An Example From Reno

The depths to which civic pride and decency may sink once the bars are let down is well illustrated by the case of Nevada with its divorce-grinding just-beckoning Reno. Nevada was once a fairly decent state but a legislature, making a special appeal to divorce-seekers, passed a law requiring but three months' residence in the state necessary for divorce and other laws further liberalizing the granting of divorce.

That started things. Mis-mated dissatisfied couples flocked there from all over the country and a trade sprang up estimated as worth $4,000,000 a year to hotels, shops, and business houses. The possibilities of further increasing this business soon became apparent. The time limit was cut from three months to six weeks, Reno's trade doubled overnight. Divorcees are ground out at the rate of one hundred a week, twice as many as when the three months' residence limit was in effect.

Divorce-seekers have to be entertained during their six weeks enforced residence. For this purpose additional "liberalizing" laws have been enacted. While Nevada is famous for its hunting, its mountains and their wonderful scenic effects, and the possibilities for invigorating outdoor life, most of those who go to Reno prefer to spend their time in gambling houses, drinking clubs, or even wodge resorts. Gambling has been legalized and Nevada collects fifty dollars a month from each game operated in the state.

Time, news-magazine, relates other details of immoral conditions as they exist in the divorce center. "Amorous males", it reveals, "may go to the fenced-in 'crib', guarded by three policemen, where girls are to be found at all hours. From 300 young women the 'crib' owners collect (according to Investigator Henry F. Priggle of Outlook and Independent) $2.50 a day, pay Reno only a property tax."

Such conditions to some extent undoubtedly exist everywhere but they are not sanctioned by the state or condoned by public opinion. When the stamp of approval is given by the government and what should be the better class of citizens to such unrestricted license and debauchery as Reno shamelessly boasts, then a situation characterized by Dr. Clarence True Wilson as a "compound of Sodom, Gomorrah and perdition", is bound to exist. In reaching such depths, the first step naturally leads to the second.

Florida Beatitudes

In the Melbourne Times we find a set of "Florida Beatitudes" compiled by Mrs. Jack Pryor, of Haines City, who is famous throughout this state for her splendid work in connection with the State Federation of Women's Clubs' beautification program. Every home owner in Florida should place these beatitudes in some conspicuous place where they can be frequently referred to. Ten in number, they are as follows:

- 1. Blessed are they who plant the long-lived tree and shrub, for generations shall rise up and call them blessed.
2. Blessed are they who are owners of flower gardens, for in the heart of a flower may be seen its Creator.
3. Blessed are they who appreciate nature's gifts, for they shall be known as lovers of beauty.
4. Blessed are they who clean up the highways, byways and home grounds, for cleanliness is next to godliness.
5. Blessed are they who brighten and freshen their buildings and fences with paint, for improvement and the praise of many people shall be their crown.
6. Blessed are they who war on weeds and noisily billboards along the rural highways, for they shall be called protectors of roadside beauty and landscape scenery.
7. Blessed are they who stand against friend and relative in the protection of nature's gifts to our Nation, for they shall be recognized as true patriots of America.
8. Blessed are the towns with planning boards, for great beauty, prosperity and peace shall descend upon them.
9. Great shall be the reward of those who protect our forests from fire, for the bird shall continue to serve him and the fish and wild animal to furnish him food.
10. Whosoever conserveth our National resources, serveth himself and the generations following.

THE EUROPEAN FINANCIAL CRISIS - NATIONAL CITY BANK REPORT

The financial situation in Europe, rendered acute by the flight of capital from Germany and other Central European countries, has continued critical during the past month. The year's moratorium upon reparations and war debts proposed by President Hoover became operative July 6, subject to agreement upon certain minor details. Although this relieves Germany of the obligation to pay $400,000,000 abroad in the ensuing year, it does not solve all of her problems, the most pressing of which has been the withdrawal of foreign funds employed in the country and upon which German business is largely dependent.

The German situation was disturbed by the election of last September, which weakened the position of the conservative Bauging ministry and caused a loss of about one billion reichsmarks ($250,000,000) from the gold and foreign exchange holdings of the Reichsbank. Of this, however, $200,000,000 reichsmarks ($50,000,000) was recovered by the end of 1930 and the situation remained with little further change until May, when the difficulties of the largest bank in Austria unsettled financial affairs throughout Central Europe. The troubles of the Vienna bank were primarily due to flight of foreign funds, and the publicity given to that situation undoubtedly affected the situation in Germany. The plain language of the decree issued by the German government early in June, calling for the pressing necessity for further economic stabilization, and for additional cooperation with international agencies, will intensify the situation.

ness not only within Germany but everywhere. In the July issue of this Letter we described at some length the principal causes leading up to the present difficulties. These date back to the war and the conditions of peace imposed by the Treaty of Versailles.

A first of these original causes has to do with the partition of territory effected by the peace treaty. By this treaty Central Europe was broken up into a larger number of smaller states, with all the resultant obstacles to trade that proceed from the multiplication of national boundaries and tariffs. In this partition of territory Austria suffered the most; Vienna, its capital and a city which before the war had been the financial and commercial capital of Southeastern Europe, was deprived of most of its supporting country. Due to this handicap, Vienna has had an uncertain and difficult time ever since the war, and twice during the past five years the Credit Anstalt, the leading bank heretofore referred to, was forced to take over other important banks in that city in order to support the credit situation. That a situation so inherent should prove unable to stand the strain of a serious and prolonged depression is not surprising.

A second of these original causes has to do with the shortage of domestic short term capital in Central Europe, caused partly by the need for making reparations payments, but largely by the war and the depreciation of currencies that followed the war. In the absence of home supplies of capital, these countries, and particularly Germany, turned to foreign countries and borrowed large amounts, the total of long term borrowings of Germany alone from the United States, including direct investments, amounting to $3,300,000,000 in the period between the currency stabilization in 1924 and 1930. Large as these borrowings were they were still insufficient to supply German capital requirements, so that interest rates continued high and induced a heavy inflow of foreign short term credits, especially from England and the United States. By the end of 1930 it was estimated that the total amount of foreign short term credit employed in Germany was in the neighborhood of 11 billion reichsmarks. Thus, the German credit structure became largely dependent upon a volume of foreign credit subject to withdrawal upon comparatively short notice, and a like situation prevailed elsewhere in Central Europe.

Still a third factor out of the past which has tended to aggravate the present crisis has been the memory of other Central European currencies became practically worthless. This memory of past losses has made the people of these countries quick to distrust their own currencies and induced a flight of capital by domestic owners which has been a factor in the crisis along with the withdrawal of foreign credits.

The instinct of self-protection is strong in an individual. He does not definitely know what others are doing, but is surrounded by alarms. While he may have a patriotic inclination to cooperate with the public authorities in their policies, in the absence of organization he is likely to feel that the contribution which he can possibly make, while not to the same extent as the general public, is less than the necessity for the action which the government has now taken to control the sale of foreign exchange.

As will be readily seen, the danger of the situation is the difficulty of organizing the economic strength of Germany without the rapid withdrawal of liquid capital which is now being made available to her industrialists in the absence of adequate offerings of long-term investment capital in the last three years, the country has taken the only kind available, to wit, short-term offerings. Nevertheless, it was made possible, despite high interest rates, until the world-wide depression came. With hard times have come political agitation, in some countries, and both in Germany and elsewhere, economic and political movements, and if the latter are to have the united support of the people, will come through the political process. The political process will, therefore, be the determining factor in the future of the German economy. It is not possible to see any other way out of the present situation, and it is not possible to see any other way out of the present situation, and it is not possible to see any other way out of the present situation.

THE OLD REFRAIN

lapse of the credit and industrial structure of Germany. There could be no more conclusive demonstration than is afforded by the present situation of the fundamental interdependence of the modern world and the bounden duty of all in authority to work together for a solution that will make for lasting peace and cooperation.

Cotton Holding Sales By Farm Board Fought

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6. — (A.P.)—Senator Harris yesterday protested to President Hoover the proposed sale of stabilization cotton holdings by the farm board to Germany on long-term credit. Speaking also on behalf of Senator Smith, of South Carolina, the Georgia democrat said to dispose of the stabilization cotton in this manner would be taking away a market which rightfully belongs to the current crop held by farmers. Senator Harris recommended to the president as a substitute plan that if Germany wishes to purchase cotton in this country on long-term credit, the present crop be sold, with the government aiding in the necessary financing. He urged that the stabilization cotton be held entirely from the market, both here and abroad.
