled to attend this year's annual meeting of the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.
In addition to hard bargaining over the narrow U.S. trade deficit that hit $6.3 billion last year, "We are a free-trade administration," Brown said in an interview before leaving for Paris. But he called the country's current trade deficit unacceptable and said it was "absolutely unacceptable for $50 billion of that to be with one country" — Japan.
Kantor was scheduled to meet Wednesday with trade ministers from the 12-nation European Community and Japan and Canada to address ways to advance the Uruguay Round. He said the United States would be trying to wrap up a broad agreement to lower tariffs on an array of manufactured goods.
The U.S. strategy is to gain endorsement of this package at the annual economic summit in July and then use the lower tariffs as the carrot to entice less-developed countries to make concessions that American negotiators want in the area of providing greater protection for intellectual property and lowering their barriers in the field of services such as banking and insurance.
Clinton, in a recent speech, said American companies are losing $60 billion annually in world sales just from the piracy of their copyrights and patents.

Prison problem not resolved

The Florida Legislature approved a 10,500 bed prison program shortly before adjourning its special session last week.

This is nothing more than applying a small bandage on a large wound. It will show that our legislature did something to help resolve prison overcrowding. The something, however, will be of little help.

Before the special session started, Governor Lawton Chiles had projected that it would take at least 22,000 new prison beds to prevent an increase in the early release program.

Other lawmakers have estimated 24,000 new beds would be needed in order to bring the early releases to an end.

Very little was actually accomplished. About 48,000 inmates are presently in Florida prisons. Because of the increase in crime, more persons are being sent to jail.

The special legislative session may have ended, but the prison overcrowding problem has not been resolved.

This matter must be re-thought. Florida needs more prison beds. More prison beds will cost money.

The legislature didn't do us any favors. It may have added a small piece of tape to the overcrowding wound, but it didn't stop the bleeding.

Mistake in puzzle?

In regard to the "Word Search" Puzzle in the Leisure Section of your May 21st edition of the Sanford Herald, Vol. 66, No. 230.

If you look at the puzzle any direction you wish, the words "Guiding Light" are not in the puzzle.

I always thought that a word on the "words to find list" were actual words that are found in the puzzle. Am I wrong? I don't think so!

Is there a "blunders" finder fee, or some type of reward for catching such errors?

If so, please respond to this letter.

I am incarcerated in John E. Polk Correctional Facility and I look forward to your puzzle section very much. It keeps me sane.

Thank you for your time.

An apology

This letter is in reference to your article in the May 21st edition entitled: "Exotic dancers, golfersirk mom." The article detailed an incident which occurred at the Sabal Point Golf Club on Monday, May 17.

The incident occurred during the Club Juana Charity Golf Tournament which was being held at Sabal Point for the express purpose of benefiting the Childrens Rights Foundation.

I sincerely apologize to the youngsters, their parents and neighbors at Sabal Point for the embarrassment caused by this unfortunate incident. The Club Juana Charity Golf Tournament raised $11,100 for the Childrens Rights Foundation which is working tirelessly to help the child abuse victims in our community.

I assure you the offending employees have been identified and disciplined for their actions of May 17. All of the employees of the Club Juana were volunteering their time to the tournament because they are committed to fighting child abuse. I assure you that the commitment remains undaunted by this unfortunate incident.

Taxpayers shouldn't bank on RTC

Talk about throwing good money after bad. The Senate recently approved $18 billion in new funding for the Resolution Trust Corp., the agency that has added tens of billions of dollars to the cost of the savings and loan cleanup by selling off the assets of failed thrifts at bargain basement prices.

As a condition of receiving yet another multibillion-dollar subsidy from the taxpayers, the Senate asked the RTC to make a good faith effort to market its holdings individually, rather than packaging them in overly expensive "bundles." Lawmakers are finally responding to criticism from smaller investors that they have been closed out of the biggest sell-off of government assets in history.

The RTC has tried to keep its fire sale an exclusive affair. It doesn't want to waste time with small fry who have, say, $10 million or $20 million to spend. To the RTC's way of thinking, that's chump change. Its preferred customers have really deep pockets. At least a couple hundred million bucks liquid.

From the get-go, the RTC was uninterested in recouping the highest possible return on the half-trillion dollars worth of loans, property and securities it inherited from some 700 failed thrifts. It simply wanted to get the assets off its hands as quickly as possible.

So rather than selling properties individually to investors big and small (which would have taken longer, but which also would have maximized returns to the taxpayers), the RTC disposed of most of its inventory in bundles. By pricing these bundles of assets at $100 million or more, it all but ensured that only members of the Forbes 400 or the Fortune 500 could afford to buy.

Big investors who took part in the RTC's close-out sale made out like bandits. The billionaire Bass brothers, for instance, hooked up with General Electric Capital to acquire $1 billion in property and loans from the RTC. They paid 50 cents on the dollar.

Talk about throwing good money after bad.

A similar killing was made by Ronald Periman, chief executive of Revlon Cosmetics. He acquired a minority interest in First Gibraltar Savings and Loan worth an estimated $100 million. He paid the RTC $35 million. It's doubtful that the women who buy Revlon products ever see such generous markdowns.

RTC officials say that deals like those are exceptions. As recently as last fall, the agency's since-departed president and chief executive, Albert Casey, claimed that agency sales had fetched "93 percent of the book value assigned by failed S&Ls to their assets."

But critics say that Casey played fast and loose with the RTC's balance sheet. A recent study by the Southern Finance Center, a Charlotte, N.C., research firm, showed that the RTC was unloading its commercial real-estate holdings for an average 55 percent of market value. That figure was culled from RTC data that previously was unavailable to the public.

It gets worse. As the RTC has recovered little more than half the value of commercial properties in its inventory, and only slightly better returns on other asset sales, "the public costs of (its) work eventually may exceed a trillion dollars," according to the Southern Finance Center. Or about double the original value of the assets being sold off.

Will national timber supply last?

An unknown but possibly large number of second-growth tree plantations the U.S. Forest Service says are maturing for future use may exist only on paper, lost to insect or fire damage.

These losses represent one of a series of problems that bring into question the Forest Service's assertions that it provides for the future by replacing forests cut down for logging or damaged by natural causes.

One of the areas worst hit by insect damage in recent years is the Deschutes National Forest on the eastside of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon. The problems there begin, but by no means end, with the Forest Service's discredited account of how many trees are in the Deschutes to start with.

The Deschutes 1990 management plan includes a standing tree inventory. That inventory, compiled in 1971, is based in part on a sampling method in which 1,850 acres of land are assumed to be made up of old-growth ponderosa pine so long as the 1 acre plot surveyed within the sample actually does contain those trees. New surveys done before the final plan was published revealed, however, that the figures for "the 1971 inventory were completely wrong," according to a study made for the U.S. Office of Technology Assessment.

The new surveys "revealed that the forest had one-third less ponderosa pine than planners thought," but the old inventory was used anyway to avoid a delay in leasing the plan.

To set logging levels on mistaken assumptions of the volume of timber that is actually available is a sure formula to cut in excess of sustained yield, which in turn undermines any possible success for reforestation.

But the Deschutes' problems go even deeper. After seven years of drought, huge areas of the already weakened eastside forests have been killed by massive insect infestations. Among the stands being killed are plantations that are supposed to assure a sustained timber supply for the future.

"We've been cutting against these future stands that are never going to mature," says Greg Harty, chief forester for the Public Forestry Foundation, an environmental organization.

"I've seen plantations that are 100 percent defoliated," says William Hopkins, the Forest Service's area plant ecologist. Hopkins says 180,000 Deschutes acres are now "severely defoliated" due to insect infestation. Plantations, he says, are particularly susceptible to the attack. The insect larvae, he explains, in effect parachute through the taller, overstory trees and are prone to hit the lower, younger understory canopy of plantation trees.

Fire, as well as insects, destroys tree plantations, leaving gaps on the ground that may not show up in Forest Service projections of future supplies.

Two years ago the U.S. General Accounting Office found that the Forest Service was "inaccurate and inconsistent" in reporting the amount of land in need of reforestation. In particular, "Forest Service reports understated reforestation needs because not all needs from forest fires and other natural disasters were identified and reported in a timely manner. As a result, some needs remain unreported."

Failure to replace burned-over original growth is compounded in areas where logging has occurred in irreplaceable ancient forests that are replanted in what are termed "monoculture" crops of single-species, even-aged trees. Due to their uniformity, such crops are particularly susceptible to being wiped out by fire, according to Richard Adams, assistant director for operations in the service's Washington, D.C., Fire and Aviation Management Division. "We're not sure how many of these reforested areas we can carry through to rotation (before they are due for a second harvest)," he says. "A lot of them are going to burn up before they ever get to rotation."

As with cutting, the law requires the Forest Service to reforest trees lost to fire. Noting that not all trees are destroyed in every fire, Adams estimates that "only about 30 percent to 40 percent of the acreage burned needs to be replanted or reseeded" on commercial forest land.

Between 1977 and 1992, the Forest Service reports a total of 6.8 million acres burned. During that same period, however, the Forest Service reports that only 516,432 acres were slated for reforestation due to fire losses. Applying Adams' estimate of a need to reforest 30 percent to 40 percent of burned commercial acreage, indicates the Service may be under reporting the need by between 80,000 and 280,000 acres since 1977.

The real damage of these discrepancies, of course, will be apparent only to the next generation of Americans who may turn for their timber supplies to tree plantations that do not exist.

A large number of tree plantations the Forest Service says are maturing for future use may exist only on paper.

VA uncovers patient dumping at its hospitals

WASHINGTON — Riding 37 miles through the hills of Kentucky isn't the way most people would choose to spend the last few hours of their lives. But that's exactly what happened to one 39-year-old veteran as he lay dying on June 8, 1990.

The veteran, a quadriplegic, arrived in a "semicomatose state" at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Lexington, Ky., following a ride from the emergency room of Mary Chiles Hospital in Mt. Sterling, Ky. Laboratory tests taken at the original hospital showed the veteran's blood had critically low levels of sodium and potassium before he was transferred. Nineteen hours after he arrived at the VA hospital, the patient died.

There is no way to discern what would have happened to this patient had he not been moved 19 hours prior to his death. Kentucky authorities investigated the incident and found that Mary Chiles Hospital "followed proper protocol" in transferring the patient.

But a VA doctor who reviewed the medical records in the case told investigators for the VA's inspector general that the patient's condition was unstable at the time of transfer and that the hospital had the facilities to provide the proper care. Furthermore, the inspector-general report claims that medical records in the case included no evidence that the patient or his family asked for the transfer, and that there was no statement from the transferring doctor justifying his actions.

The case in Mt. Sterling is no exception. Rather, it represents a potential new twist on an old problem: patient dumping. The VA inspector general recently investigated 242 cases of patient transfers from non-federal to VA hospitals across the country. Of those, investigators found 46 cases where transfers were "in potential violation of the law."

That law is the 7-year-old Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act, which forbids hospitals from transferring any patient with an unstabilized emergency condition, unless the transferring hospital can certify that the patient would clearly benefit from the transfer. The law was passed in response to what was then a growing number of hospitals that were transferring patients who couldn't pay for services.

When veterans are dumped on the VA system, the patient isn't the only one who suffers. Inappropriate transfers create higher operating costs for the VA, as well as inflating mortality rates. No matter what the reasons for transfers, however, the profit motive may be driving life and death medical decisions. "One of the original reasons for the (anti-dumping) law was to prevent patient transfers for financial reasons, although the law doesn't specifically state that," said Gaeleyn DeMartino, Washington counsel for the American Hospital Association, which has monitored the issue since its inception.

Although we found no legal actions being pursued against any of the hospitals cited in the report, at least one senator is working to ensure that the Health Care Financing Administration continues to investigate for actual violations of the law.

"I am outraged," Sen. John D. "Jay" Rockefeller, D-W.Va., told our associate Jan Moller. "Our veterans deserve not just better, but the best possible care. The VA's inspector general has done a great service by exposing this terrible practice, and the VA was quick to respond." Rockefeller heads the Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs.

It represents a potential new twist on an old problem: patient dumping.

Clinton's visit stirs strong emotions at Vietnam Memorial

By LARRY MARSHAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — As President Clinton stood to speak before the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, the wall regarded by vets as hallowed ground, Dave Price turned his chair and showed his back to the commander in chief who never served.

"There's no place at this memorial" for Clinton, said the Vietnam veteran who said the names of about 25 friends were etched onto the black granite panels. "He has trashed the memory of all my fallen comrades."

Price did not hold the dominant view toward Clinton's Memorial Day appearance, judging by the applause that overshadowed the catcalls and jeers. But his silent protest showed just how emotional the day had become.

Clinton's decision to speak at the wall generated such strong feelings because he avoided the draft and protested against the Vietnam War.

But for 12 years, presidents declined invitations to speak at the Memorial Day observances at the wall. Clinton came.

"I'm sick and tired of hearing all the people badmouthing our president," said Vietnam veteran Steve Falkenthal of Woodbridge, Va. "The tone is to forgive and forget."

Clinton didn't apologize for his failure to serve in the military, and his speech appeared to change few opinions.

But the president captured the solemnity of the occasion when, after speaking, he paused before the wall and traced the name of a deceased high school classmate.

Earlier, speaking in front of wreaths, flowers and pictures of fallen soldiers that lined the base of the wall, Clinton asked those who were jeering to hear him out. He told them, "Disagreement is freedom's privilege."

"Let us continue to disagree if we must about the war. But let us not let it divide us as a people any longer," Clinton said.

"I ask you at this monument, can any American be out of place? And can any commander-in-chief be in any other place but here on this day? I think not."

Clinton drew the loudest applause when he announced he was ordering nearly all U.S. military records pertaining to missing Americans from the war in Southeast Asia be declassified and made public by Nov. 11, Veterans Day.

Clinton said only "a tiny fraction" of the documents would remain classified and not available for public scrutiny because of national security or privacy-protection concerns.

As Clinton spoke, there were shouts from the crowd of "shame," "draft dodger" and "coward."

Those comments angered David Castillo, a Vietnam veteran from Los Angeles, who said, "You boo an umpire. You don't boo the president of the United States."

Bill Morey of Manchester, N.H., who rode to Washington as part of a motorcycle group of Vietnam vets, said he strongly opposed Clinton's avoiding the draft, but credited the president with "a lot of guts" for appearing. His fellow bikers, he said, couldn't forgive Clinton and went home early as a protest.

William Malehorn of York, Pa., said of Clinton, "What he learned from other speakers may have touched him more than he touched us."

Russ Germain, master of ceremonies, introduces Memorial Day speaker John Mica, a U.S. Congressman who represents the area. Mica spoke at the conclusion of the parade.

Sallie Smith of Altamonte Springs said that she came to Sanford to celebrate the holiday with veterans.

"I wanted to let them know that I am so thankful for what they have done for me," she said. "Without the people who fought for us we wouldn't have the freedoms we enjoy today."

John Sandinsky of Sanford said he served in World War II in France.

"I saw a lot of awful things when I was in the war," he said. "I like to show my appreciation for all the other people who helped make sure we don't have that here."

Though the parade route was short, the crowd was enthusiastic.

Marcy Linn, 5, of DeBary cheered happily as the American Legion's "train" chugged cheerfully past the First Street business district.

"I like parades," she said.

Her mother, Dolores, said she had tried to explain the significance of the holiday to her little one, but with little success.

"There'll be plenty of time to thank the veterans as she gets older," she said.

T.T. Pambianchi, a veteran of World War II, said he has watched the Memorial Day parades in Sanford since moving here several years ago.

"It's a shame more people don't come out," he said, surveying the crowd. "Some people are not too appreciative of what we and other veterans have done for them."

Pambianchi said he believed the media was at fault for "not building the veterans up more."

He said Americans "are free because of what the veterans" have done.

Homes

ministration unless local commissioners pass a separate motion for additional operations spending. Commissioners approved the increase in an emergency ordinance April 27.

Beverly Clieff, state SHIP spokesman, said it is not unusual for smaller counties in the state to request up to the 10 percent limit because of the additional staffing demands.

Under the county's "Affordable Housing Assistance Plan" approved by the state, up to $7,500 will be provided to assist residents to own a home, for many, their first. Through county, city and private agency programs, the county will either provide the money to builders or developers or directly to the homebuyer.

Up to $4,000 will be provided for each rental unit and a total of $375,000 will be used to match $450,000 received from the federal government for housing repairs. The assistance will be limited for those families who meet the county's low- and very low-income income limits. A family of four earning less than $32,000 annually would qualify for assistance.

Jobs

from more employers who may have openings, both summertime, and full time."

Earl said many of the PIC's work deals with students who have graduated and need full-time employment.

Central Florida's Disneyworld, which will sum between 1,500 and 2,000 youths during the summer, is almost completely filled. Most teens will begin their work when an additional shift starts for extended hours beginning June 7.

"We hire almost completely from walk-in applicants, said 'Bob,' of the WDW employment service. ("We only use our first names," he said).

"Many of our returning employees were re-hired after the brief Easter week openings," he said, "and we never seem to have trouble finding the people we need, but as it stands now, all of our youth type summertime jobs were filled by the middle of May."

Across the country at Disneyland, managers hiring summer help have noticed something uncommon this year. "We don't have the usual quick turnover," said Barbara Warren, a spokeswoman at the amusement park in Anaheim, Calif. "Employees hold on to their jobs."

Many American students are hard pressed to find jobs this summer with the economy stuck in slow motion. And the job market could get even tighter if President Clinton's economic package — which includes extra money for summer jobs — remains mired in Congress.

"This is shaping up as a tough, tough summer," said Kenneth Goldstein, an economist who tracks employment advertising for the Conference Board, a business-supported research group in New York.

About 23 million Americans ages 16 to 24 are expected to be in the labor force this summer, which means they either have jobs or are looking for work.

Many are high school and college students who in past years could land jobs waiting tables, selling clothes, picking up litter or working as interns for corporations. Such jobs can pay anywhere from minimum wage to more than $10 an hour.

But many of these slots are being filled by college graduates and others having trouble finding permanent jobs.

Some of the biggest summer employers are amusement parks, but the competition has been fierce. Opryland USA in Tennessee hires more than 3,000 extra people in the summer, mostly students. It received nearly 8,000 applications.

Traditionally, stores could be counted on to add employees in the summer. But they, too, have fallen on hard times, and there's been almost no summer hiring, said Jack Fraser, vice president of the National Retail Federation.

Still, there are opportunities. In the Miami area, many high school and college students are finding construction jobs as the rebuilding continues from Hurricane Andrew last year.

Some experts suggest students forget about making money and try to get unpaid internships at companies to help their careers later.

"If students have trouble, it's because they're not putting in the effort or being too picky," said Alyson Bitner, a student employment coordinator at the University of Chicago.

The government has committed $900 million for about 600,000 summer jobs ranging from park maintenance to day care. The Clinton administration wants to expand that by $325 million, saying it would create an additional 200,000 jobs.

But that proposal has languished in Congress along with Clinton's other economic measures, and Labor Secretary Robert Reich recently said the program needed to be approved by Memorial Day to make sure the money flows smoothly.

In Sanford, Earl says the PIC is concerned over the delays in the government spending package. "We are still waiting to see for what the allocations will be designated," he said. "For example, we expect at least 30 percent will be for educational enhancement programs, so we will have to be working through the school system for that project."

In urban areas, community leaders view these jobs not only as valuable work experience but also as a way to keep youngsters out of trouble.

Some cities already are counting on fewer jobs through the government.

"We need new employers to step forward to help fill that gap," said Neil Sullivan, executive director of the Boston Private Industry Council.

Edward's Paint & Wallpaper in Worcester is offering summer jobs to students to greet customers and ask their opinions about products. But the store was deluged with more than 100 applications for only a few slots.

"Two to four jobs isn't very much to offer, especially when you see so many young talented kids coming through the door," said spokesman Al Ormondroyd.

Historic

will be given $28,504.

In addition, $71,500 will go toward non-matching fund projects in education.

Three financial awards to be granted in 1994 actually will not be allocated until later this year. $110,000 has been granted for three separate parts of the Main Street program. The sections include the National Main Street Center, Florida Main Street, and National Main Street Town Meeting.

Of the $40,000 to the Florida Main Street, the Sanford Main Street Program will be applying for one of four grants to be given out for individual city operations.

Paperwork applying for the grant is expected to be completed within the next two months, and the Florida Main Street program is expected to announce which of the applicants will receive $10,000 later this year.

According to the latest figures, downtown historic districts in 29 cities have been rehabilitated through the Florida Main Street program, producing an economic bonanza since it began in 1985.

According to Vicki Cole, Historic Preservation Planner. "More than 1,700 rehabilitation and new construction projects have been completed with a total local reinvestment of $167 million, while spending less than $2 million on program administration."

"In addition," she said, "the program has assisted 730 business starts and expansions resulting in the creation of more than 2,500 new jobs."

The Historic Preservation Advisory Council, which makes the decisions on the spending of the funds, is comprised of members from throughout the state, appointed by the Secretary of State.

Torn by tragedy, united in death

By TOM HAYS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Death did not keep Hema Sakhrani and Shaheen Wadhvani from a sacred union.

Robbed of a life together by a crime of passion, they were united as bride and groom on Monday hours before they were cremated.

A Hindu priest performed the symbolic wedding ceremony as part of a joint funeral that celebrated the afterlife and the immortal soul.

Wadhvani, a promising young premed student, was shot to death Wednesday by a spurned admirer of Sakhrani's, police said. Stricken with grief, Sakhrani leaped to her death from her family's 16th-floor apartment.

"They were probably too good for this world," said Wadhvani's brother, Depak, fighting back tears. "I'm sure I will see them again."

The victims were 20 years old. They met at New York University, where both were outstanding students, and planned to marry July 18.

Instead, several hundred mourners, many of them barefoot and wearing white, gathered Monday for their funeral in Queens.

Sakhrani's uncle, Sunder Sakhrani, said he had traveled to India to buy the couple traditional wedding jewelry, gifts and robes. He was in Bombay when he learned of the deaths, and rushed back to provide the dress worn by Sakhrani at her funeral.

"Give your blessings to this couple as if they were alive," he told mourners, standing in front of the open, matching caskets. "And let them take those blessings with them to another life."

Sakhrani wore a traditional Indian wedding dress, a red sari. The groom wore a black suit and a red turban adorned with silver ribbons. An orange sash, a Hindu symbol of the bond between husband and wife, joined the coffins.

Family members said the couple's ashes would be flown to the holy city of Banaras in northeastern India, then scattered over the Ganges River, the most sacred river of the Hindus.

Chandran Nathan, 35, a family friend who had been rejected by Sakhrani, shot Wadhvani several times in the chest with a rifle at Wadhvani's Long Island home, police said. Two days later, a distraught Sakhrani jumped to her death.

Nathan was arrested and charged with murder. Nathan, who is married, told police that he was trying to rescue Sakhrani from an arranged marriage. But those who knew the couple said they were deeply in love.

"Their love and affection was so deep, you can say through their souls they were already married," said Nathir Lalchandani, a family friend. "In this world, they cannot live together. But at least now, their souls can be together."

Yugoslav president ousted Serbs pound Bosnia town

By MAUD S. BEEHMAN
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Yugoslav President Dobrica Cosic, resented by extremist Serbs for his support of a U.N. peace plan to end murderous fighting in the Balkans, was ousted by his parliament early today.

The move could prolong the 14-month war in neighboring Bosnia-Herzegovina, where Bosnian Serbs on Monday pounded the eastern Muslim enclave of Gorazde with thousands of artillery and mortar rounds.

In Sarajevo, Bosnia's Muslim-dominated army dug in above a key road it seized from Serbs over the weekend during a fierce government offensive.

The ouster of Cosic in Belgrade indicated that hardliners are gaining ground in the truncated Yugoslavia, made up only of Serbia and Montenegro following the secession of Slovenia, Macedonia, Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Cosic is considered too moderate by ultranationalist Serbs, who strongly back the Bosnian Serbs' fight to join their lands into a "Greater Serbia."

He was ousted over a technicality. The ultranationalist Radical Party accused him of violating the constitution by violating the appointment of a premier and Supreme Court Judges last year. But several deputies said Cosic's ouster was the climax of a power struggle between him and Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, the most powerful leader in Yugoslavia. His Socialist Party joined with the Radical Party in parliament to vote Cosic out of office.

Cosic has angered ultranationalists by urging the Bosnian Serbs to accept an international peace plan to end the war in Bosnia, which has left more than 138,000 people dead or missing.

The United States earlier this month shelved the idea of air strikes on Bosnian Serb positions because of European opposition. Western powers now are pushing a plan that envisions international peacekeepers protecting six enclaves, including Sarajevo and Gorazde, controlled by the Bosnian government.

Battling the addiction to drugs — and AIDS

By LARRY McSHANE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Crack was Carl Robinson's life. AIDS will likely be his death. There won't be much time in between.

Carl, a muscular 27-year-old with a Magic Johnson smile, was one month into drug treatment when his AIDS virus test came back positive. The life he had left behind — partying, promiscuity — would cut short the life ahead.

The test results made Carl a member of a growing subset: recovering addicts with the HIV virus. The number of those sharing the diseases of addiction and AIDS has more than quadrupled in the last two years at Phoenix House's East Coast drug treatment centers.

The unique needs of people like Carl are handled differently at Phoenix House. Experts at the national drug treatment facility have developed a groundbreaking program to help the HIV-positive endure.

"I don't see them as moving toward death. I see it as, what can we do to enhance their quality of life?" said Dr. Isidoro Gonzales, who helped concoct a treatment that evolved nearly as fast as the need for it.

"When I was first here, the HIV-positive population averaged anywhere from 12 to 18 people," recalled Gonzales, who's been on the job more than two years. "Now we're averaging 70. It's just going to keep going up."

The shock of his HIV test result left Carl considering a return to the streets, but "I decided to go back was insanity," he recalled.

Hope is in short supply for Carl, who knows the bottom line of AIDS: the disease killed his mother two years ago. But Gonzales, the Phoenix House staff and a support group of fellow HIV victims helped Carl get past the disease and go on with life.

What makes the program work? No. 1 is the 36-year-old Gonzales, a caring, energetic physician known to his patients as Izzy. His home phone number is common knowledge among his patients.

Then there's the program itself: Patients are prepped for five hours and walked through the HIV testing process. Positives are united in support groups. Professionals are there to help when the group can't.

National figures on recovering addicts with HIV aren't available, but the percentage of drug users with AIDS keeps creeping higher. Nationally, they make up 31 percent of the AIDS population for men and 48 percent for women, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta.

Among minorities, the figures are similarly striking: 39 percent of all blacks with AIDS and 40 percent of Hispanics are HIV drug users, a higher percentage than homosexuals in those racial groups.

The people in Carl's support group reflect the increasingly varied faces of HIV: They range in age from 23 to 40. They are single and divorced, male and female, heterosexual and homosexual. Some have children, some are childless. Some contracted the virus through drug use, some through unsafe sex.

All five are black; they have come to regard one another as brothers and sisters.

"This is my family," said 40-year-old Rose Woods, a single parent, in a soft rasp. "We share everything."

Gonzales' own family experience led him to Phoenix House. Counseling HIV-positive recovering addicts seemed right after he saw an older brother die of AIDS — watching the highs, the lows, the inevitability of what was ahead.

"It was a roller coaster ride. And I had to learn I couldn't ride with him," Gonzales said. "I had to just sit tight and be there with him. This is what I began to see was going to be my career."

On the day his brother died, Gonzales watched with a strange mix of sadness and satisfaction.

"There's a beauty in dying, the process of dying, that we're never taught about," he said. "And I was able to clearly see it with my brother."

He sees it now in the faces of people like Craig Richardson, 25. The lithe, handsome man is a dancer who said he contracted AIDS from a prison rape. When his HIV results came back positive, he insisted they were wrong.

"At first I wouldn't accept it," recalled Craig. "I didn't want to believe it was true. I was afraid of dying."

Quality is issue in health plans

By Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dr. Richard Robinson sees a basic conflict between the way he practices medicine and the way managed care health insurance programs work: He spares no expense; they pinch every penny.

"Their objective is to provide care at the cheapest or least expensive manner, where I try to provide the best quality care I can provide regardless of cost," says Robinson, a pulmonary specialist in Woodbridge, Va. He said he regularly turns down the opportunity to join managed care provider lists.

Robinson's beliefs are echoed by other doctors who long have practiced traditional fee-for-service medicine, and who stand to lose patients and income as managed care programs become more popular.

But other physicians feel differently.

"I don't have to agonize every time I order a test or a referral because I know the patients will probably follow through because they don't have to take it out of their pocketbooks," says Dr. Judith Ratner, a pediatrician specializing in adolescent medicine at the George Washington University Health Plan in Washington.

Pressure on doctors to join managed care programs seems likely to intensify as more and more patients abandon costlier fee-for-service medicine.

President Clinton's emerging plan for overhauling health care is expected to rely heavily on this concept, with millions of people led to join large health care groups, and doctors required to accept generally lower fees to treat them.

Managed care plans seek to hold down costs by requiring participants to choose from among a network of doctors who have agreed to set fees, and by closely monitoring the delivery of medical services.

Foster Higgins, an employee benefits consulting firm, surveyed 2,448 businesses last summer and found that for the first time more than half — 51 percent — of the 12 million employees and dependents covered under the companies' health plans were in managed care. Seventy-seven percent of the companies offered managed care options.

"If I don't participate, I am excluding a tremendous portion of the population," said Dr. David Plotaky, a pediatric ophthalmologist in Washington.

Plotaky said the plans can create hurdles for patients, including requirements that they see primary care physicians before they can be treated by specialists such as himself. He said they also are very inflexible about covering certain treatments, and paperwork for doctors can be a hassle.

His home's old central air conditioner was probably increasing his cooling costs. So I mentioned FPL's Cooling & Heating Discount; up to $584 towards a qualifying high efficiency central cooling and heating system. "Call FPL before the summer," I said, "for a list of FPL participating independent contractors." Next thing I know, his old a/c hit the dumpster.

IN BRIEF

AROUND THE STATE

Marlins rained out

MIAMI — The Florida Marlins made history with their first rainout, so they'll try to do it again Tuesday with their first double-header. The Memorial Day game against the San Francisco Giants was washed out and re-scheduled as part of a double-header Tuesday beginning at 4:35 p.m. EDT.

Before Monday, only two games at Joe Robbie Stadium had been delayed by rain. But those opposing Miami's bid for an expansion franchise expressed concern about South Florida's rainy summer weather, and owner H. Wayne Hutzenga has said he'll consider building a new stadium with a retractable dome.

Suns burn Cubs

JACKSONVILLE — Jacksonville center fielder Darrin Bragg's two-out, two-run homer in the ninth inning lifted the Suns to a 5-3 victory over the Orlando Cubs in a Southern League game.

Bragg's home run followed a two-out walk to Bobby Holley and came off losing pitcher Bill Melvin (0-1). Bragg had three hits on the night and Tommy Adams also had a home run and an RBI single for the Suns.

Two of Orlando's runs came on home runs by Greg Lontgro and Mike Grace.

AROUND THE NATION

Musgrave released

CONCORD, N.C. — Winston Cup driver Ted Musgrave was released from a hospital where he was treated for carbon monoxide poisoning.

Musgrave drove his car into the garage behind pit road after lap 232. As soon as his crew members gathered around him, he complained of dizziness and fatigue.

An ambulance took him to University Hospital, and he was later transferred to Carolinas Medical Center for further treatment.

Officials said a tire came off of Musgrave's Ford, apparently breaking the exhaust pipe and sending fumes into the car.

Ryan hurt again

ARLINGTON, Texas — Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan, already on the disabled list for the second time during his final season, cut his left foot on a water skit and will be forced to stay off it for about two weeks.

The gash under the big toe on the ball of the 46-year-old's left foot, which required seven stitches to close, did not damage any ligaments or tendons. Ryan, baseball's career strikeout and no-hitter leader, was hurt while spending Memorial Day with his family on the Guadalupe River near Gonzales.

College Series set

AUSTIN, Texas — Mark Prather singled home the winning run as Texas rallied for two runs in the ninth to beat Southern Cal 3-2 and advance to the College World Series for the 27th time.

Texas, Oklahoma State and Kansas were the last three teams to qualify for the World Series. Oklahoma State beat Arizona 11-10 in the Midwest Regional at Stillwater, Okla., and Kansas edged Fresno State 3-2 in 10 innings in the Midwest Regional at Knoxville, Tenn.

The trio joins Long Beach State, Texas A&M, LSU, Arizona State and Wichita State in the eight-team tournament that begins Friday in Omaha, Neb.

Toyota streak continues

LAKEVILLE, Conn. — Juan Manuel Fangio II won the Lime Rock Grand Prix, extending his winning streak to four and Toyota's record streak to 12. Fangio took the lead from teammate P.J. Jones immediately after the green flag and led for 99 of the race's 115 laps. He averaged 87.9 mph and beat Jones by one lap and 16.393 seconds.

Brooks leaves Devils

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Herb Brooks, who coached the New Jersey Devils to a franchise-record 40 victories, quit after less than a year with the club.

Brooks, 55, coach of the gold medal-winning 1980 U.S. Olympic team, was hired last June to replace the fired Tom MeVie. The Devils have had five coaches in the past six years.

Hawks set to name Wilkins

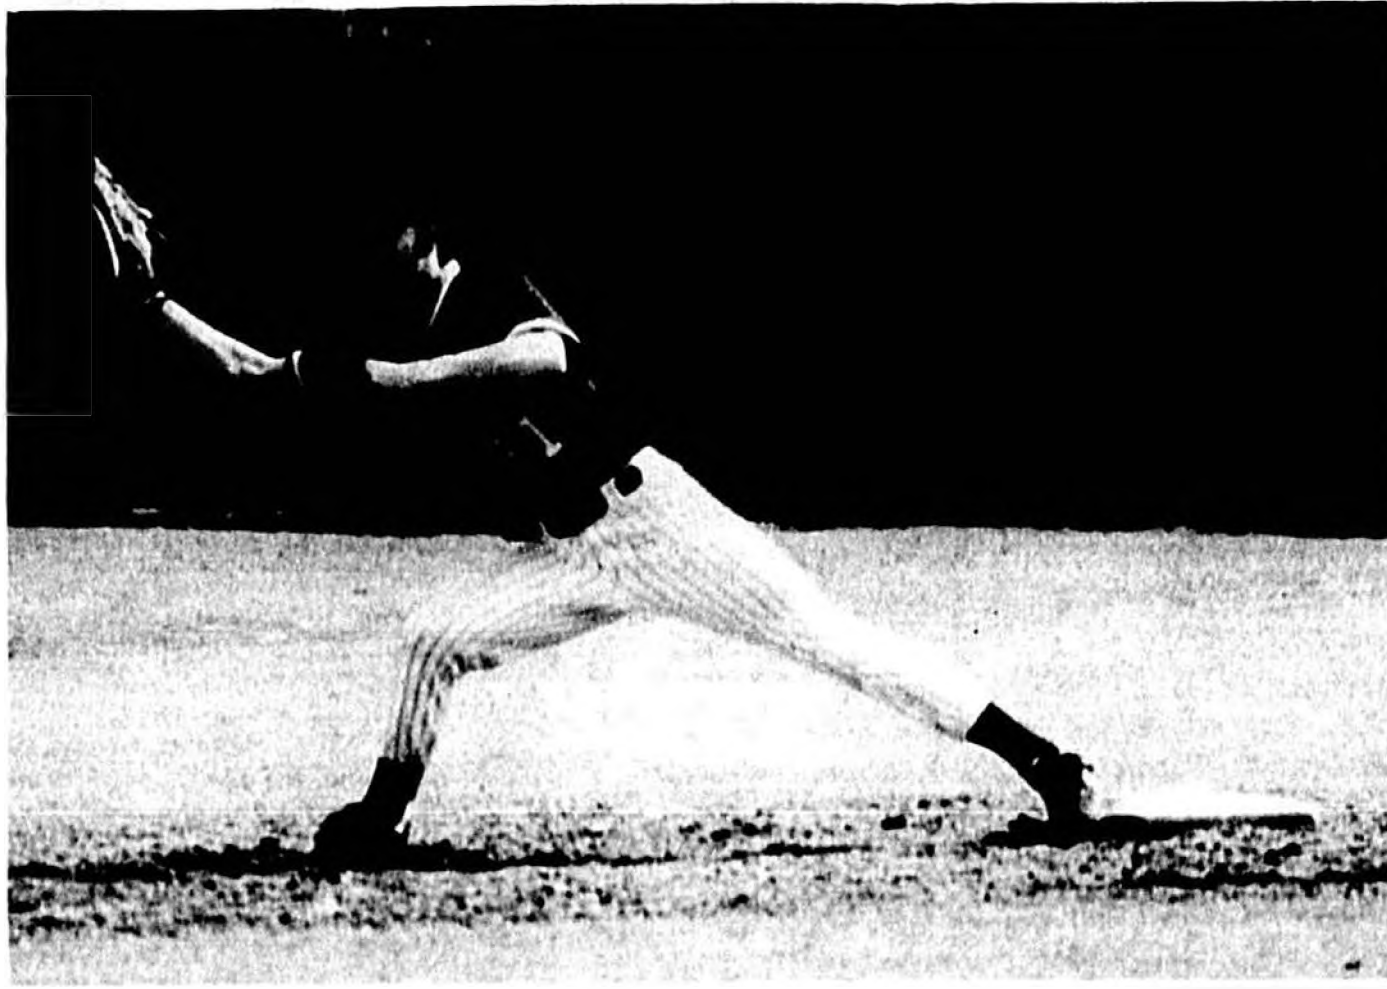

ATLANTA — Lenny Wilkins, who quit as coach of the Cleveland Cavaliers a week ago, will reportedly be named coach of the Atlanta Hawks today. The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported today that Wilkins will sign a multi-year contract and then be introduced at an afternoon news conference.

Tribe, Rams form strong legion team

SANFORD — Who says all good things must end?

It appears that graduation won't break up one of the most storied high school baseball teams in Seminole County history after all, at least not yet. According to Seminole High School coach Mike Powers, the heart of the team that won one state title and nearly won two will be together for one more season.

This summer, eight graduating seniors and two Seminole underclassmen that played for Seminole's 1992 Class 3A state champions and the 1993 team that won district and regional titles will form the core of the team that will represent Sanford American Legion Post No. 53 in American Legion "A" League play.

The remainder of the Seminole varsity underclassmen and most of the junior varsity squad will play American Legion "B" baseball.

"Preps" ready to show off ability

By DEAN SMITH

SANFORD — Are the "Preps" ready for the limelight?

The second addition of the Sanford Recreation Department Babe Ruth 13-year-old "Prep" All-Stars has been announced by league director Jim Schaefer.

The "Prep" team is made up entirely of 13 year olds who have just completed their first season of Babe Ruth baseball and will give the young players a chance to show if they are ready to step out of the shadow of their older teammates and become stars and leaders themselves.

The team will be managed by Tom Martin, who was the coach for the Elks Lodge #1241 Cubs this season. He will be aided by his own assistant this season, Steve Bussard and Roy Templeton, who was the head coach of the R.E. Templeton Co. Inc. Blue Jays.

The coaching staff will be counting heavily on a pair of pitchers who must have big post-seasons if the team is to be successful.

The player who will have to carry most of the weight for the team will be pitcher/infielder Terrance Perkins. The righthander was 4-0 on the mound this season for the Knights of Columbus Cardinals and was the winning hurler in the opening game of the City Championship Series as the Cardinals won their third consecutive city crown.

Perkins hurled a three hitter, striking out nine and walking six, and allowed no earned runs over five innings as KolC ripped the Korg USA Expos 14-4 in the city opener. He also drove in a run. In the final

Pitchers dominate Babe Ruth All-Stars

SANFORD — There is an old baseball axiom that says "you can never have enough pitching."

After holding tryouts for three days last week, Sanford Babe Ruth baseball league director Jim Schaefer has announced the 15 young men who will make up the 1993 14-15 year old All-Star team that will play in the state tournament at Tavares starting on June 24th. And it will be loaded with pitchers.

Seven of the 15 players named to the team were pitchers for their respective clubs this season, and all throw extremely well.

Courier, Sampras, Edberg win at French Open

By DAVID CRARY
 Associated Press Writer

PARIS — The three top seeds, Pete Sampras, Jim Courier and Stefan Edberg, powered their way into the French Open quarterfinals today, each overcoming difficult stretches in fourth-round victories.

Sampras, the No. 1 seed, defeated fellow American MaliVal Washington, the 16th seed, 6-3, 7-6 (8-6), 6-1. Washington battled to 6-6 in the tiebreak, but hit a lob and then a forehand long.

Sampras hit 10 aces in the match and never lost his serve.

Courier, the two-time defending champion, outslugged 15th-seeded Thomas Muster of Austria for a 6-3, 2-6, 6-4, 6-2 victory. He will meet Goran Prpic, who upset No. 9 seed Michael Stich, in the quarterfinals. Though seeded second to Sampras on the basis of computer rankings, Courier is a consensus favorite to win the title again.

Edberg, the No. 3 seed, needed treatment from a trainer for a thigh problem in the first set, struggled for a while, but recouped for an exciting 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (7-5) victory over Paul Haarhuis of the Netherlands. Both players hit brilliant shots toward the end, but Haarhuis hurt himself with a double-fault at 4-4 in the tiebreaker.

Edberg's quarterfinal opponent will be the 11th-seeded Andrei Medvedev of Ukraine, who slammed 14 aces in a 6-4, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 victory over Marc Goellner of Germany. It's the best Grand Slam showing yet for Medvedev, 18, one of the brightest young prospects in tennis.

Sampras will play 10th-seeded Sergi Bruguera of Spain, who ousted Fernando Meligeni of Brazil, 6-3, 6-1, 7-5 to remain the only man who has won every set in the tournament. This was the first pro tour event of the year for Meligeni, ranked 167th and usually forced to play satellite events.

In the other quarterfinal pairing, determined on Sunday, No. 12 Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands will play No. 13 Karel Novacek of the Czech Republic.

The Courier-Muster match on center court was a slugfest between two baseliners who pounded the ball with relentless force. While Courier dominated the first set with his big forehand, Muster got hot and dictated the pace in the second.

"I wasn't moving any more in the second set," Courier said. "I just kind of got flat-footed."

The pivotal moment of the match came in the seventh game of the third set, when Muster failed to convert four game points on his serve and Courier broke for a 4-3 lead. After crushing a forehand winner on break point, Courier dropped to one knee and pumped his right arm.

Courier then held serve at love, ending a string of five straight breaks.

"I picked my game up a level when I needed to," Courier said. "That was a big momentum switch, for sure... I kind of turned the corner there..."

Muster agreed that was the decisive stretch.

"I had many chances to go ahead," he said. "I played the important points too emotionally."

Courier, who now has 18 straight French Open victories, had played Muster five times previously, winning the last three, including a second-round match here a year ago in straight sets.

The Sanford-born Courier, who lives in Dade City, said beforehand that playing against Muster would be like looking in a mirror, because of their similar styles. Asked if he'd broken the mirror, Courier said, "I hope I don't get seven years bad luck."

All eight of the top-seeded women won their fourth-round matches.

In Tuesday's quarterfinals, it will be No. 1 Steffi Gravs vs. 6 Jennifer Capriati, No. 2 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario vs. No. 7 Jana Novotna, No. 3 Gabriela Sabatini vs. No. 5 Mary-Joe Fernandez, No. 4 Conchita Martinez vs. No. 8 Anke Huber.

How to cope with bladder polyp

MEDICINE
PETER GOTT, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: What is a bladder polyp and what can be done to correct it? If I choose not to have surgery, what can it lead to?

DEAR READER: Bladder polyps are non-cancerous growths arising from the lining of the bladder. Although most are benign, they can bleed, sometimes quite profusely. Without a biopsy, polyps may be hard to differentiate from cancer. Therefore, the prudent approach is to remove them (excisional biopsy). This can be done through the cystoscope, a lighted device that a urologist introduces through the urethra (the tube that drains the bladder). The operation is safe. You should consider it.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've suffered for 14 years with cluster headaches. I take two medications, specifically ergotamine inhaler and lithium carbonate capsules that work at times. What causes this condition?

DEAR READER: No one knows the cause of cluster headaches. These can be severe at times and occur in paroxysmal attacks, usually lasting about an hour. The headaches ordinarily involve one side of the face or head.

Because there are associated symptoms (eye swelling, tearing and runny nose), many experts believe that these headaches are due to a circulatory imbalance, as is migraine, leading to marked dilation of certain arteries.

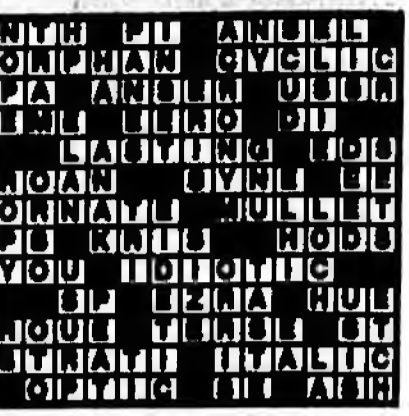

Therefore, drugs (such as ergotamine) that prevent dilation are often used with great success. In addition, oxygen and cortisone may reduce the frequency and severity of cluster headaches. In my view, patients with this condition should be under the care of neurologists. You mention that you have also been prescribed lithium, which is used to treat manic-depression (bipolar mood disorder), a psychiatric affliction marked by extreme mood swings. This condition is probably unrelated to your cluster headaches. Remember, however, to have periodic blood tests to monitor your lithium level because high levels can be toxic (kidney damage, weakness and many neurological symptoms).

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

There are some plants that seem to survive despite all our best efforts to kill them. Others, though, fold up almost immediately unless they are treated with tender, green-fingered care. Bridge partners are like that. Some will find the best plays despite any attempt to mislead them. Others, though, must be guided over the pitfalls of a deal. East's play on today's deal might be determined by whether West falls into the first category or the second.

South opened with a strong, artificial and forcing two clubs. North's two diamonds was a negative response. After that, the bidding was natural.

As soon as he saw two spades in the dummy, East knew that his partner was void. So, if West had led from king-fifth of diamonds, there were four de-

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
June 2, 1993

If you have a good game plan for the year ahead, your chances for success look much better than usual. Try to work with proven methods and procedures.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Co-workers may be vulnerable for being taken advantage of today. To your credit, this inclination might never enter your mind. You'll find other ways to further your aim. Gemini, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for Gemini's Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You're charismatic today and very stimulating to be around. Those who are on the slightly timid side could be especially drawn to you and seek the shelter of your wing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) That to which you set your mind can be eventually accomplished today with or without the help of others. The secret to your success is your powerful motivation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Fortunately, you possess a forgiving nature today, because if you didn't turn the other cheek, your immediate reaction might be to snap someone's head off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) It's nice to be generous today with people you like, but don't put too much strain on your pocketbook. Use your common sense when doling out dollars.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're not likely to let your strong, personal desires get out of hand today and do something at the expense of others. Fortunately, you'll be more selfless than selfish.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You're a clever strategist to begin with and today this ability could be accentuated, especially if you get involved in some type of competitive involvement.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If you incorporate elements of mystery in your presentations today you're not apt to have any trouble selling people your ideas or wares. They can't resist having their curiosity satisfied.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Even though you may go about accomplishing your purposes today in an unassuming manner, your innate drive will be strong and undeterred. Objectives have excellent chances of being achieved.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Your restless nature can be pacified today if you seek involvements that offer adventure and glamour. You need something new and different to refurbish your attitude and outlook.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Usually placing too much dependence on others isn't our wisest course of action. However, today you could luck out when the right people come through at just the right time for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It's okay to select allies today based upon your emotional preference if it involves something of a social nature, but when choosing business allies, logical considerations are essential. (C)1993, NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
