The fear and sadness expressed in puppy's eyes told the story.

It is the story of two women, including the owner of the puppy, who were hospitalized this morning following a traffic accident in Sanford.

The puppy and a second dog in the ack seat were trapped inside a 1977 Datsun after it collided with a 1977 Chrysler station wagon at 10:15 a.m.

The accident occurred at 25th Street and Park Avenue. Police said the station wagon was traveling south on Park Avenue and the Datsun was turning east onto 25th Street when the cars collided.

The station wagon was slammed into a wooden utility pole. Injured was a passenger in the station wagon: Patricia Bodell, 52, of Providence R.I. The car was driven by her husband, Joseph J. Bodell

Rhodesia Planes: 'Routine' Bombing Of Guerrillas

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) - Rhodesian warplanes bombed a nationalist guerrilla camp near the Zambian capital of Lusaka today in the third such air strike since the guerrillas shot down a Rhodesian jetliner with a SAM-7 missile last week, a military communique said.

But Rhodesian military spokesmen called the latest air strike, like the two preceding it, a "routine mission," and emphasized that the major retaliation for the Feb. 12 attack on the jetliner was yet to come.

A brief military communique said Rhodesian planes bombed a camp belonging to the followers of Joshua Nkomo's wing of the Patriotic Front guerrilla group 19 miles west of Lusaka.

It made no mention of casualties and said only that "all aircraft returned safely to base" following the 2 p.m. (7 a.m. EST) raid.

Iran: A Bafflement

Because there was little the United States and the West could do to prevent the disintegration of fran, helplessness has given rise, as it must, to a kind of blind hope.

And this, in turn, has led to Western bafflement at almost every revolutionary twist and turn. Western observers find the arcane world of Peking and Moscow almost an open book compared with the enigma surrounding the Islamic theocracy now hunkering down in Tehran.

We know next to nothing about Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, whose accession to power came within days after his triumphant return from exile in Paris.

Indeed, we knew little about the regency headed by Shahpour Bakhtiar, which governed in the shah's name following his departure for a "vacation" early in January.

We now know it was doomed by the defection of the military, its chief support

When elite troops found it necessary to fire upon soldiers who had gone over to the street mobs. the Iranian generals decided against further bloodshed, which has already claimed an estimated 10,000 lives in the 15-month revolution.

The resignation of Mr. Bakhtiar and his replacement as prime minister by Mehdi Bazargan, Mr. Khomeini's handpicked choice, followed in swift sequence.

But like other revolutionaries in history, Mr. Khomeini's first discovery in office was his inability to control the revolutionary avalanche he had unleashed. The momentum that began with the shah's departure makes it increasingly difficult for each succeeding government to hold its ground.

Mobs of armed guerrillas have refused to surrender their arms, as ordered by the Khomeini-Bazargan government. Their leaders have been unimpressed by the new government threat to unleash remnants of the army against them or by Mr. Khomeini's Islamic edicts that their defiance made them guilty of The big new question mark now is whether Iran's Communist Party, the Tudeh, the most dangerous of the Ayatollah's erstwhile supporters, is striving for a large coalition role in the new government through its street muscle or is aiming for outright seizure of power.

The Khomeini government is appalled, according to reports, by the extent of Communist control over the Iranian oil workers and the oil

The obvious need is for Westerners to understand better the Islamic republic and its leaders who have come to power in Iran. We need to lessen our bafflement.

The very helplessness of the United States to influence the political convulsion in Iran and its unfolding consequences make imperative a better understanding of the forces and personalities at work to have a better idea of what to expect next. We can afford nothing less with a nation that once produced one-fifth of OPEC's production of 30 million barrels of oil a day.

The Clock By DENNIS FEOLA

It isn't easy to get folks excited about the rights of murderers, robbers and burglars.

And I'm far from certain we were successful in getting folks excited over a three-part series on the public defender's office in Seminole County. But I am certain things have improved at that office since the series appeared in Sept. 1978.

Civil libertarians did not cry out in great numbers as we cited specific examples of what could be termed slipshod representation by some assistant public defenders. But the people who mattered, whatever their motivation, did care.

As a result, the poor in Seminole County are receiving a slightly better shake from the system. Of all the people who mattered, none matters more than the public defender himself - David Porter. At the start of the series there were those in the local legal community who doubted Porter would ever see the error of his office.

Meanwhile, he has implemented every major recommendation made in the series. I can't blame him for defending his staff and I have to give him credit for recognizing the need for change and implementing those changes.

Porter could have been stubborn and

The local branch is finally fully and fairly staffed with six Seminole County attorneys. That's no small accomplishment when you consider Porter was adamant in refusing to add another attorney here when he was first contacted about the series.

There have been other changes at the public defender's office including new policies and renewed interest in working with state officials. When we last checked in with the public defender story in October, many of the changes noted here were still forthcoming.

I'm certain the folks at the public defender's office will be glad to hear that at least for now — this terms of continuous service, the 68-year-old Whitten was first elected in 1941 and re-elected 19 consecutive times. He seldom has faced opposition in either primary or general elections, and few challengers have ever attracted even 15 percent of the vote.

Whitten can be courtly when the occasion calls for reserved demeanor. He can be folksy and charming with constituents. And he can be autocratic, abusive and belligerent when dealing with national issues of considerable import. The venue for Whitten's misuse of authority has been the Appropriations Committee's agriculture subcommittee, which he chaired from 1949 until he moved up to head the full charged that Congress had "overreacted" to a few isolated instances of corruption. He repeatedly interrupted and badgered the witnesses, harangued them with a lengthy monologue about unrelated farm policies, then abruptly adjourned the subcommittee hearing. In the early 1970s. Whitten abused his power as subcommittee chairman to frustrate the congressionally mandated policies and emasculate the programs of the Federal Trade Commission, Consumer Product Safety Commission, Food and Drug Administration, Environmental Protection Agency and Council on Environmental Quality. When angry fellow Democrats threatened in 1975 to strip Whitten of the subcommittee chairmanship, he headed off the revolt only by hastily relinguishing authority over the sumer and environment agencies. Whitten is equally persistent—if not belligerent-when promoting programs he favors, most notably the mindless support of carcinogenic pesticides. A federal ban on the use of two cancer-causing compounds, aldrin and

JACKSONVILLE (UPI)-U. S. District Judge W. Terrell Hodges ruled Thursday that evidence of wire fraud (use of the telephone) against a former Florida Power Corp. executive and four Houston, Texas, oilmen was insufficient and directed their acquittals on five of 12 counts.

But Hodges refused to acqui them of the other charges, stemming from an alleged "daisy chain" conspiracy to defraud FPC of millions of dollars by artificially inflating fuel oil prices during the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo.

The judge also denied renewed severance and dismissal motions and told the defendants to be ready to start their side of the case on Monday. Defense attorneys estimated they could complete their testimony in one to three

The defendants are former FPC senior vice president Richard Raymond; Walter Ballard, a former executive of Signal Oil and Gas Co.; John L. Burns, formerly of Charter International Oil Corp.; James Clark, president of Larcon Petroleum Corp., and Ronald Pruitt, an attorney and part owner of Larcon.

Except for Raymond, all the defendants are from Houston. The government charges that, through a series of paper transactions, all five conspired to overcharge the Florida utility in the sale of No. 2 grade

Matter Of Communications

NEW YORK (UPI) — This is a free country, far less restrictive than it ever has been in all its 203 years, and the easiest way you can prove that is by listening to the colossal liberties some people take with the statements they make.

Nowhere is there any better example of free speech than in sports. Even when it wasn't considered as fashionable as it is day, athletes generally said whatever they felt like. They just weren't quoted as much.

derson and Dock Ellis, to name only a few, love to talk and tell everyone what they think. One of the best ways they have of doing that is by talking to reporters. Then you have those at the other extreme. Fellows like Larry Bird, Indiana State's spectacular All-America, Thurman Munson of the Yankees and George Hendrick of the Cardinals. They are the clams of the sports world, the ones who don't wish to speak to

If people like Bird, Munson or Hendrick do not wish to talk to reporters, that's certainly their prerogative. I've spoken with Munson and Hendrick and found them communicative when they wish to be. On other occasions, they made it plain they had no intention of speaking with anyone.

That's their privilege, their right, but I can assure them they are wrong in their basic attitude. They're certainly not helping themselves. They're really not helping anyone. George Hendrick, the Cardinals' outfielder, is perceptive enough to realize what he's doing isn't right and to his credit, at

The other day in St. Louis, Hendrick was asked whether he had been any influence on Garry Templeton, the Cardinals' 22-yearold shortstop who decided that he, too, didn't care to talk to reporters last year. Hendrick said he hadn't influenced Tem-

"I told him he had everything to lose and nothing to gain," said the Cardinals' outfielder. Explaining why he chose not to talk to writers, Hendrick added: "I don't know who I can trust and who I can't trust and I don't want to spend the time and energy to distinguish between the

Why, I can't help wondering, doesn't George Hendrick simply try trusting everyone? That's part of the Golden Rule. Burned once by some writer it seems, Hendrick now tars everyone with the same brush. He'd be the first to point out the injustice of it all if reporters employed the same reasoning he does to treat him the way he does them. I wonder if he has ever given any thought to the fact that writers are directly responsible for what have to be the most satisfying experiences in any ballplayer's life. That generally comes when a player is voted MVP and into the Hall of Farne. And who are the ones who do the voting? George Hendrick should think about that some time. John Claiborne, the Cardinals' new general manager, disappointed me, too, when he said "I'm not going to tell a player to talk to the press or not to talk to the press. His relationship with you (the press) is his business.'

John Claiborne is dead wrong there. His job is to sell the Cardinals to the community as well as baseball in general to the fans. One of the ways he's obliged to do that is by selling George Hendrick the idea publicity generates interest in the team, interest in turn generates attendance and attendance is what helps pay Hendrick's and Claiborne's salaries. Several things come to my mind anytime I see athletes refusing basketball, where Seminole

I can't help but think how vital they're always saying it is to presently making plans for key. Gould, normally a highcommunicate and here they are doing exactly the opposite of some late-season surprises in scoring forward, was held to six what they say. I also think about how some of these strong atlent the Division 2 tournament in types go off by themselves in a corner, then return years later, maybe for some Old Timers' function, and look around longingly for someone to talk to. Lefty Grove was only one of many I saw do

Most of all, I remember the late Frank Graham's classic line in gave Seminole a chance to slip connection with Bob Meusel, who seldom ever gave ewspapermen the time of day during most of his career with the Yankees. Near the end, he mellowed somewhat, and Graham, noticing the change in him, wrote : "Now that it's nearly time to say goodbye, Bob Meusel finally is learning how to say hello."

> She has worked in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Sacramento, performing in nightclub productions, and has appeared in dinner theater presentations on Long Island before settling in New York.

While making the rounds of auditions, Nikki was a manufacturer's representative for several cosmetics firms and studied acting with Zara Shakow. "Ryan's Hope" is her first television experience.

Nikki approaches her outside interests with the same high energy level she injects into her acting. She dearly loves horseback riding and writing poetry.

She has also begun taking singing lessons with opera singer Joyce McLaine, whom she met at the Conservatory of Music in Toronto, the same school at which her father studied.

Yet she dons an army uniform and pits herself against the West Point "door-die" obstacle course in her latest TV movie. "Women at West Point," which airs Tuesday, Feb. 27, on CBS.

Linda stars as cadet Jennifer Scott, one of the first women admitted to the traditional army academy overlooking the Hudson River in upstate New York.

Her co-star and romantic interest is Andrew Stevens, who plays upperclassman Doug Davidson.

Since the movie was filmed entirely at West Point, Linda was able to research her role by talking to West Point juniors who were the first women to break the all-male barrier.

One girl - a young Elizabeth Taylor type — felt she hadn't accomplished anything in high school. West Point offered her a challenge, a chance to build herself into someone.

It's a new way for Seminole County — the Votamatic way using computer cards and a stylus to punch out the choices. But a number of counties in Georgia are into the second decade of voting on computer cards.

Two supervisors of elections in Georgia, say the system is great and they wouldn't have voting any other way. Two other elections supervisor's office staff in Florida, who were polled feel the same way, even after one of them had trouble with the punch cards in a recent ultra-modern method. Currently, Jeff Etchberger, director of the Office of Management, Analysis and Evaluation (OMAE) at the Seminole County Courthouse, and his staff are gathering information on the concept to submit to county commissioners for their consideration.

One of the reasons Seminole County is looking at the new method of voting is because of the snafu in conventional lever-type machines in the first primary election last September.

Malfunctions resulted in number of voting machines at the polls when rubber bumpers in the locks on the machines melted, making it impossible to open them. Complaints were also heard of slipped ballots.

Special To The Horald

Within throu weeks an Altamonte Springs man bays he'll leave for the Morshall Islands where he feels confident he'll selve the

G-year-old Amelia Earhert mystery.

The man, Vincent Loomis, 41, will be attempting to find the wreckage of the plane which 42 years ago was flown by Amelia terhert and her navigator Fred Noonan. Loomis says he believes Leanis, is a retired U.S.A.F. officer who has researched the

On May 26, 1887, Earthurt and Niconan, departed from Outdand, Calif. in a portland demant to circle the world at the equator. On July 26, 1807, the couple planned the second-to-the-last leg of their journey from Las. New Guines, to Howland Island, a trip of over more than 2.556 miles. The flight was estimated to take 18 hours. At least 26 Lockheed Electra was made — at 8:45 a.m.

"There have been extensive searches and explorations over the years, but the problem is that they have been conducted in the wrong location," Learnis claims. "Earliest and Necesan had made ions on what to do in case they missed Howland Island. They would have put this plan into effect in time (fuel being considered; to locate lendfall. The only good imadall was to the northwest — Marshall Islands."

The primitive islands, covering an area of approximately 66 agency miles, are the areas of exploration for Leomis.

"In 1910, as an operations officer during the first H-bombs test in the Marshalls, I believe I located the famed flyer's plane. I have eyewitness accounts by substantial numbers of citizens of the island to corresponde that a white American woman flyer and her male companies did indeed cresh-land in the Marshalls in 1917," Leonis stated.
